COLLEGE

THINGS to remember about registration week in the new building: The wide open mouths of the returning students as they compare Balboa Park to Powell Street; The worried looks on the faces of the new students as they slave over their entrance exams; The broad grins from the faculty as they look around their new home.

As a matter of record it is also to be noted that approximately 98 per cent of the persons entering the college have stopped to stare with wondering and curious eyes at the ultra modern broadcasting studio on the first floor.

This isn't an attempt at criticism. As a matter of fact we're so happy about the whole thing, someone could probably touch us for a loan and get away with it.

WE noticed several of the old standbys of the college wandering around last week. Perhaps someone remembers Treacy Slattery and Dick Simpers? (They had a longing look in their eyes as they gazed at the new plant)

Hal (Hossface) Hoffman was also striding about.

LAST semester The Guardsman had two associate editors, Dan Rosenblat, and Lou Goldstone. In a recent conversation Daniel (as he prefers to be called) insisted that he be mentioned in the first issue of the paper for old times sake, therefore:

Obituary—Hired, Spring 1938, Retired Spring 1940 — Daniel Garson Rosenblat, trusted reporter, ass't managing editor, associate editor, and general headache. (besides that, he's a cute little runt).

In case anyone took us serious, Rosenblat is still alive and kicking (especially the latter).

THE recent bill passed by Congress authorizing the President to call out the national guard for a year's active service is going to make a dent in the population of the college.

No doubt the bull sessions will miss many of the boys who will soon be polishing buttons at Camp Ord. We can't imagine what this place will be like without the corny hats and unique pipes of Dusty Rhodes.

Discontinuance of the military science course will be quite a loss to some of the military minded members of the college but enrollment in the Coast Artillery is a part of the course and you can't very well enlist in an organization that is no longer here (See story, page four)

POLITICS

NOT that it matters particularly, but how come Willkie buttons are flooding the city and Roosevelt buttons are in hiding somewhere? It isn't like the Democrats unless they have an ace up their sleeves or a lack of funds.

THE laugh of each political campaign is the oh so positive statement issued by each side that "There will be no mudslinging during this campaign."

No sooner is this communique issued than both sides begin verbally blasting their opponents. Who do they think they are fooling? The American public after all these years is pretty well accustomed to mudslinging, so what's the point in going to such pains to make promises everyone knows will not be kept?

CITY

SIGN outside the Embassy theater on Market Street: "We Do Not Show War News. Read Your Paper Or Listen To The Radio For War Developments. We Believe A Theater Is A Place For Relaxation And Enjoyment And Has No Place For The Grimness And Horrors Of Battle."

They've got something there. We wish a few more places of amusement would adopt the same program.

NATIONAL

AS a somewhat lighter vein in the current news flooding the nation comes the information that Pan American Airways broke another world record when the strato-clipper Rainbow completed a round trip flight from Miami, Florida to the Panama Canal in 12 hours and 12 minutes.

Which illustrates again that the United States is the only nation left where we are still constructing for peace instead of for war. Let's hope we stay that way.

Budget Gets Imprimatur From Council

Approval was stamped on a $13,283.66 budget for the 1940 fall semester by the Executive Council last week, Alden Thorogood, finance committee chairman, revealed.

This final budget figure, slightly below last semester's amount, was arrived at after considerable paring of individual requests that totaled almost twenty thousand dollars.

The greatest single allotment was awarded to the football squad with The Guardsman second.

No More Letters of Credit

To further cut expenses this semester, a ruling was made by the finance committee that letters of credit to the book store, backed by the college, would no longer be issued, and the position of an external publicity agent for the college, formerly held by Jack Schmale, was dissolved.

Commenting on the last step, Thorogood said: "We felt that the publicity agent post laid undue financial stress on the college. We further feel that any necessary publicity work can be quite capably handled through The Guardsman."

May Obtain Banner

Though definite funds are not yet available, efforts will be made by the Executive Council to obtain a college banner and a public address system, according to Lyle Shultz, Associated Students' president. Little future was seen, however, for the campus carnival, proposed last semester.

One reason for the lack of money this semester, Thorogood explained, was the absence of a sizeable surplus fund from last. The semester previous to that, he added, a $4,000 surplus awaited the finance committee.

Orientation Week

Full Program Planned For New, Old Students

To accustom new students to college traditions and help them in getting acquainted with other students, Orientation Week activities will begin on September 10 and conclude on September 13, Lyle Schultz, Associated Student's president, announced today.

Opening the affairs for the week will be the semi-annual Collegiate Mixer tea dance sponsored by the Associated Men Students and the Associated Women Students, Shultz revealed. The dance is to be informal and will be held in the Women's Gymnasium, according to present plans, at about 3:30 o'clock.

The traditional AMS men's smoker and AWS tea honoring new students are scheduled for September 12 in the cafeteria, Shultz continued. The tea will take place at 3:30 in the afternoon and the smoker at 8 o'clock in the evening.

"We are planning on having a rally to explain college traditions to new students," Shultz declared. "This rally will take place at 2:30 on September 13, and it will be followed by elections of officers of the various classes in rooms to be announced later."

Completing the activities for the week will be the semi-annual Low Freshman dance in the Women's Gymnasium at 9 o'clock in the evening, Shultz said. Plans for the affair are being made by Jean Arnold, student vice-president, who has announced that admission is to be by one student body card per couple.

"We hope that this week will be as successful as previous Orientation Weeks," Shultz said, "and we should like to urge all students to take part in the activities offered them."

WSS Continues Exchange Of Books In Room 103

To help old students disposing of their books and new students in purchasing books, the Women's Service Society will conduct its Book Exchange in room 103 for the next two weeks, Mildred Bartosiewski, WSS president, announced today.

"I should like to request those who have texts to sell to bring them in immediately, for the demand for books is at its height now," Miss Bartosiewski declared.

Women will be in room 103 from 8 o'clock to 4 o'clock daily, she said, adding that any students who want to buy books are free to come in and look over the selection at any time.

"I should like to emphasize that the WSS does not operate the exchange at any profit," she continued. "Thus the students selling and buying are not hampered by a middle-man."

Employment Applications Taken In Dean's Office

"Although part time jobs outside the college other than NYA work are rare and hard to find, students who need such work and are interested should file applications in my office, room 123, as soon as possible," Dean Edwin C. Browne last week announced.

"There are some students who find that NYA work is not enough to keep them in college and must turn to other means. Although I can promise nothing, my office is continually trying to place students," Browne said.

The Truth Shall Make You Free

President Cloud Stresses Advantages of America

By A. J. Cloud, President

Greetings to newer and older students alike as we enter our permanent buildings, on one of which appears the inscription:

The Truth Shall Make You Free!

These words are taken from a passage in Holy Writ, which reads in full: "You shall know the truth; and the truth shall make you free."

It is thought that this inscription is expressive of the intent and purpose lying behind the creation and support of an institution such as ours which is public in character and responsive to the ideals and practices of a democratic order of society. At a time when history is being made on an unprecedented scale, it is well to remember constantly, continuously, and persistently the fact that American opportunities, as evidenced in education, are not a birthright to be accepted as a mere matter of course. Those opportunities have been achieved at the cost of blood and treasure, travail and sacrifice. They are not a gift to be thrown aside lightly. Sad indeed is the situation confronting youth of many other lands today — for in America, but in America alone, may youth yet assemble with a full adherence to the concept that "The Truth Shall Make You Free." If the principles of freedom are safe in your keeping as I believe they are, the national structure will remain solid.

Franklin D. Roosevelt:

"Continuance of Education More Important Than Enlistment"

In a message to the heads of all colleges and universities in the country, President Franklin D. Roosevelt last week requested that students should remain in college and get the best possible education instead of enlisting in the armed forces of the nation or leaving school to work in shipyards.

In the letter received by President A. J. Cloud, President Roosevelt said:

"Reports have reached me that some young people who had planned to enter college this fall, as well as a number of those who attended college last year, are intending to interrupt their education at this time because they feel it is more patriotic to work in a shipyard, or to enlist in the army or navy, than it is to attend college. Such a decision would be unfortunate."

"We must have well educated and intelligent citizens who have sound judgement in dealing with the difficult problems of today. We must also have scientists, engineers, economists, and other people with specialized knowledge, to plan and build for national defense as well as for social and economic progress. Young people should be advised that it is their patriotic duty to continue the normal course of their education, unless they are called, so that they will be well prepared for greatest usefulness to their country. They will be promptly notified if they are needed for other patriotic services."

Class Election Date Set; "Choose By Merit!" Plea

Nomination and election of class officers will take place on Friday, September 6, Mary Frances Malone, chairman of the election committee, announced today.
Guardsman.

"We urge students to consider carefully the merits of those students whom they wish to nominate, since Friday's elections will be of great importance in moulding school policy," Miss Malone said.

Both nominations and elections will be conducted at one meeting so that the students will know for whom they are voting, she explained, adding that this system has been recommended by the student officers.

The rest of the committee as appointed by Lyle Schultz, Associated Students' president, includes Jean Arnold, Alden Thorogood, Barbara Brown, Edith Callaghan, Bob Ogg, George Meyers, Virginia Hubbert, and three members whose appointmenst will be announced in Friday's Guardsman.

NYA Sign-ups Taken In 148 By Redford This Week

All students desirous of securing National Youth Administration employment while in college are requested to apply to Edward H. Redford, in room 148 any time this week.

"There are a few jobs open for students because of the vacancies created when others on NYA graduate. We have only a limited supply of funds however, so the sooner applications are made out, the better the chance of getting a job," Redford said.

"Associated Student Cards Invaluable"—Schultz

Possession of an Associated Student card is an invaluable advantage was the opinion expressed by President Lyle Schultz this week.

"Each semester we have from six to eight dances. To each of these, card holders are admitted free. That is, one Associated Student card admits a couple," Schultz said.

"There is a very active Junior College Athletic Conference schedule of basketball, football, tennis, track, and baseball. Cards entitle one to free admission.

Guardsman To Card Holders Only

"The Guardsman, published twice weekly, is rated as one of the best college papers in the nation and is given only to those students who are members of the Association.

"Associated Women Students and Associated Men Students activities are gratis to those possessing cards," Schultz announced.

Beware Of Lending Cards

Schultz cautioned students against lending their cards to outsiders. "When you buy your card, you sign an agreement to not lend it to anyone and this agreement must be kept if we are to have our activities free from outsiders. There is no objection to outsiders, but when they attend our functions, they make it impossible for students of the college to have a good time because the floors and rooms are too crowded. The college has a very active and efficient judicial committee that maintains an identification committee at the door of all college affairs. Students who lend cards to other persons will have their cards collected at the door and confiscated."

New Record

3000 Students Register; No More Allowed Entrance

Setting an all time high, college enrollment records this week reached a total of 3000 students, Mary Jane Learnard, assistant registrar announced.

The 300 mark is the limit which the Board of Education recently set for the college. According to Miss Learnard, the limit was placed upon the college not to keep anyone from attending the institution but because there is only room for 3000 students and no more.

Approximately 4200 students, both new and old made out entrance applications at the end of last semester and during the summer registration. "This does not mean, however, that 1200 students will not be able to enter the college, for a great percentage of those who signified their intentions of registering, have not showed up to register," Miss Learnard said.

The possibility that the Board of Education will lift the 3000 limit imposed upon the college is exceedingly small, since even if the limit were raised, there would be no accomodations available for the increase in enrollment.

The present registration figures mark a new high in the enrollment figures of the college. Last semester, the number of students enrolled totaled approximately 2600.

When the college was first organized in 1935, the registration figure was well below the 2000mark.

Four Man Cabinet Named By Shultz To Study Student Welfare Problems

Associated Student President Lyle Shultz today announced the formation of a presidential cabinet to discuss problems of student welfare throughout the semester.

This marks the first time in the history of the college that such a cabinet has been formed. The idea came from last semester's student president Al Williams and was incorporated into the by-laws of the Associated Student Constitution at the end of the semester.

The cabinet members are Alden Thorogood, chairman of the finance committee; Len Gross, Guardsman editor; George Meyers, Block SF member; and Hugh Waite, ex-college yell leader.

In commenting upon the newly formed board, Shultz said; "I feel that this cabinet can be of great help to the administration, especially this semester when we must find order out of chaos. The men selected to serve as cabinet members have shown themselves to be outstanding in student affairs and able to think clearly on the issues that are even now confronting us."

Student Cards Necessary For Copies Of Guardsman

Beginning with the Friday issue, copies of The Guardsman will be given only to those students holding Associated Student cards, Len Gross, Guardsman editor, announced today.

"Students who desire a copy of the paper must have their card with them on Tuesday and Friday, the days of publication," Gross said.

The measure was adopted by the college publication upon advisement by the Executive Council and follows similar rules set up by other colleges and universities throughout the country.

"In the past, the paper has been free to everyone. We feel, however, that it is not fair to the students who buy cards to have others get the paper at no cost. If a student is really interested in the welfare of the college he will have a student card," Gross concluded.

Fountain Lunch Service On As Cafeteria Opens Today

Opening today, the college cafeteria will feature a fountain service from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m., and a luncheon served in three periods, 11 a.m., 12 M. and 1 a.m., Hilda Watson of the Hotel and Restaurant division announced.

The fountain service will include coffee, cake, and the regular service found at any fountain.

Lunch will be served in three periods so as to avoid any confusion or overcrowding. The plate lunch will cost 25 cents and will consist of a salad, entrée, dessert and drink.

Gross Named Editor Again

Len Gross, Guardsman editor last semester, has been reappointed to serve in the editorial post again this semester, Joan Nourse, editorial adviser of the publication announced last week.

Gross, has worked on the paper since entering the college and was selected to guide the publication again on the basis of his past record.

This is the second time in the history of The Guardsman that an editor has been selected to serve for an entire year. William Rawson, editor in 1936 was also selected to continue at his post.

Gross, known also as the writer of the column "While Thinking" will continue with his column.

Appointed to assist Gross in editing The Guardsman are Borrie Hyman, former News Editor, elevated to Managing Editor, and Mary Frances Malone, who will assume the duties of News Editor.

Edmund Wunsch will continue in the capacity of Advertising Manager, a post he has held for the past three semesters.

A feature editor, sports editor, and business manager will be appointed within the next few weeks, Gross announced.

Trood, Hoffman Named On First Student Plaque

Dorothy Trood and Harold Hoffman were honored at the Commencement exercises held last June by being named as the most outstanding students of the past year.

They are the first students to have their names inscribed on the new twenty year "Outstanding Students" plaque, known as the President's Award.

Prominent Student Leader

Miss Trood has taken a prominent part in student activities since coming to the college. She has held office as president of the AWS, and vice-president of the Associated Students, and has served on various other committees.

Hoffman has held the office of president of the CAB twice, being re-elected to serve another semester, has acted as chairman of the internal publicity committee and has also served on various other committees.

The scholastic ability of the two students is rated as above average.

Students To Leave College

Both students when questioned expressed their appreciation at having received the award and said they were sorry they were not returning to the college.

The recipients of the President's Award are decided by a committee composed of faculty members who consider scholarship, college activities, service, and ability of the students under consideration.

The two students selected, one man and one woman are announced at graduation and their names inscribed on the plaque.

"Capacity Expected In New Music Course"—Badger

To accommodate students who feel that A Cappella Choir work is too advanced for them, Flossita Badger, music instructor, announced a new vocal course numbered as Music 11.

Miss Badger said the amount of students desiring such a course made it practically requisite this semester.

The course will be offered at 12 o'clock on Monday and Wednesday.

Qualified students who would be interested in solo or accompanying piano work were asked to see Miss Badger.

Halls, Rooms of New Campus Must Be Kept Clean, Neat

CUSTOM says that at the beginning of each college semester, the student editor writes an editorial welcoming the new and old students back to the college.

In this instance the editorial should perhaps be one of joy and thankfulness rather than welcome, alhough that of course is included.

It is impossible for anyone who has not been with the college when it was located at 22 locations throughout the city, to fully realize the feeling that at long last we're home. The appreciation and thankfulness that fills the hearts of the old students is something that cannot be adequately described.

The dream or perhaps it should be called nightmare of traveling all over San Francisco for an education is now over. The college has emerged from the embryonic stage and is about to step forth as an adolescent, with tremendous potentialities.

It is the important task of every member of the college to aid in the real construction of the college. The next year or two will be the important ones in the career of the college for it has yet to emerge from an inconspicuous object in the minds of San Francisco to the outstanding educational unit of the public schools system.

Balboa Park is exceptional as far as being the most modern and streamlined educational plant on the coast is concerned. One thing that should be remembered above all others is that we have a beautiful building that should be kept as we now find it.

It seems a habit of adolescent students with the minds of two year olds to attempt to ruin and deface anything new. It would be criminal if such were to happen to any of the halls or rooms of the building.

There are some 3000 young men and women in this college and perhaps because we are young men and women, there is no necessity to mention this matter of keeping the building neat and clean. Let us hope so. Perhaps if we remember that this is our home, and a swell one at that, there will be less likelihood of anyone forgetting his manners.

Failure To Buy Associated Student Card Only Hurts Individual And College

IT IS unfortunate that someone is forced at the beginning of every semester to remind the men and women of the college that they are a part of this institution and as such should willingly subscribe to a policy of general cooperation.

Platitudinous as it is to speak of the whole dependent upon its components for support, such is the case in the college.

One of the most tangible ways to express your willingness to cooperate in this business is to purchase an Associated Students' card and really become a member of the college, not just a bystander.

A member of the Associated Students enjoys many privileges. He is admitted to college games and social events, he gains the right to vote and hold office, he receives a copy of The Guardsman twice weekly, and so on down the line.

But perhaps more than the just-mentioned advantages, however, is the feeling of community among the individuals, of being a part of the college, that such membership brings.

Those who are not in the swing of things are hurting not only themselves but the whole of the college. For it is with the money derived from the sale of Associated Students' cards that the college budget is largely financed. Money for the football team, publications, student organizations, and numerous other activities is realized, for the most part, through the Associated Students' dues paid each semester.

Four dollars a semester seems little enough to pay considering the multi-fold advantages gained from the investment.

Guardsman Scores Another First; Will Publish Four Page Paper Twice A Week

LAST semester, The Guardsman editorial staff much to the surprise of the general student body announced that for the first time since the beginning of the college, the paper would be issued twice weekly.

Because of cramped conditions, lack of typewriters, and the general disorganization of the college at that time, a single sheet was published on Tuesdays and the usual double sheet published on Fridays.

This semester by careful economizing and budgeting, The Guardsman will publish two, four page papers a week. The publication dates will remain the same.

A year ago, The Guardsman was honored in a nation wide survey conducted by Associated Collegiate Press, college press association by receiving the All-American award. This award is reserved exclusively for superior publications.

The Guardsman was one of six throughout the United States in the junior college weekly class that received this rating.

At the present we are awaiting word from ACP headquarters concerning our rating for last semester's publication.

The editorial policy of The Guardsman has always been to present all the news within the college as often as possible. It is the opinion of the editorial staff that it has for the most part accomplished this end. The Guardsman through the years has maintained a high standard in collegiate journalism. We shall continue to maintain that standard.

Something Needs To Be Done About Adequate Parking Facilities At College

READILY apparent in this first week of the college's opening is the inadequacy of parking facilities for students and faculty. Even the first days of the registration period, when attendance was divided, found Phelan Avenue jammed with cars.

As the situation stands now, either Phelan Avenue must be widened to permit diagonal parking or campus grounds must be utilized for parking. Both of these plans were considered last semester by college officials. Whether or not action has been taken or contemplated by the proper persons, will be ascertained by The Guardsman as soon as possible.

We cannot, of course, expect immediate resolution of the parking problem; the college has just started, and in this case, as in other matters, we must not expect a complete college unit nor an absolutely smooth-flowing organization, though assiduous endeavor by faculty members has achieved remarkable order out of the chaos that is usually characteristic of the registration period.

But even though conscientious efforts are made to alleviate the crowded condition, until some definite measures are adopted, Phelan Avenue will continue to hold serried cars that create a thoroughfare inadequate for extensive two-way traffic.

Quotable Quotes

THE youth of America comes to the doors of our colleges with hope and vision. Their spirit is the spirit of adventure. Their urge is the urge of growth. Their principle qualification for admission is curiosity. Their most valued recommendation is the desire for better things. Their finest equipment is courage and determination to succeed in a world of opportunity. They are endowed with the talents of normal human beings and are burdened with the frailities common to all men. This is the material with which the college works and no finer task may be found in all time than to create from this material a product that can be recognized as a gentleman and a scholar.—Rutgers University's Dr. Fraser Metzger aptly describes the "raw material" of higher education.

I hope you never belong to youth with a capital 'Y'. You ought not to be marked off as a special pressure group because of your age, just as women shouldn't be marked off because of their sex. You are not a special class, but citizens.—Mrs. Robert Taft, wife of the G.O.P. presidential hopeful, told University of Minnesota collegians the place they ought to assume in national affairs.

Some years ago sororities were criticized for being undemocratic. They were not governed and disciplined as they are now. They now all work together to improve the situation on all campuses.—Helen Froelich of National Park College commends the present trend of Greek group cooperation.

So long as the state pays the expense of junior college education at the state university or the state teachers college, there is every reason why it should also participate in the expense of local public junior colleges which operate on the same level.—Dr. George F. Zook, president of the American Council on Education, thumps for state support of junior colleges.

The Spectator . .

ROLLING into port at the heig of the becalmed movie season, The Sea Hawk is timely if only that it is among the best of a none too good crop of pictures.

A tale of pirates bold in days of old, The Sea Hawk combines all the lavish thrills and costly sets which go toward making everyone realize that Hollywood is trying its darndest to court the favor of the fickle John Q.

Francis Thorpe, the cinematic counterpart of Sir Francis Drake, was as nefarious a buccaneer as ever sailed the seven seas for "perfidious Albion." Blighty's good Queen Elizabeth would wink at her sea dogs as long as they would capture the gold-laden Spanish merchantmen. The monetary gains of the piracy would fill the coffers of England's rapidly depleting treasury. Still did the mighty Armada of her former brother-in-law, Phillip II of Spain, grow bigger daily. Then came the day when the prowler of the Escurial saw fit to challenge the might of England.

July 27, 1588, one of the great battles of all time—off the rocky coast of Dover the mighty fleets met. Bad weather and a plucky English command drove the Spanish from John Bull's shores. Forever safe from the ravages of a foreign power was the Virgin Queen's domain . . . Britannia ruled the waves.

AS the primary sea-dog, Errol Flynn is capital in the swashbuckling Francis Thorpe, who rose from galley slave to master of England's destiny. These costume roles of England seem to fit Flynn far more than does the sweaty mufti of an officer in the American Army.

In her third role, Brenda Marshall shows evidence of becoming one of the best of Hollywood's current glamour girls. Dona Maria, the daughter of the Spanish Ambassador to the Court of St. James, offers Miss Marshall little to do, however. Yet, hidden under the voluminous robes of 16th century Spain, one is able to detect latent histronic ability.

CLAUDE RAINS and Alan Hale are top-notch in support. The former, as Phillip's emissary, injects sufficient suavity into his part so that the unthinking might mistake his part for that of the villain. (Those who wish to hiss are warned that this is a two-million dollar production.) The blustery Hale, as Flynn's aide-de-camp, carries on his shoulders the comedy without which the film would seem draggy.

Queen Elizabeth is portrayed for the second time by the extremely capable Flora Robson. If all the rulers of great nations were as capable as the actors who are called on to emulate them, the nations of the world might find this whirling sphere a better place on which to dwell.

Warners' master of stupendous productions, Michael Curtiz, has spared nothing in making this one of the more elaborate of the new season's crop. Everything that is necessary for superb entertainment is present, reassuring everyone that The Sea Hawk will be no "turkey."

Other current and choice—if you aren't too particular—bits from cinema land that opened too late to be reviewed for this issue could stand brief mention, in a prognosticating sort of way.

South of Pago Pago promises to be filled with South Sea breezes, waving coconut palms, a sarong or two, and all the other accessories that go to make up life in the islands. The fact that Frances Farmer is in the picture might raise it from being another hundred-men-and-a-girl-on-an-island picture. Miss Farmer has always appeared favorably in our eyes; let's hope she won't be disappointing.

He Stayed for Breakfast was seen by this reviewer, but too late for a complete review. The film follows in the best traditions set by similar zany films like My Favorite Wife, I Love You Again, and so forth. Loretta Young is her usual vivacious self, playing her part with wit and verve. Melvyn Douglas, as the ardent Communist, is a riot. The plot is—well, does the plot really matter in these pictures?

Crosby is back again. It's Rhythm On the River this time. Like all Crosby pictures it has its tunes—some good and some downright rank. It really doesn't matter though, B. C. always manages to make the worst of them sound pretty good. That stage and brilliant pianist of Information Please, Oscar Levant, is also listed in the roster. Several years ago Levant was just another good pianist doing odd jobs as composer, accompanist, solo piano artist, etc. Then Information Please got hold of him. Ever since he's become a national figure.

On The Feminine Side

THE new Balboa Park campus represents more than a superior institution of learning to the women who rushed madly about town in quest of education last semester; it signifies freedom from the constant dread of meeting your Saturday night date along Powell or Sutter Streets with your hair on the wind-blown side and your saddle shoes looking like fugitives from a bottle of shoe cleaner.

Certainly, if "the truth shall make you free", the campus will give you freedom in choosing your college clothes.

The college is definitely windy and cool. It's fairly easy to go on from there. Knee high stockings are smart, new, and—clap hands—warm! Even if you don't think they do things for your legs, try them anyway with a short flannel skirt and a brightly colored sweater. The results will either horrify or delight you, but it's worth the attempt.

As usual, coming up quickly on the inside rail are not Bimelech and Malicious, but Scotch plaids and heavy English herringbones—plaids and herringbones in suits, dresses, skirts, and the new jumpers. Incidently, a good looking jumper produces a knock-out effect when coupled with one of those lush long-sleeved jersey shirts the stores are featuring. If you dare to be different, why don't you try a brilliant corduroy jumper for color and excitement in your wardrobe?

Women are no longer subtle about stealing their fashion ideas from men's clothing, as a quick glance at this year's styles will show. Long, impeccably tailored camel's hair jackets almost identical to those worn by the men are being sported by college women over wool dresses and skirts. Those boxy, short tweed coats actually flaunt their masculinity in both detail and material, even when topped by a sporty pork pie felt or a colorful calot with a foot-long quill shooting skyward.

Also looming importantly on the campus scene are fly fronts in covert cloth coats and suits, and especially in the ubiquitous reversible coat. Last semester's fly front dresses are assuming a new place in campus styles, as are the long sleeved jersey shirt-maker classics.

Those new dresses made to be worn with or without a slip-on sweater seem to have been designed in answer to the prayers of the Balboa Park college women. Exactly tailored in light weight gabardine or heavier flannels, they can serve double duty for jelly dates or campus wear. Even the thermometer loses its terror for the woman who can simply pull on a warm sweater and figuratively turn up her nose at the weather.

Of course, all the old faithful stand-bys are still going strong. Saddle oxfords, matching ankle socks and bows, thick-soled pigskin shoes, classic twin sweater sets, flared or trim flannel and tweed skirts, perfectly made natural camel's hair coats with vent backs—they're all "in" and probably will be when your children's children are carving their way through the fog to reach the Administration building.

Well, here is your campus—fresh, unused, and more than ready for all the clever ideas that your own-style sense and individuality can give it. You have a college—don't be afraid to dress for it!

Student Asks Extension Of Bus Line

● TENTH AVENUE BUS WORRIER

Editor, The Guardsman:

Last semester when we were back in the old Cal Extension building I understood that transportation to the new building this semester was to be good.

I have to take the Tenth Avenue municipal bus to get to the college. I don't mind this of course, but it does seem rather annoying to have to walk five blocks from the end of the bus line to get to the building.

I'm young and healthy and don't mind walking but when the rainy season begins it will be a different story.

Is it possible to get the city to extend the bus line to nearer the college? After all a great many students take the bus and deserve as much service as any other patrons.

A worried student

Editor's note: At this time we cannot tell what the possibilities are of extending the bus line, but we'll take it up with the Executive Council and see what can be done.

● WHAT, NO BAND OR ORCHESTRA?

Editor, The Guardsman:

Upon glancing over the catalog, I discovered with some surprise that the college has no band or orchestra.

Being used to a band and orchestra in high school I was somewhat amazed to discover that a large institution such as this has no musical organization. Would you please explain why such is the case?

Does the college ever use the band of some other school or do they just get along without one?

Sincerely yours,
Robert Persiflage

Editor's note:

In the past five years of the college it has been almost impossible to efficiently organize a band or an orchestra because of the scattered and unsettled conditions of the campus. Another important point to be mentioned is that we had no equipment for such a venture and who ever heard of a band without instruments? It has been the plan of the administration to wait until we entered the new building before installing a music course of that type.

Although the college has occasionally used the bands from several high schools, as a [illegible] we do not have a band at any athletic functions.

Shots At Ramdom

WE aren't writing this column for keeps (Happy Day). In fact we doubt if it would keep. In fact—this column will deal with facts—we would cry out that this stuff was written under duress if the editor weren't a miserable beast with a penchant for vengeance.

However, since, like the butterfly, we shall soon be on our ephemeral way, we feel free to express the stark, unexpurgated, unadulterated truth about a multitude of a few subjects.

You've perhaps heard about The Baker's Wife; you know, it's that foreign picture that's been hanging out at a certain theatre on Clay Street. (Proper names are not mentioned for obvious reasons.) Well, we seem to be the individualist or radical, whatever you will, who did not blubber with ecstasy at Raimu, or at the left-over from the silent films that portrayed his wife; or at the simplicity of the film that was reduced far beyond reasonable lowest terms. Of course, the picture has been running for about 10 weeks straight, and everybody from Alexander Woollcott to Walter Winchell (fame and double letters seem to have a mutual attraction) has employed his most hackneyed panegyrics in its behalf. Even Harry Frister—you remember, he reviewed the movies last semester—thinks it's a good picture. Harry didn't see it, but after all, seeing isn't everything. We know a man who——The editor heard about this one; the most he would print of it was five words.

YOU'VE all heard about Hedy Lamarr. There's absolutely no reason why we should tell you about her—none at all. But we're going to do it. We're going to tell you about this sleek thing that causes bank presidents to sob in their bicarbonate, that caused Joan Bennett to dye her hair—competition you know. People don't know enough about this dark-eyed Diana who is able to motivate the palpitation of a million hearts as she flexes her svelte form to securely plant her chewing gum on the bottom of her chair.

We said you would get the facts in this column. So now you think we are going to expose, figuratively, this exotic passion flower who appears to be a fugitive from some Nirvana; you think we're goingto be individualistic again. Students, your logic is faultless, but you did not reckon with that strange variable—human emotion. Were we to debunk Miss Lamarr and tell her to go back to the ecstacy from whence she came, we would apostatize the pin that lies so tenderly tucked in our shoe last, the pin that shows us to be a member in good standing of the H. L. Fan Club, Branch 21, District 7.

THERE is a movement under foot to bring sanity back to art. This project all sounds very well on the surface, for what one of us would not like to bring sanity to A Nude Descending a Staircase or Abstraction in a Vermiculated Totem-Pole. Underneath, however, is a cruel purpose which seeks to prevent abstractions from patronizing vermiculated totem-poles, which seeks to halt bereted Botticelli's from recording their swirling, angular thoughts as their minds inadvertently trip off this mortal coil to explore, in the abstract, the concreteness of the nether world. We who deal in facts cry out at this persecution. The Constitution allows man to live, to laugh, to love as society chooses. Surely we cannot allow a movement for sanity to defile our modern artistic traditions of lack of line, form, beauty, and meaning and, in addition, disrupt democracy. Observe carefully the man who speaks out in favor of sanity in art; he is almost certain to belong to a column.

Although the college is, at present constructed to take in 3000 students some 4500 have registered. Plans are being made to be considered by the Board of Education so that the 1500 students may enroll.

THE GUARDSMAN SPORTS

RAMblings By Kei Hori

Once more king of sports, football, in all its glory, boomed its way over the United States. But from the realm of the feminine grape vine of the college comes news that the Women's Athletic Association boasts a bran' new coach—from the University of California, no less. Take a bow, Miss Aileen Kinkel. We hope you like it here.

Miss Kinkel looks more like a student, and we almost started a conversation full of ways to cut gym. Luckily, our secrets are still within our own little grapevine.

When we were introduced to Miss Kinkel, we learned that she is an expert at swimming, tennis, badminton, dancing, and excells at shooting the army rifle. We wonder, how, under that diminutive frame, such an abundance of ability can be stored.

The new rifle gallery is a honey. It is just under the steps of the main entrance of the main building (as if there were any other main buildings that had a main entrance) and is of standard size.

Field hockey for women is expected to have one of the largest turnouts if not the largest, in the whole WAA program. The coaches boast of new equipment, and newer women. . . . ?

No news from Placer. That's sad. This may mean the Mountaineers have shifted their system from former years, which makes predictions impossible. The last two contests were decisive victories for the Rams—of 19to 6 and 20 to 0 respectively. But. .

We have heard comments on the small number of students who attend college games. This year, however, what with all the new school, new practice grounds, new uniforms and such, the attendance at games ought to be plenty high.

The football team this year hasn't a man in the line-up who can be called a demon on cleats. The closest to this is last year's spark, Al Naumann, and possibly Dave Cunningham and Leo Leggett. All others are unsung or unpolished, which is a good sign, because Coach Eisan has no outstanding lumps to mould around. Lee has been working his men since Monday, August 24, every day except Sunday. No foolin' — they even worked on Labor Day . Wait'll the union of football ex's hears about this!

Campus Sports Personalities

By KEI HORI

HELLO to the fall of '40. And the college is proud to present to the students, a brief personality rampage of Miss Helen Crlenkovich, National 10-foot indoor springboard champion.

It took us two weeks to gather enough courage to ask her for an interview, and we have been cursing for two weeks for wasting the first two weeks. One would never know Helen to be a National Champion by the way she spoke to us during the interview. Her conversation was easy and smooth; smiles flashed not infrequently and made your interviewer quite at ease. Her manner is casual, her voice soft and melodious, yet, her carriage is erect, and she looks every inch a champion.

Helen was born in Akron, Ohio in 1921. Her early life was mostly that of traveling, for her father was an engineer, being on from one project to another. She had covered most of the eastern states, and in 1934, she moved to San Francisco, now her permanent home.

Helen's daily routine consists of attending the college, an hour and a half of practice, spending some time in the dark room (she is an accomplished photographer), working as a secretary in the Fairmont Hotel in the evenings, and practically every week-end, she is out of town for diving exhibitions.

Believe it or not, Helen has only been diving for five years, but every day of these five years, she has practiced for an hour. She credits her ability to Phil Patterson, her instructor, and to determination and hard work. "One can do anything if one sets his mind to it," she said, and the greatest example of that, we think, is herself.

Among her prized possessions is a bracelet given to her when she won her first national championship here in San Francisco. "My other awards I prize too, and I won't part with them for anything," she said.

Mrs. Helen Center, head of the rcreation department of the city can be given the credit for "finding" Helen. Helen got her tan when she was in Florida and South America.

Helen's ultimate ambition is the same as is all amateur athletes—to compete in the Olympic games. Her favorite form of dress is fancy street clothes. She likes Henry King's orchestra, and loves to tango and rhumba. Her favorite sport is swimming and diving, (what a silly question we asked!) and she whispered that she likes to read the funnies, 'specially "The Phantom"—then she wrinkled her nose and smiled.

Last month, she defended her title against the country's best. She bowed to 18 year old Marjorie Gestring, former Olympic champion. Although she gave up her National Outdoor title to Miss Gestring, Helen still has her National Indoor title.

Helen's favorite dish is strawberry shortcake with whipped cream!

Aileen Kinkel WAA Coach

An extensive and interesting program is promised to students who join the Women's Athletic Association, this semester by Bertha May Keller, faculty adviser to the organization.

The association also introduces this year a new instructor, Aileen Kinkel, formerly of the University of California. Considered an expert in practically every sport, Miss Kinkel will have charge of swimming, tennis, rifle, dancing and ice skating, in each of which she excells. Miss Kinkel replaces Vera Spencer Olsen, who at present is in Sweden.

Barbara Smith, president of WAA, issued a greeting to all new and old students. "If you like stimulating competition, good fun and comradeship, join us in coeducational athletics, intercollegiate sports days, and our other club activities," she said, "and members of WAA who have won their highest award, the "blazer" will gladly show new students the fundamentals of WAA."

Friday afternoons from 2 to 4 p.m. have been reserved for recreation in the Women's Gym. Tournaments, contests, co-recreation and playdays have been charted for this day. These afternoons will also be spent challenging the men students to such sports as badminton, tennis, table tennis and others, Miss Keller indicated.

Sign up for sports—ends Sept. 13
Women's Rally — Orientation Week
Sports begin—Sept. 13
Nominations and elections for club managers—Sept. 13—20
Sports Spread—Sept. 25
Tourney Week—Dec. 5—12

Newly revived in the athletic realm is the fast growing sport of field hockey. This game is considered the equivalent of men's football, and is being played extensively up and down the Pacific Coast. New equipment has already been obtained for this sport, and is expected to be one of the more popular ones in the college.

Tradition will be broken this year when the semi-annual splash party will be substituted by a Sports Spread, a barbecue picnic to be held at Sigmund Stern Grove. Like the splash party, the picnic is open to all women of the college. At this time, members will be introduced to the officers of the WAA and to the instructors.

The WAA has issued a program sheet obtainable from athletic instructors or in the gymnasium. All women of the college are urged to sign for some sort of athletics by next week, Miss Keller said.

IN SYMPATHY

It is with a feeling of sadness and condolence that we extend our sincerest sympathy to Head Coach George Malley of the University of San Francisco upon the loss of his wife last week.

Coach Malley, although not personally known to us, has long had an enviable reputation as an excellent coach and sportsman and we are sure that all those who read this join with us in extending sympathy.

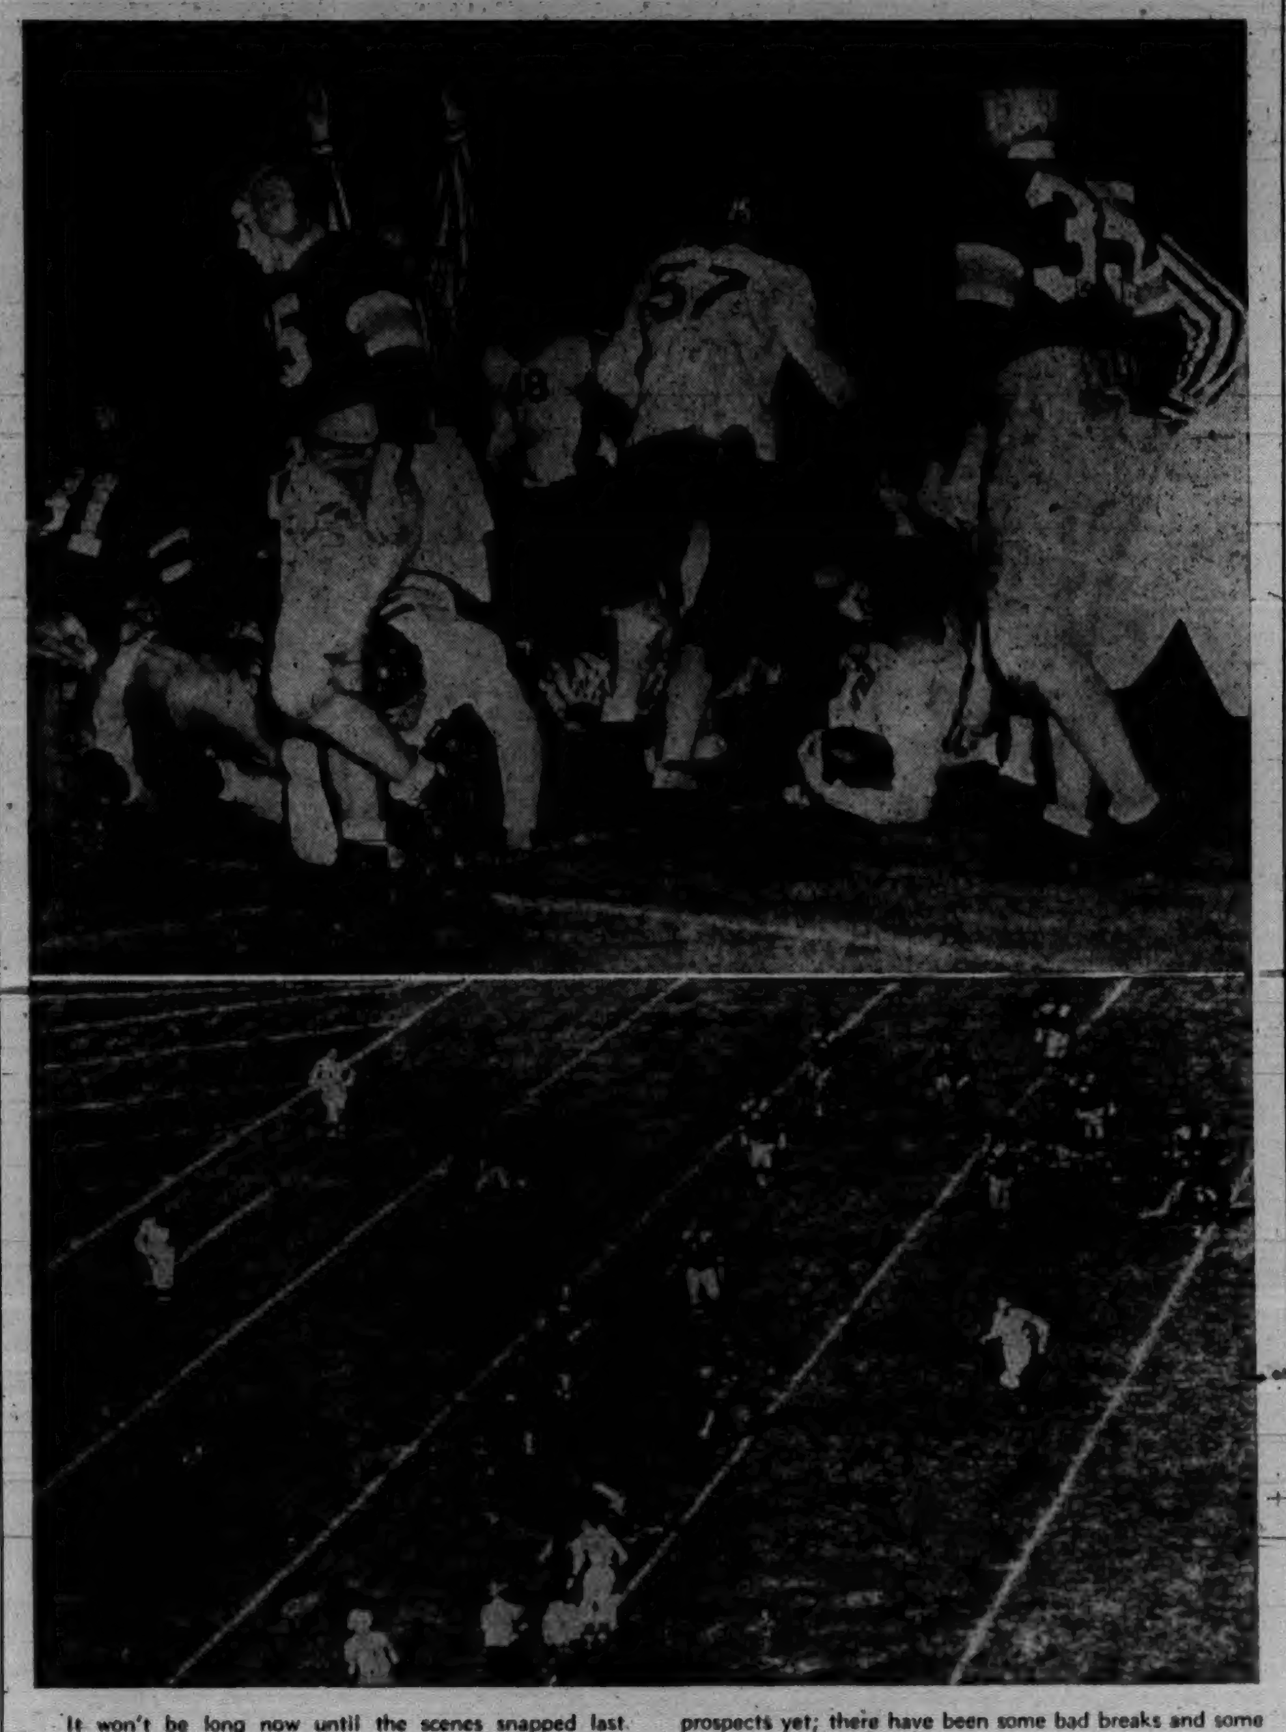
Football Coming Up



It won't be long now until the scenes snapped last semester in this picture will be reenacted before crowds of cheering, stamping college rooters. Coach Lee Eisan is up to ears in work, trying to whip up a hard-hitting team. Coach Eisan doesn't want to say too much about the team's prospects yet; there have been some bad breaks and some good breaks already.

The coach does promise a team that will give those packed in the grandstands something to get up on their seats and yell about.

Ice Skating Class Begins Sept. 20 At Winterland

As the Winterland Ice Rink will not be opened until September 14, college ice skating classes will be deferred until that date, Joseph Williams, faculty adviser announced.

Skating periods of the WAA, the college Skating Club and the women's physical education class will be run concurrently Friday afternoons from 2 to 5 p.m. The Ice Skating Club boasts a membership of some 40 students, Williams continued. Special rates for the college skaters will be announced soon.

Among their many tentative activities, the skaters plan their semi-annual Ice Carnival to be held some time in January, Williams concluded.

Goof Football Abandoned; No Support, Facilities

"There will be no junior varsity football team this semester," announced assistant football coach Jack Gaddy last week. Though no definite reason was given for the abandonment of junior varsity competition, it was believed that there are not enough facilities in the new gym to accommodate another football team.

By their past performances, the Lambs have shown great promise as a football team. Leo Leggett, star quarterback of the Ram eleven last fall, originally played with the Lambs. Because of his stellar performance, Coach Lee Eisan quickly transferred him to the varsity team.

Last season the Lambs started off with a rush by downing Polytechnic and Commerce High Schools in a rush. A week later Eisan announced that the team was being abandoned because of lack of facilities and support.

Football Prospects

College Football Prospects Look Good As Practice Begins

By KEN REA

Despite the loss by ineligibility of two of last year's lettermen, football practice will start with the beginning of instruction, said Lee Eisan, college football coach.

Leo "Legs" Leggett and Aguinaldo Vernon, two of last year's lettermen, have failed to maintain a scholastic standing that would enable them to participate in athletics, Eisan revealed.

Prospects for the coming season are not as dark as the plight of Vernon and Leggett, indicated the coach. From the returning students he numbered 26 footballmen, with expectations for more by the close of registration.

Cunningham, Meyers Back

Foremost among the 26 he named Dave Cunningham, Clark Johnson, Laurence Lowell, Kenneth Hagen, E. Albert Larrecou, George Meyers, Herbert Taylor, Tom Reilly Richard Wilson, and Bill Windler.

Already enrolled and yearning for action are Elwood Bernstein, David Cunningham, Clark Johnson, Merle McFarlane, Elsmere Crase, Parshel Hayes, Laurence Lowell, Jack Medrano, Robert Hufnagel, Kenneth Hagen, Bill Juzix, E. Albert Larrecou, George Meyers, Herbert Taylor, Richard Clayton, Stanley Young, Jim Paulsen, Tom Reilly, Richard Wood, Richard Wilson, Walter Prugh, Bill Windler, Gene Takei, Henry Suerstadt, Warner Nelson, and Manager Johnny Bareis.

No Lineup Yet

Eisan refused to release a tentative line-up for the Placer game on September 20. He pleaded that he needed more time to see if any of his returning men had improved and to get a line on the entering aspirants to gridiron glory.

H. Crlenkovich Flies Eastward

Helen Crlenkovich, the college's own diving star, flew to Kennywood Park in Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, last week-end for an exhibition in diving for the Croation National Convention held in that city.

Two exhibitions, on August 31 and September 2, were given by the former holder of the National Outdoor championship and present holder of the National Indoor title. Miss Crlenkovich took second in the Outdoor contest held last month in Portland, Oregon, bowing to Marjorie Gestring, Los Angeles springboard trapeze artist.

On Diving Tour

Helen Crlenkovich

Having registered here last week, Miss Crlenkovich flew to Pittsburgh the following day, and is expected to be back in time for classes today. She expressed her supressed desire to begin her pre-legal course as soon as possible.

Women's Gym Class Data

Physical Education classes for women will meet the first week in the new Women's Gymnasium. Riding, skating, rifle and swimming classes will meet as listed in the time schedule:

Riding .... Haight and Stanyan
Swimming .... Y.W.C.A. Pool
Skating .... Winterland
Rifle .... Room 30, Science Hall

Grid Season Opens Sept. 20

By KEI HORI

Football season is but a few days old, but within a short time, the college will play host to the Mountaineers from Placer way, when an invasion is planned the eve of September 20 under the canned sunlight of Seals Stadium.

Because unofficial announcements say that there has been a change in the coaching staff at Placer, predictions are almost impossible. If there has been such change, the system would likely be changed also; hence, comparison to last year's games would be without a spine.

Last Year—20-0

Last year's Ram victory, the tune a high ringing 20 to 0, was no push-over, although two of the three touchdowns were made in the first eight minutes of play. From that time, the Rams were pushed and pulled with equal vigor, and many times the rugged mountain boys had the Rams kicking to cover.

Coach Leland G. Eisan, Ram porkhide mentor, has been working his men since the beginning of registration. Summer lumps have been removed by light workouts as students have run in the halls to register. Spring practice showed considerable weak spots which Coach Eisan hopes to fill through shifting positions and new students.

No News From Placer

Still, without definite news from Placer, the first game is in the hands of Fate. The Ram team itself has not yet been solidified, and probably will not be until mid-season. To be remembered is that Placer has always given the Rams a fight. This time will be no exception.

Rifle Team Optimistic; McFarland Urges Sign-ups

To shoot the college to glory is the aim of the college rifle team of the fall of 1940, Captain Fred McFarland, faculty adviser for the team, announced to students during registration.

In their spacious gallery directly under the steps of the Science Building, the sharpshooters will hold their bi-weekly classes. Elementary and advanced classes for men will be held at 10 a.m. and 1 p.m. Tuesday and Thursday respectively.

As yet, future plans and contests have not been definitely charted, McFarland announced, but will be released soon in the two classes.

"As rifle is listed as a minor sport in the college," McFarland said, "students who are interested in receiving their Circle awards for sports should be advised to see Charles North, acting captain of the college team, or me."

Political Strategy

Propaganda Made All-Year Project

(From Associated Collegiate Press)

Chief difference between the organization of propaganda in American and British political parties is that the British make it practically a year-round job, while Americans wait until the presidential year before there is a determination of party strategy and before an effort is made to coordinate and implement the work of a headquarters publicity bureau.

That was the point made by Ralph D. Casey, chairman of the department of journalism at the University of Minnesota, at a meeting of the Minnesota Association for Applied Physchology.

Increase

In Business Enrollment Is Expected

Enrollment in the college business courses this fall will undoubtedly show an increase over that of last semester, corresponding to the larger number of students registering last week, F. Grant Marsh, coordinator of the business division, declared.

Concerning the importance of thorough training as a means of securing a position, Mr. Marsh emphasized, "There are places in the business world for students who are properly trained and qualified. As in the business world there are a large number of applicants for each position that becomes available, therefore employers are able to raise their standards for employment, and we in business education must necessarily meet the standards set by them."

Pointing to the thus far justified statement of the business department, "To date all properly qualified students have been placed in full-time positions in business offices"—Mr. Marsh added that a larger number of students had been given permanent employment right along the past semester, and that similar placements will be made in the next few months.

Changes in the spelling and vocabulary building course and in retail merchandising were noted by Mr. Marsh. The first has been expanded to a two semester course, but as in the past, only one semester's work is required of business majors. Classes in merchandising will meet daily this semester instead of twice daily.

23 From Military Classes Leave For Camp Ord Soon

Military Science classes within the college have been discontinued for the next 12 months, James S. Hughes, class instructor announced last week.

This move was found necessary after the passage of a bill authorizing the President to call out the National Guard. Enlistment in the 250th Coast Artillery is compulsory for students taking the military science course. The 250th Coast Artillery is expected to be called for one year's active service on or about September 15.

The course conducted at the college is designed to teach students the principles of modern warfare insofar as the coast artillery is concerned. Completion of the two year course with recommendation from the instructor qualifies the student for a reserve officers commission as a second lieutenant.

"The college course has proved very popular with many students and we are sorry that it must be discontinued," Hughes said.

Among the activities of the course were occasional field trips to army posts for the inspection of equipment. Several such field trips were undertaken last semester.

Bill Frantz, Guardsman editor in Fall 1939, will also be called for service.

Entrance Exams Given To New Students To Suggest Future Vocations; Neophytes Tested For Ability

To aid students in selecting their respective vocations, the psychology department, at the beginning of each semester marshalls its forces and puts new students through a series of five tests: The Subject A examination, the Strong Vocational Interest Test, a psychology examination, High School achievement Test and a reading test.

From these examinations the psychology department, according to Harold Luenberger, psychology instructor, endeavors to gather enough knowledge about the abilities of a student to make it possible for the faculty adviser to use this information and to guide the student into a vocation which will personally suit him.

The most important test is the Subject A Examination. If this course is failed, the student must enroll in a course of English which is entitled English A or Subject A. One out of three students passes this examination, it is claimed.

An additional test in reading is also given. The student is given a paragraph to read and, in a certain amount of time, he must answer questions on the material read.

During the fall quarter, Colorado State College of Education students spent 2,500 hours playing ping pong.

Club Advisory Board

Club Interest Is Checked By Bob Ogg

Students who wished to join a club this semester were given an opportunity to express their preference at the time of registration through blanks provided by the Club Advisory Board.

Names of students who show their interest will be sent to the clubs which they check, according to Bob Ogg, CAB president, so that they may be notified of future meetings.

Activities of the club board, as tentatively anticipated by Ogg, will probably include the publication of "Cabby", a CAB rally, and possibly some social function, he revealed. A $115 budget, approved last week by the Executive Council, will also allow for the printing of membership cards

While Thinking

COLLEGE

ONE would think that having a brand new building complete in almost every detail, the students who attend the college would have decency enough to leave it that way for a little while at least.

Evidently, however, this is not the case for already crude remarks and unpleasant language have been scratched on the walls at the back of the building.

We can assume that the majority of the students are not to blame in this matter. It is to the small minority that considers such procedure extremely clever that this article is addressed.

In case it is not clear to all by this time, we are students attending an institution of higher learning, more commonly referred to as a college. By the time college is reached, students are considered young men and women able to make their own decisions, and able to see right from wrong.

It is evident, however, that among the student body of the college there are those who are not young men and women with minds of their own, but young boys and girls with no minds at all.

No doubt the persons who defaced the wall are persons new to the college, for we doubt if anyone who has had to travel all over town during the past few years would be so unappreciative as to mar the surface of the building.

Of course, the actions of these persons are easily understood. They think they are doing something very clever and very smart. In organized society, one will always find a small minority that refuses to listen to the principles of decency and common courtesy. These people plunge right ahead and do as they please regardless of who gets hurt.

The persons who defaced the building aren't clever or smart. Far from it. They merely exemplify the unintelligence of morons and the attitude of adolescent youngsters who wish to destroy rather than create.

No censure is too strong for these vandals who come to college to mar the walls of the institution that was built for the purpose of educating American youth. If these had any decency or pride in their college they wouldn't act like undisciplined children.

There is also the point of the language used on the walls.

All of us occassionally refer to the use of profane language, when something occurs that is particularly annoying. A great many people also are willing to tell and listen to stories of a somewhat doubtful nature. This depends upon the individual and is according to individual taste. There is no place at any time however for the use of disgusting terms carved into the walls of a public building.

Some persons consider the use of filthy language amusing. That is a matter of opinion but the use of filthy humor (so called) is most definitely out of place here, and decidedly not funny. If some people wish to spend most of their time telling, reading or writing filthy language, let them tell, read or write their communications to their friends. They're welcome to them.

It is to be hoped that the majority of the students of the college will take it upon themselves to discourage the efforts of any of their classmates directed towards defacing or marring the building or any college property so that this disgusting situation will not go any further.

NOW for the lighter side of the news: Mary Frances Malone, Guardsman fashion columnist who spends time and takes up space twice a week telling the women of the college what to wear and why, was seen last week in the publications office wearing a hat (well, she said it was a hat) that looked like a freshman dink without a brim. Extending up from the side of the misplaced beanie was a brilliant blue plume (she must've killed an ostrich) about 9 inches long. She reminded us of one of those natives you see in motion pictures about Africa, you know, the kind with the plumed headress and faces that scare little children.

THREE THOUSAND University of California students gathered at Sather Gate last Tuesday to protest against the conscription bill now before Congress.

Those students remind us of 3000 ostriches who are hiding their heads in the sand, refusing to realize or prepare for any danger by claiming that the danger is not there. We didn't realize that 3000 college students could be so naive as to believe

Orientation Activities

Smoker, Tea, Two Dances Scheduled For Next Week

Plans for Orientation Week from September 10 through September 13 are now completed, according to Lyle Shultz, Associated Students' president.

"Our program includes class elections, a general rally, the Associated Men Students and Associated Women Students Collegiate Mixer, separate affairs, and the Low Freshman Dance," Shultz said.

All Student Rally Tuesday

A rally for all students will be held on the steps of the administration building at 11 o'clock on September 10, he declared. This rally is to be followed by various class nominations and election assemblies in rooms assigned by the election committee.

Under the leadership of Virginia Hubbert and Ted Theodus, the AWS and AMS will present the semi-annual Collegiate Mixer informal tea dance in the Women's Gymnasium from 3 o'clock to 5 o'clock on September 11, Shultz announced. The dance is meant to introduce men and women of the college.

Tea, Smoker Scheduled

The AWS tea honoring freshman women will take place at 4 o'clock in the cafeteria on September 12, and the AMS smoker for all men students is scheduled for 9 o'clock September 10, in Room 100, he said.

The AMS is going to sponsor a series of athletic contests in the field at 3 o'clock on Friday, September 13, according to Shultz. Contests will be between men of the freshman and sophomore classes, and they will include a tug of war, sack races, and jump the elephant, according to present plans.

Closing activities for the week will be the semi-annual Low Fresman dance in the Women's Gymnasium at 9 o'clock on September 13 under the direction of Jean Arnold, Associated Students vice-president.

Dance To Be Informal

"Although this affair is traditionally semi-formal, this semester we are adopting a 'Ramshackle' theme for the dance," Miss Arnold said. "In other words the dance is to be very informal and sports clothes will be quite appropriate."

As is customary, admission to the dance will be by one student body card per couple, she added.

AWS To Hold Tea Thursday

To welcome all new women students to the college, the Associated Women Students will sponsor a tea in the cafeteria at 3:30 o'clock on September 12, Virginia Hubbert, AWS president, announced today.

"All women are cordially invited to attend this affair," Miss Hubbert declared. We are hoping for an unusually large attendance this semester."

Asked to serve as hosteses for the event were Mary Frances Malone, Loretta Egan, Marion McKillop, Jean Arnold, Barbara Brown, Mercedes Dahleen, Betty McKinnon, Anita Welt, Barbara Smith, June Holmes, Edith Callaghan, Aspasia Vasilatos, Dorothy Trood, Mary Bartholomew, Margaret Hager, Sue Richardson, Helen Wilson, Betty Fox, Mildred Bartosiewski, Gladys Young, and Dorothy Obernesser.

"I should like to ask those women whose names appear above to meet me at the cafeteria at least a half hour before the time at which the tea is scheduled to be served," Miss Hubbert said.

The tea is a semi-annual affair, planned chiefly to help orient new women students to college activities.

"Our tentative plans call for representatives of the Home Economics Association, Women's Athletic Association, The Guardsman, and the A Cappella Choir to give brief talks on their respective activities," Miss Hubbert declared. "However, at this time we do not have the names of the speakers for publication."

In addition to the representatives of the various organizations, Miss Hubbert said that she would also introduce several faculty members, among them Margaret Dougherty, dean of women, and Flossita Badger, music instructor at the college.

"We have not a complete list of faculty guests to give out at this time," she added, "but it is customary o have all women instructors who are interested in AWS activities."

Registration Books May Be Filed Early

The importance of handing in registration books or official study lists on time was emphasized this week by Mary Jane Learnard, assistant registrar.

"To avoid standing in the usual lengthy line, students may file their registration books—signed by their faculty adviser—previous to the date stamped on the cover of their book," Miss Learnard said.

Books may be filed in the library, Room 314, on September 10 and 11.

Those planning to be graduated at the end of this semester should file their petitions for graduation at the earliest possible time, Miss Learnard requested. She explained that immediate filing is necessary so that any possible program changes may be easily made.

Graduation petitions should be delivered to the registrar's office.

MONDAY HOLIDAY

Monday, September 9, Admission Day, will be observed as a college holiday, according to word received from the registrar's office. As a result no Guardsman will be published the following day. The next issue will be Friday, September 13.

Judicial Committee Will Enforce Card Ruling

A new ruling that all officers in any student organizations and all participants in athletics or other activities sponsored by the Associated Students must be members of the Associated Students was revealed this week by Edward Hardies, newly appointed chairman of the Judiciary Committee.

Hardies also announced the names of those serving on his committee as follows: Jean Arnold, Barbara Brown, Henry Suerstedt, and Stanley Ward. The committee is expected to meet today to discuss future policies, especially in regard to the misuse of Associated Student cards.

"Cards illegally used will be confiscated," Hardies warned, "and the owners will be asked to attend a hearing before the Judiciary Committee."

The Judiciary Committee has jurisdiction, granted by the constitution, over cases of student misconduct in the campus or classroom. It is directly responsible to Dean Edwin C. Browne.

Dedication Of Building Set For Oct. 6

Although the plans for the program of the dedication of the college building are tentative, the date has definitely been set for Sunday, October 6, at 1 o'clock, announced Lloyd D. Luckmann, president of the Faculty Association.

American Legion To Assist

"A portion of the program," Luckmann said, "will be presented by students of the college in cooperation with the West of Twin Peaks Post of the American Legion."

For the most part, the dedication will take place outside the building, highlighted by the presentation of colors by the American Legion.

There is a possibility that Mayor Angelo J. Rossi will officiate at the ceremonies in which President Archibald J. Cloud will accept the building. Members of the Board of Education and other civic dignitaries will also be present to witness the event.

Dinner To Honor Cloud

In honor of President Cloud, a dinner will be given for faculty members on Saturday evening, October 3, in the cafeteria.

This dinner is being given in connection with the dedication ceremonies on Sunday, Luckmann remarked.

CAB To Meet September 17; Members Urged To Attend

First meeting of the Club Advisory Board this semester has been set for Tuesday, September 17, at 2 o'clock by Bob Ogg, president of the group, who urged that all clubs in the college send a representative to the student body office, Room 169, at that time.

Petitions for renewal of charters are now available to those clubs which were in good standing in the CAB last semester, he announced, and may be obtained in Room 169 up to September 10, after which date they will be placed in the faculty advisers' boxes. Other clubs desiring affiliation with the club board are advised to make the necessary arrangements through a representative at the meeting scheduled.

"I have been advised that all members on the Club Advisory Board should also hold membership in the student body," Ogg declared. "This provision is reasonable, since the CAB functions under the Associated Students and receives its funds from that source."

He asked also that clubs hand in the names of their officers both for publication in "Cabby," which may possibly be issued this month, and also for convenience in contacting the various organizations.

Names of students compiled from blanks filled in during registration by them have been sent to the clubs in which they show interest, Ogg revealed. Clubs are encouraged to use these lists.

College Bank Open Today From 10 A.M. To 2 P.M.

To handle effectively an unusual volume of student business, the college bank, located in Room 188, will be open today from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. instead of from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m. as usual, Michael Zarchin, assistant comptroller to the bank, announced.

Next week the bank will go back on its usual schedule.

At the present time students may purchase Associated Student cards, Municipal car tickets, and gym lockers at the bank, Zarchin said. Market Street cards must be obtained from the railway company direct.

The large lines observed before the bank this week were largely owing to lack of personnel and the requirement that purchasers of car tickets sign a form when buying them. This procedure, inaugurated this semester by the Municipal Railway Company, is meant to lessen abuse of the tickets by persons not privileged to use them rather than college students.

Tickets for social events and athletic contests will also be handled through the bank.

The bank is managed by Ward Nichols, officially titled college comptroller.

Student Politics

Class Elections To Be Held Next Tuesday Morning

Class nominations and elections will take place immediately after the general student's rally next Tuesday morning, September 10, Mary Frances Malone, chairman of the class election committee declared today.

"Low freshmen are scheduled to meet in the cafeteria, high freshmen in Room 100, low sophomores in Room 136, and high sophomores in Room 204," Miss Malone announced.

According to present plans, the various class nominations and elec- their class meetings promptly after the by members of the election committee, Miss Malone said, requesting that full cooperation be given to them.

"We can't overemphasize the importance of these elections, and we would like to ask students to go to their class metings promtply after the rally to speed up the general proceedings," she added.

Recently appointed to the committee were Pete Aydelotte, Loretta Egan, and Len Gross, Miss Malone disclosed.

Because of this semester's heavy registration, a record vote is expected by student leaders.

College Press Bureau Formed

Formation of a college publicity bureau to be handled by students of the college was disclosed last week by Lyle Shultz, Associated Student president.

Len Gross, Guardsman editor, was appointed as head of the bureau of external publicity and Hugh Waite, as chairman of internal publicity; Louis Goldstone, Guardsman associate editor has been appointed as chairman of the external publicity division.

Bureaus Have Proved Success

In commenting upon the announcement Shultz said, "Many colleges throughout the country have their own press bureau and have found such an organization very successful."

In previous years, college external publicity has been handled by a paid publicity man. Since there is a lack of funds this semester, the Executive Council did not deem it practical to hire a publicity agent this semester. The salary for a paid publicity man would come to approximately $300 and the Associated Students do not have the necessary funds for that purpose at this time.

Internal and External Bureaus Set Up

The bureau is to be divided into two sections, internal and external. The internal division will handle all publicity relating to college affairs within the college, such as putting up posters and signs advertising college dances and games. The external publicity section will handle the writing of press releases concerning the college to the metropolitan newspapers and to other colleges in the Bay Area.

Persons interested in working on either committee are requested to apply to Gross at the publications office, Room 134, anytime this week.

Library Housed In 314; Open From 8 A.M. To 5 P.M.

Open and ready for business is the college library, temporarily housed in Room 314.

An invitation to make the fullest use of the library was cordially extended to all by the new college librarian, Marcus Skarstedt. The library will be open from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. A book-drop, adjoining the library entrance, has been provided for those wishing to leave books before or after closing hours.

"Students will facilitate library work if they turn their books into the desk when the library is open rather than use the book-drop," Skarstedt said. Should there be enough demand, Skarstedt added, the library hours might be extended.

All books will be on open stacks, that is, contrary to previous practices at Powell Street, students may select and remove books directly from the shelves.

Fines for overdue books will be "very reluctantly" imposed, Skarstedt remarked.

Skarstedt, who replaces Frances Colligan this semester, has been active as a librarian in coast institutions for the past 20 years. He holds, among other degrees, a doctorate of philosophy from the University of California. His most recent posts as librarian have been at the California Polytechnic School and the Whittier Junior College.

Redford To Take NYA Applications This Week

Students wishing to secure employment with the National Youth Administration while in college are requested to apply to Edward H. Redford, in Room 148, any time this week.

"Funds and positions are limited so the quicker the student makes out his application, the better the chances of getting a job," Redford said.

Aeronautics Course Still Open To College Sophs

"More students of sophomore standing in the college are urged to sign up for courses in Civil Aeronautics training," Captain George Richards, director Civilian Pilot Training, announced today.

According to Richards, even though those enrolled in ground courses are not selected for flying within a month or so, they must continue the course in which they have enrolled.

As a part of the college's C.A.A. summer program of training, 30 students from the University of California, Stanford, and the college were given instruction by Captain Richards, at the San Francisco Municipal Airport.

Since only a few of the freshmen students enrolled in Aviation 11, are likely to be accepted for the more advanced course in flying, the need for the enrollment of students of sophomore standing is great, explained Richards. Name of the course for which sophomores should enroll is Aviation 2A.

Purpose of the C.A.A. training is to provide pilots for the nation. Some student pilots of the college will be eligible to receive their pilot licenses the latter part of this semester. Main requirement for the license is 35 hours of solo flying which can only be done by the student when he has completed eight hours of dual instruction in flying, Richards said.

Men Desirous Of Room, Board, Should See Browne

Men students desirous of obtaining rooms or room and board near the campus are requested to see Edwin C. Browne, dean of men in the college, in Room 123.

"Housing accommodations are conveniently located near the college in private homes," Browne said.

Women students wishing similar housing arrangements should apply to Margaret Dougherty, dean of women in the college, in Room 125.

Tryouts

Assistant Yell Leaders To Be Picked Today

Tryouts for assistant yell leaders will be held today at 3 p.m. in Room 100, Pete Adylotte, college head yell leader announced last week.

Two Yell Leaders Chosen

There will be two assistant yell leaders chosen, Adylotte revealed.

"For the tryouts, it will be perfectly all right for applicants to use one of their high school yells to demonstrate their ability," Adylotte said. "After the two assistants are chosen we will teach them the college yells," he continued.

It is the job of the head yell leader and his assistants to preside over the athletic rallies and create spirit at the athletic contests of the college.

Adylotte announced that Frosh buttons will be given to all freshmen students when they file their registration books.

Frosh Buttons Traditional

Frosh buttons are a tradition originated several semesters ago. All new students are given red and white buttons with "Frosh" stamped on them and are requested to wear these buttons during Orientation Week. There is no form of hazing connected with the buttons.

Crlenkovich Home; To Give Exhibition Sept. 14

Having returned early this week from an exhibition at the Croation National Convention in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, Helen Crlenkovich, college diving star, is now preparing for an exhibition at the Patterson High School on September 14, she said today.

"The exhibition in Pittsburgh was not out of the ordinary," she declared, confessing that she had flown so much this summer that the novelty has worn off for her.

The Patterson High School has asked her to give an exhibition in an attempt to stimulate interest in competitive swimming, especially among girls, Miss Crlenkovich added.

The National Indoor diving champion also said that she is practicing for an exhibition at Del Monte on September 18 and another at the Women's City Club on October 14.

No Lockers Available This Semester Says Mohr

Because of limited facilities, no lockers will be available to the regular students this semester, announced J. Paul Mohr, registrar, this week.

There are a few lockers available, however, for those extreme cases in which they are needed. Students in dire need of a locker are advised to see either Dean Margaret Dougherty or Dean Edwin C. Browne for applications, Mohr said.

If the deans approve the locker request, the student is then asked to see Edward H. Redford, building manager, for the combination. There is no charge for the locker, Mohr added.

Rivera Mural Becomes Target Of Club Women

MEMBERS of the City and County Federation of Women's Clubs recently announced that they are opposed to the Diego Rivera mural destined someday to adorn the walls of the college library.

The organization expressed its intention of seeing that the mural is kept out of the college because it might be a subversive influence on the students of the college.

It seems that the members object to the portion of the mural which depicts a pair of dictators.

Perhaps it would be well to explain fully the theme of the mural as now planned.

The whole idea is that of showing the relationship between the cultures of North America and the cultures of South America with the thought that these two are inter-related and should be drawn closer together. In the central part of the mural is a figure, half of which is an ancient Mexican God, and the other half a modern American machine to show how the two continents are linked together.

The mural also shows the part women playing in modern life, as doctors, lawyers, engineers, and other professional occupations.

The only part that refers to the dictators is one small corner of the mural where the dictators and swastikas are pictured. THE POINT IS, THE DICTATORS ARE USED MERELY TO ILLUSTRATE THE POWERS OF FORCE, HATE, AND VIOLENCE THAT THEY REPRESENT. This is the only section of the mural where any discrimination against anybody or anything is shown and this is done to associate with dictatorship and totalitarianism, violence and brute force.

The club members oppose the mural on patriotic grounds, claiming it would have "a subversive influence on highly impressionable youth seeking an education." There is no doubt that it would create an impression. The impression would be far from subversive, however; it would be an impression of disgust and horror, linked with a determination to keep the sort of things dictators stand for out of the United States.

That portion of the mural should be there to serve as a reminder to every free person that dictatorship and violence go hand in hand. Banning the mural from the college walls won't keep the students from reading and hearing about dictators. This is an institution of learning. One of the things we should learn is that hate, force, and violence have no place in America. In years to come, when we hope the world will be at peace again, that portion of the mural will serve as a warning signal in the minds of all who see it, a warning never to accept the creeds of a dictator because of what follows in his wake.

There is also another objection from the Women's Club. It claims that an American artist should have been asked to do the mural. It seems to have forgotten that art knows no nationalities or religions. Does it matter what race claims the man who is an artist if his works are great and given to all the world to enjoy?

Diego Rivera has been acknowledged as one of the greatest living artists, yet the clubwomen feel he shouldn't be doing the mural. That argument is hardly valid. Rivera is a Mexican. Rivera is also a great artist. It will be one of the greatest things for the college in years to come to say that the famous Rivera did the mural on the library wall. One of the best artists in the world is doing something that will live forever and yet there is objection because he happened to be born south of the Texas border.

Where is this sense of tolerance, of freedom, of equality that we hear so much about in books and churches? Are these but empty words spoken to fill the ears of innocent Sunday school children, or do they really mean something?

Isn't there enough intolerance, hate, racial discrimination, and discord in the world today without adding to it here in America, the last and only stronghold of free speech, and freedom of religious worship?

The time is fast approaching when we will have to decide whether the ideals we have upheld for 200 years are merely so many empty words or really count for something. This controversy over Diego Rivera is but a prelude of these things which we hope will never come.

Student Card Lenders Subject To Penalty

DURING Orientation Week, as in weeks to follow, several social events have been planned which will require an Associated Student card for admittance. To guarantee to those owning Associated Student cards that their membersip in the Associated Students is worthwhile, an identification committee will be on hand at all of these functions to see that only those rightfully possessing cards enter.

Inevitably, someone not possessing a student card finds a "friend" from whom he can borrow one. Inevitably, also, the identification committee apprehends the wrongdoer, and confiscates the misused student card.

Out of this situation the illegal user of the card finds himself on hardly agreeable terms with his "friend"; and the owner of the card, or the "fall guy"—for that's what he really is, —is requested to appear before the student judicial committee to explain his act.

A simple moral is easily derived now: Do not, on any account, lend your Associated Student card to anyone!

If a person is really your friend, he will not ask to borrow your student card.

Remember, the brief personnel description on your Associated Student card should bring 100 per cent efficiency to the identification committee this semester.
Bonsor

Lastly, READ OVER THE PLEDGE ON THE BACK OF YOUR CARD; YOU SIGNED YOUR NAME TO IT.

Class Elections Called For Student Cooperation

EACH semester's class elections have always had a strong influence upon student activities at the college, but there have never been elections more important in potentiality than those which are to take place next Tuesday.

In the past, officers have been hindered primarily by a disorganized student group. Consequently, this semester's officers will face the resultant problem of fusing various student groups into a unified entity, a task which will obviously require above the average ability and diligence.

It is therefore urgent for students to stop now to think clearly about candidates and their suitability for office holding before casting ballots indiscriminately. The molding of college policy will be in the hands of those men and women who will be elected Tuesday; and, unfortunately, a high "glamor" rating does not always insure one's ability to be an officer.

Start thinking now about those whom you wish to elect—then analyze your reasons for wanting them in office. If you find that you are valuing appearance and old friendships over capability, look around for another candidate.

The college needs intelligent leaders. It's up to you to elect them!

Meet The Students

By THE EDITOR

Editor's note: This is the first in a series of columns devoted to the ordinary college student. Each week, a student will be picked at random from the halls and interviewed. Maybe next week it will be you or one of your friends.

Since the college is starting this semester in a big way with a brand new building, it is only right that this column should start in a big way also. This week, therefore, instead of interviewing one person, as is customary, three were singled out for questioning.

Three freshmen women on their first day of classes. First on the list is blonde Betty De Lu. Betty has an attractive smile and blue eyes that seem to snap with vitality. She comes from George Washington High School and is 17.

When asked the question "What do you think of the new building?" Betty answered quickly, "Bewildering, but swell." As a post script she added "I think George Washington is more ornate, however."

Miss De Lu is majoring in journalism and English of all things. An attempt was made to persuade her to change her major to something a little more peaceful and less hectic, like home economics for example, but it did no good.

Sports interest Betty a great deal and she considers them her favorite hobby.

As to her opinion of the men of the college: "I think they dress nicely and look very rugged."

Next in line is Virginia Summerville, another freshman co-ed from George Washington. Virginia is also 17, has blue eyes and brown hair.

The Spectator

SPECTATOR presents a noteworthy first by panning "South of Pago Pago" and booming "Boom Town" in the same column.

Taking the sweet before the bitter, one must admit that M.G.M. had great courage to take four of its most expensive stars and place them in a $2,000,000 production, especially with movie markets crumbling abroad and home grosses gradually diminishing.

Metro's gamble in the field of high-budget entertainment succeeds with a definite bang. "Boom Town" is first rate, and it deserves bouquets in all respects. Director Jack Conway has taken a vivid, fast moving story of the oil industry and turned out a thrilling, frequently moving picture that exhibits nary a dull spot. This cavalcade of the oil-fields is seen through the eyes of Spencer Tracy and Clark Gable, a couple of rough, fist-swinging pals who carry on in the manner of Quirt and Flagg. Bums one day, they find themselves millionaires the next, as they stake their rolls on the chance of an incoming gusher.

Their loves, fights, and tribulations form the panoramic background to the spectacle of men combing the earth for "black gold." Claudette Colbert and Hedy Lamarr are the women leads and contribute nicely subdued portrayals. Acting, however, doesn't give "Boom Town" its excellent rating. Rather it is the swift-moving, dramatic story that sweeps it along to a satisfactory climax.

Swinging immediately from the sublime to the ridiculous, Spectator taes a brief glance at "South of Pago Pago," the newest attempt on the part of Hollywood to probe into the what-whats of South Sea life.

"South of Pago Pago" suffers by what has gone before. There have been so many of these sarong dramas in recent months (remember Dorothy Lamour) that another film of that type must present a plot with some radical difference or suffer the label of triteness.

"South of Pago Pago" is trite. It's been done before in various ways so that every plot maneuver is easily foreseen by the audience. It's all about a peaceful South Sea island with a handsome native hero (Jon Hall) and his island sweetheart (Olympe Bradna) wafting away in an idyllic existence. Villains in the guise of pearl-hunters enter the scene, trick the naive natives (a cute term) and horribly defraud the poor creatures. It is all straightened out in a bloody conflict.

Sounds familiar, doesn't it? Frances Farmer as the white girl with the gang of thieves does some nice emoting. The rest of the cast plays stereotyped roles. Still, however, the film does take your mind off that European fracas for an hour or so—so perhaps our opinions are savored a little too harshly.

"Boom Town" and "South of Pago Pago" serve to illustrate a fact that has long been dormant in many producers' brains—the story is the thing. A picture can have great acting, magnificent production, big sweeping sets, etc., but if the plot isn't basically sound, it is starting behind the eight ball. Both films are examples of care and workmanship, but "Boom Town" has the strength in its story and there the similarity ceases.

American college students are different from all other people on this planet; they are the only people who try to get as little as possible for their money. On The Feminine Side ACCCORDING to Carl Sandburg, fog "creeps in on little cat feet." As bitterly disillusioned women, students of this college can contest his statement w[illegible]uthority.

San Francisco fog does not creep in, Mr. Sandburg. It rolls, flows, gushes or even blankets, but it most assuredly does not concern itself with anything as subtle as creeping.

Inspiration for all this came from staring out of the Publications window at the new common-place sight of women battling their way up what certain of our more flippant confreres have christened "Pneumonia Mountain." They're quite a spectacle with madly billowing skirts, as they try to carry books and pin down short skirts, while the fog gleefully pulls out the last traces of curl from their hair.

From this almost daily struggle with the elements, there has come a desperate resolution to do something—anything—about the hair problem. Several schools of thought on the matter are now existent, but as yet no completely satisfactory answer has been found.

There are, of course, the Peasant Scarf groups who nonchalantly do their hair "up" beneath a brightly colored bandana and literally breeze up the hill. Once at the campus, they contend, all that remains to be done is to remove pins, curlers, and assorted articles from one's hair, and to comb it all out. Simple? Yes, but the members of the Scarf Movement forget that scarves are most unbecoming to most women, among them your reporter who looks like the slum element in the steerage of a very inferior refugee ship whenever she rashly attempts one. No, the scarf isn't the answer by a long shot.

A variation on the same theme is formed by the Turban groups who firmly believe that they have the formula for glamor aud practicability at one fell swoop. Say what they will, there's still something incongruous about a tweed suit topped by a Lamarr-ish turban. And there is something definitely startling about even a pretty face which seems to belong to a bald-headed woman.

Ignoring the matter completely in the hope that natural beauty is the best way, after all, are the girls who do nothing about the whole mess. They float happily about the campus, apparently unaware of the fact that their hair straggles in wispy bits and that they look as if their mothers were frightened by a very bad picture of Garbo. But maybe they'll set a new and decidedly different style at least until spring, sunshine, and warm, balmy days invade Balboa Park (say we crossing our fingers, toes, and eyes—no mean stunt).

Meanwhile the women of the college are confronted by a dilemma. Does anyone know the price of a "Butch"?

• We Blush With Delight

Editor, The Guardsman:

Reading my first issue of The Guardsman, I found somewhat to my surprise that your publication is on a par if not better than those of many college publications.

I especially enjoyed reading Miss Malone's column and Shots at Ramdom, written by Borrie Hyman.

The fact that a paper was published the first day of classes is a point upon which your staff is to be commended. Although I myself am not connected with journalism I can understand the hours of work it must take to publish The Guardsman. I hope you continue the rest of the semester in the same excellent vein of the first issue.

Sincerely yours,

J. B.

Editors note: Thanks for the bouquets. We'll try to live up to your expectations.

• Imagination Happens Here

Editor, The Guardsman:

Like many others, our sentiments in the way of a President for these United States are inclined more and more toward the likeable Wendell Willkie, so the following is not to be construed as opposition to the Republican candidate. It is merely a passing thought (without form or substance, we hope) that struck us the other day, and may be indicative to some of slight irregularities in our thought processes.

This child of our imagination (imagination is—phoney?) was inspired by the general prediction that should President Roosevelt be elected to a third term, he will make himself dictator of this Nation—possibly in the manner portrayed in Sinclair Lewis' "It Can't Happen Here"—and in supposition runs like this:

A President—our imagination has not identified him—puts himself up for a third term in office. Leaders of the party opposing him immediately call him a politician with a lust for power, and warn, on the basis of his former authoritative acts, that he will turn dictator if not curbed. They thereupon produce their own candidate—also unidentified by our, etc.—whom they declare to be not a politician but an able business man who will conduct the affairs of the Nation in a businesslike and democratic manner. A reversal of public sentiment sweeps the new candidate into office, and he assumes the authority of Chief Executive of the United States.

The new President, however, while not a politician in the sense of experience, is ambitious, "catches on" quickly, and sincerely believes, like the inspired Adolf Hitler, that only a concentration of power in the hands of one man will save his country from ruin and elevate it to a position of indisputable leadership among the nations of the world.

He works toward this aim, therefore, and through methods which the people had feared the former President would use, finally makes

Shots At RAMdom . . .

UNFORTUNATELY, we weren't so ephemeral after all. The editor said, "Write it again." So, in deference to popular demand and the threats of the editor, we begin.

Rumor has it—rumor has so many things that we thought it wouldn't mind our snatching one little topic—anyway, rumor has it that Herbert George Wells, known to the masses as H. G. Wells, plans a lecture tour in this country some time before the end of the year. If you think this acme of prognosticators will lower himself to plebian cloud-hopping to arrive here, you just don't know the real Herbert George Wells. (But does anyone really know the real Mr. Wells.) No less than a submarine is being considered to bring Mr. Wells safely across the ocean. On his arrival in California, Mr. Wells is expected to go into a transcendant huddle with that bearded bundle of precocious intellect, Orson Welles. They say—they asked that their names be withheld—that Wells and Welles contemplate doing a script for a morning radio serial to be sponsored by Herber's Baby Food. Herber's, we also hear, is dickering with Baby Sandy for the lead.

Just to inject a note of congruency into this stuff, we had our Picadilly and Hollywood correspondents flash us the latest development in the hectic lives of these preeminent men.

From across the water, Angus MacBloomberg cables the following:

"H. G. Wells broke a three-month silence yesterday regarding the reason for his disinclination to bomb shelters. Sententiously explained Mr. Wells, 'There is no future in them'."

By smoke signals from the city where all are not diamonds that glitter but usually unreasonable facsimilies, Jonathan S. Wiggbotham puffs this interesting sidelight on genius:

"Orson Welles, half man, half Martian, is now stroking his left cheek instead of his elongated stubble these days. It seems an overly suspicious waitress misunderstood Mr. Welles when he absent-mindedly signed his check, 'I remain, obediently yours'."

In this case our sympathies are with the working girl. In fact, we ran into one the other day—bruising her slightly only. She works behind the greasy scenes of Tony's Grotto. (Special Pink Plate Lunch 22c* on Tuesdays.) She's responsible for that slimy feeling on the cutlery.

"You know," said Miss Plotts—we shall call her Miss Plotts—as she daintily shoved a half piece of chewing gum into her mouth with five gayly colored imitations of a mandarin's hang nail—we kept the other half—"I'm sick and tired of washing of dishes for a living. I wanta get somewheres."

Those are simple words aren't they? But, America, they express the driving ambition of this country. We managed to inveigle from Miss Plotts her aspiration. In a poorly modulated voice, she modestly rasped, "I'm waiting for an opening in the perfume counter of Nacky's Bargain Basement."

Yes, America, in the words of this doughty if slightly dumpy young thing do we find a symbol on which to base our hopes for the future.

While on the subject of spirit, we have it on good authority that the following yell is actually used by an English college.

King's College, King's College, rah, rah, rah!
How's your father?
Can we play cricket?
Rather, rather.
King's, King's, King's!

Who said the English are lacking in brio?

THE GUARDSMAN SPORTS

RAMblings

By Kei Hori

Biggest eye-opener of the week came from Marin Junior College in Kentfield where the coaching staff of '40 is enough to make a Sunday evening quarter-back hold his tongue for breath.

Head football coach for the Mariners happens to be Vic Bottari, the all-Aremican half from U. C., line coaching. Blockers are under the guidance of Dave Anderson, another all-American from U. C., as well as Perry Schwartz, also of the same class as Anderson and Bottari assisting the latter. Dutch Clymer, who is coaching the backfield, was formerly of U. C. and is also a member of the advising faculty. Sam Chapman, another all-American, is expected shortly—after his willow swinging career for this season is over.

Even though Marin is not in our league, and is not listed as one of our opponents, what with all those U. of Cal. all-Americans, they should be among the tops in the B league, and a possibility of them moving up to the A's is not all together improbable. Is it?

Head manager Johnny Baries is all muddled. He is the water-boy, quartermaster, and Coach Lee Eisan's right hand, man! His assistants are like the executive editor is to the editor. No use. What with all the new equipment, his vigilant eyes are all but crossed in trying to keep them together.

Since Joe Amori, boxing instructor and adviser of the AMS is off to stanford (note small "s", we are non-partisan), we have been wondering who is to take his place. Joe is in the sticks gunning for his Peeaich Dee. News has been that he will be back with us this spring to re-teach the bowlers, boxers et al.

Lefty O'Doul will leave his Powell Street haunt next Tuesday eve to attend the College Smoker. Walter "The Great" Mails will also be down, and probably will be interviewed by emcee Theodus. Theodus was hanging around the office soliciting for the Smoker.

The new coach at the Men's gym is Joe Lantágne. Pronounced like Olivia de Havilland's sister's name. Joe's from Stanford, and very versatile, too. We hear he knows his soccer. By the way, he and Aileen Kinkel should get along nicely, she being from Cal. . .

Women swimmers are sprouting faster than devil-grass on our front lawn. Before their classes in the morning, feminine aqua-ducks go to the Y.W. on Sutter, and under Aileen Kinkel's direction, splash in all their glory. We hear tell the Aquacade of Rose's has influence, and women are pulling an Esther Williams together—swimming in formation, we mean.

Would-be Bess Erhardt's and Shipstad's are already oiling their skate runners and sharpening them, waiting for the rink at Winterland's to open. Remember the sensation it caused last year? If you got a chance to look at the ice while skating, you were considered lucky. Honest, it was almost impossible to fall down—there were that many people.

We asked nearly every freshman we saw what he thought of the new gymnasiums. Only one person thought 'twasn't so hot, and we later found he hadn't even seen the thing. Later, he claimed he'd ruther stay in the gym than at home. Those glass bricks are keen—and how, seeze. Miss Bertha M. Keller thanks de lawd she has an office where she can hang her hat.

Add co-educational class of riding: The back-breaking sport continues its jolting way as merrily. The Stanyan Street Stables, it has been rumored, has got hold of a few more cayuses. Which should interest the more hoss-minded students of the college.

Open letter to Barbara Smith, WAA prexy:

What's this the WAA is doing? We hear they are having a song contest. We thought the WAA was an athletic club, Smitty. Can this be more of the versatile A. K.'s doings? Signed, K. H. sp. ed.

P. S. How's the Sandwich Spread coming? You can bring me back a sannrich or two. We won't bring lunch on Thursday, the 26th.

We have three out-of-town games this fall. The only trouble is that they are on three consecutive weeks. The Cal frosh game at Berkeley, followed by the long trek down south for the LACC'ans, and then the Sacramento encounter.

Tentative lineup for the Placer game will be released soon, announced head football coach Lee Eisan.

Although the college grid squad will suffer to some extent because of the loss of Leo "Legs" Leggett and Aguinaldo Vernon, two of last year's veterans, the grid team promises much in the way of competition to the other colleges, Eisan commented.

Jefferson Pool To Be Used For College Swim Classes

Plans are being completed to obtain the Jefferson High School tank in Daly City for college swimmers, Louis G. "Dutch" Conlan said today.

Although an agreement has been signed by the college, it lacks only the signature of the high school officials. Also, an official o. k. must be obtained for use of funds to pay for use of the tank, Conlan said.

"Everything is still a little hazy on this matter," Conlan said. "But the outlook is favorable, and we hope to have everything straightened out so that news can be released by the next publication."

Intramural Sports Program Delayed Pending Survey

Pending a survey of physical equipment, the program for intramural sports has been delayed, announced Fred C. MacFarland, faculty adviser for intramural sports.

"When we know what we have to work with," MacFarland said, "the schedule will be planned to the maximum."

Before any intramural schedule can be started, staff organizations must be perfected, MacFarland also said.

Regulations Outlined As Women's Gymnasium Has Large Registration

Opened with a capacity registration of more than one thousand students, the women's gymnasium was surrounded this week with regulations designed to put the building and equipment to their fullest usage and satisfy to the utmost the interests of the women of the college.

Students meeting classes for the first time this week heard announcements concerning health examinations, attendance, times for classes, use of lockers, costume regulations, and general rules applicable to the building itself.

Health examinations, times for which were assigned during the registration process, are at present being given in Room 104 in the gymnasium under the direction of Dr. Alice Potter.

Students were warned that they are expected to attend each regular meeting of a class to complete the course satisfactorily. Participation in and knowledge of the activity, and improvement in skills are considered as a basis for grading physical education, Bertha Mae Keller, physical education instructor explained.

Class Times Adjusted

Length of the physical education classes was adjusted to allow students sufficient time to meet classes scheduled immediately following gymnasium activities in the main college building.

Lockers, assigned by instructors, may have locks which are available at the college bank or the book store, Miss Keller said.

Costumes, which for the class activities may be purchased at the college book store, also meet regulations concerning use of the showers, thereby obviating difficulties encountered in southern sections of the state. "No gang showers in San Francisco," Miss Keller emphasized.

Sports Costumes Individual

Golf, archery, riding, swimming, rifle and skating demand costumes according to the individual preference for the several accepted modes.

Notices of department business, conferences, and health examinations will be posted in the south lobby offices. Particular interest was aroused in the request for cooperation in safeguarding the building.

Students were reminded that the women's gymnasium, as well as the men's gymnasium, grew out of the bond election of two years ago, when San Francisco turned out to vote its support of the [illegible] campus. Expression of the sentiment on the part of the college for this support was voiced by Miss Keller when she said: "After five years of rambling it is nice to have a place to hang one's hat."

WAA Substitutes Spread For Usual Splash Party

Substituting for the traditional splash party, the Women's Athletic Association plans a Spread September 25 at Sigmund Stern Grove from 4:30 to 10 p.m., WAA leaders said this week.

Urged to attend are the newer students, for the purpose of the spread is to acquaint them with the WAA members, its officers and the sports that are being offered, Betty Teter, general chairman of the affair announced.

"Non-members as well as members, Freshmen and Sophomores, in fact all students are invited to attend. Further information may be obtained from any officer of WAA or the physical education instructors. Games and entertainments are being planned for the interest of everyone," Miss Teter said.

To be under discussion during the spread are the different sports, among which, field hockey has loomed the most prominent. Instructed by Aileen Kinkel, considered an expert at the sport, the game is believed to be the feminine equivalent to football: It includes all of the running and passing of football as well as the willow swinging of baseball and the shin-slugging of soccer. The more athletic type of woman will find this sport to her taste, Barbara Smith, WAA president said.

Also released by the Physical Education Department were plans for co-educational riding classes. The classes meet every Thursday afternoon at the San Francisco Riding Academy on Stanyan and Haight Streets, from 1:30 to 5 p.m. The fee is between $11 and $15 a semester.

"Many women students do not realize that they can swim free of charge at the Y.W.C.A. pool on Sutter Street on their way to the college," Bertha M. Keller, WAA adviser, said. "Classes meet at 9 and 9:30. WAA will meet at the latter time instead of the previously announced 10 a.m. Miss Kinkel has charge of Aquatics for women. Requests for water games and splash hours are already being made."

Smoker

AMS Plans Semi-Annual Frosh Stag Party Tuesday At 8 P. M.

For the first time since the history of the college, the semi-annual AMS Smoker will be limited to freshmen. The function will be held in the North Lecture Hall, Room 100, at 8 p.m. Although the college cafeteria was originally obtained for the affair, last minute complications forced the abandonment of the hall, Ted Theodus, AMS prexy released today.

Under the advice of Tom Wilson, newly appointed AMS adviser, Theodus and his secretary, Bob Thollander, have planned the program as follows:

Introductions of attending faculty members, pep talks of different sports by their respective coaches, moving pictures, and possibly the attendance of prominent athletic greats.

At this time, the college men students will get a formal introduction to the new coach, Joe Lantagne, substituting for Joe Amori. A Stanford man, Lantagne will handle soccer, boxing and instruct men's hygiene.

Among the athletic greats will be Walter "The Great" Mails, press agent for the San Francisco Seals, and Manager Frank "Lefty" O'Doul. Possibility of Ernie Smith, NBC sport broadcaster's attendance was also rumored.

Franklin P. Sewell, amiably hailed as "Doc" by his student friends, will deliver one of his famous "silly-loquies" as well as some of the Sewell System philosophy.

Highlighted will be a dancer acquired from the theatrical agency by Theodus, and a two-reeler sports short in sound, "Play Ball, America" released through the Chronicle.

Refreshments will be served, as well as a plentiful supply of smokes, Theodus said.

Northwestern Outlines Code For Spectators

EVANSTON, ILL.—(ACP)—Good sportsmanship is what players and spectators make it—and the Northwestern University Daily Northwestern has a code of its own for the sepctators.

Here is the program as recently promulgated for those who attended Wildcat basketball games:

1. Opposing players deserve the same treatment as our own players.
2. Officials may make mistakes, but they certainly deserve fair and courteous treatment.
3. Heckling of opposing players about to attempt free throws simply must not occur.
4. Good sportsmanship is as necessary in the stands as it is on the playing floor.

Frosh, Soph Women Vie In WAA Song Contest

Plans are being made for a song contest between the Freshmen and the Sophomores who are members of the Women's Athletic Association, according to Barbara Smith, president of WAA.

Each class is considered a team. Three songs are to be made up, and judged by popularity. The class submitting the best song wins. These songs are to be used for future WAA events, Miss Smith said.

Also announced was the sale of WAA sweat-shirts at the Student Book Store. "It is advisable for all women to secure one," WAA leaders warned. They are priced at $1.95 each.

Beginning Ice-Skaters To Practice In Gym

Until further notice, beginners in women's skating will meet every Friday in the women's gymnasium from 2 to 3:30 o'clock, and may practice after class until the ice-rink closes, Bertha Mae Keller, WAA adviser announced this week.

"This instruction is given to help beginners become familiar with the single rods on ice and to qualify for the Skating Club," Miss Keller said.

Winterland officials released the date for the opening to be on Saturday, September 14, hence all skating classes will have actual practice the following Friday, September 20. Men's skating as well as the coeducational class will also convene on that date.

Membership in the ice skating club is open to those in the classes. Tentative plans for the club is the annual Ice Carnival and other activities to be discussed in future meetings.

"The American University is an athletic association in which certain opportunities for study are provided for the feeble-minded." Salvadore Madrariaga.

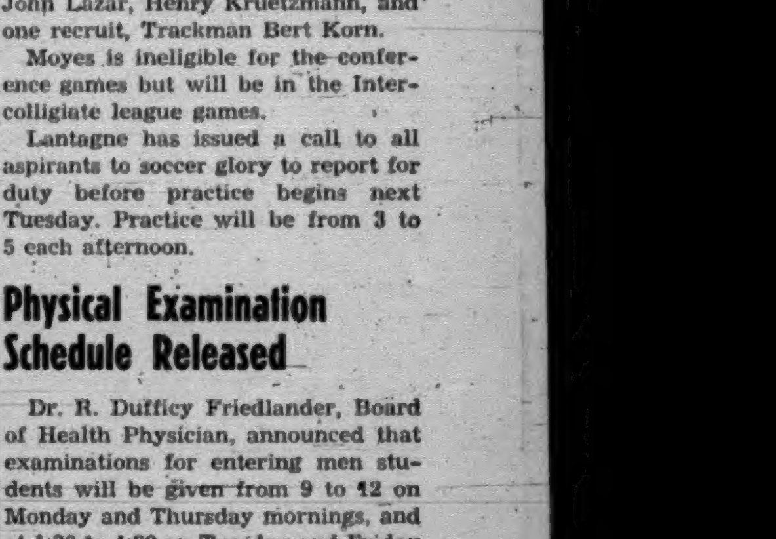
Soccer Signups Set For Tuesday

Tentative signup for this season's soccer team is scheduled for next Tuesday afternoon, September 10, announced Coach Joe Lantagne this week.

Lantagne, who is new to the college this semester, has taken over the coaching duties formerly held by Tom Wilson, head basketball mentor.

"Everything is upset at this time," Lantagne said, "and it is still too early to make any predictions about the team." Because of the new college location, many difficulties in finding practice facilities have to be ironed out, Lantagne said.

From Soccer To AMS



Tom Wilson

Next Tuesday's signup date is only tentative, Lantagne added, since lockers are being assigned this week, and he has to see how many players can be accommodated on the team.

The Ram shinkickers are members of two leagues, California Inter-collegiate Soccer League, and the northern California Junior College Conference. Among the colleges represented in these two leagues are California, Stanford, San Jose State, University of San Francisco, San Francisco State, Menlo, San Mateo, and Modesto Junior Colleges.

Despite last season's dismal fifth, Latagne hopes to show definite improvement. Part of his hopes include returning veterans Danny "Meadow-Mouse" McHugh, Ted Theodus, Dan Sweeney, Jimmy "Pirate" Moyes, John Lazar, Henry Kruetzmann, and one recruit, Trackman Bert Korn.

Moyes is ineligible for the conference games but will be in the Intercolligiate league games.

Lantagne has issued a call to all aspirants to soccer glory to report for duty before practice begins next Tuesday. Practice will be from 3 to 5 each afternoon.

Physical Examination Schedule Released

Dr. R. Dufficy Friedlander, Board of Health Physician, announced that examinations for entering men students will be given from 9 to 12 on Monday and Thursday mornings, and at 1:30 to 4:30 on Tuesday and Friday afternoons. Examinations for men will also be given from 1:30 to 4:30 on alternate Wednesday afternoons. Locations will be announced later.

The Examinations for entering women students will be given on Tuesday and Friday mornings from 9 to 12 and on Monday and Thursday afternoons from 1 to 4, and from 1 to 4 on alternate Wednesdays. Examinations for women will be held in Room 102, Women's Gym.

Physical Education Club Meets September 13

First meeting of the Physical Education and Recreation Majors Club will be held Friday, September 13, at 3 o'clock in the Lounge Room of the Women's Gymnasium. All majors in that department are eligible for membership and are invited by club leaders to attend the organizational meeting.

Voracity

Hotel Students Taxed As Crowd Invades Cafe

Students of the college Hotel and Restaurant Management Division who manage the cafeteria were swamped yesterday with an over capacity crowd of hungry students clamoring for lunch, announced Paul Wendell, division coordinator.

The entire division was employed to handle the flow of students and even a few graduates of the division who had returned were pressed into service, Wendell said.

"The division feels that the equipment in the cafeteria and kitchen will be quite adequate as soon as operation begins functioning at best form," Wendell commented.

Students of the college are asked by the hotel group to cooperate in the cafeteria by leaving the cafeteria when they have finished their lunch. "We have a seating capacity of only 320, so it is necessary to have a rapid turnover during lunch hours," Wendell disclosed.

The cafeteria is directed by Hilda Watson, instructor in restaurant management, and Ernst Hjorth, instructor in chef training.

Revised Federal Building Features Big CAA Exhibit

Revised, redesigned and filled with new United States Government displays, the Federal Building on Treasure Island is one of the outstanding attractions at the 1940 Golden Gate International Exposition.

Under the direction of Federal Commissioner George Creel, over two dozen entirely new features have been installed, a few of last year's major exhibits also have been retained, but even these are being improved or enlarged, according to Commissioner Creel.

Block Society, Chinese Club Begin Activities

Two college clubs have begun their activities this semester. Other clubs planning activities should communicate with The Guardsman in Room 134.

Block SF Society—Will hold first meeting of the semester today at one p.m. in the men's gymnasium.

Chinese Students Club—Open rally on Friday, September 13. All Chinese students are invited to attend. Time and place of the rally will be announced later.

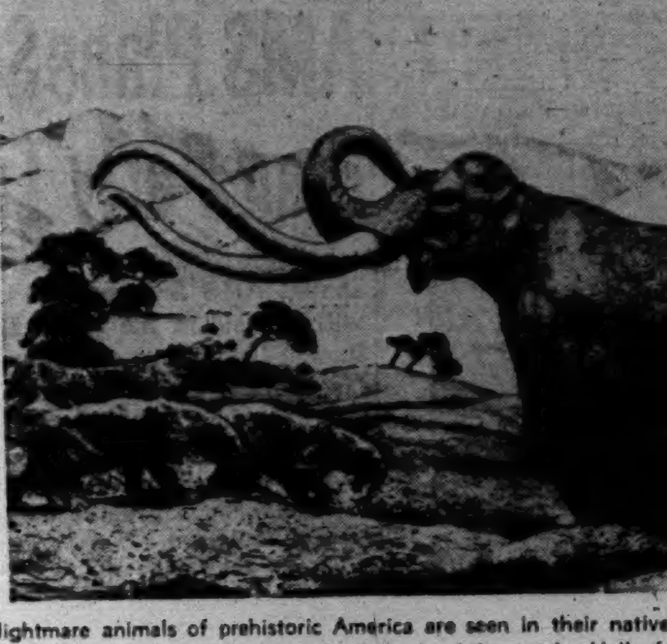
The Past In Plastics



Nightmare animals of prehistoric America are seen in their native haunts in the University of California paleontological exhibit in the Hall of Science at the Golden Gate International Exposition. This is only one of the features of a remarkable display which covers all the biological and physical sciences and presents a visualized course in the development of civilization from antediluvian times. This is a visualization of the famous La Brea asphalt pits in Los Angeles, with sabre-toothed tigers attacking a huge mammoth and her young who have become entangled in the pits.

Scenes, Animals Eons Older Than Man Portrayed At Fair

Queer living things from the dim vistas of the prehistoric past are brought to life in the University of California exhibit at the Golden Gate International Exposition. Mammoths, sabre-toothed tigers, camels, and other inhabitants of western America appear in their natural environment in a series of dioramas.

Past Recreated

The Texas of 200 million years ago, Arizona's painted desert of 150 million years past, and the death trap of the La Brea tar pits in Southern California of a mere 500,000 years back are the settings for a vivid succession of scenes of wild life.

The migrations of the human race are shown on a glass map with illuminated panels; there are pictorial explanations of the growth of plant life and colored photographs portray the varied flora of California. Living microscopic animals are projected on screens, there is an undersea gallery and relief models of the California coast line.

The advance of medicine, the influence of heredity, and the march of life from the cradle to the grave are shown in dramatic presentation of illuminated panels and in full natural colors.

Science Simply Explained

Exhibits of the physical sciences offer simple explanations of mathematical applications and the wonders of the astronomy and chemistry, while rare volumes from the Bancroft collection and the University library commemorate the 500th anniversary of the invention of printing from movable types.

College Opinion Rejects Aid, Jobs From Government

NEW YORK CITY—(ACP)—U.S. college and university students do not favor the government as a source of financial aid or as a job haven after graduation.

This is the assertion of Columbia University's journalism dean, Carl W. Ackerman; and he cites figures gained from a special survey of 15 campuses by Prof. Elmo Roper to prove his point.

"The real significance, I think, of present student opinion toward the financing of education is the opposition to government aid," Dean Ackerman said. "Students do not favor a spending-lending policy to help them make their way in the world. Only 7.4 per cent of the students interviewed considered aid by the federal or state governments as desirable. This, I think, may be interpreted as a vote of confidence in the continuation of the student-aid policies of educational institutions such as Columbia University.

"Those who have been charging that some of the leading universities in the United States have become centers of socialistic and communistic theories of government and economics should study these statistics. University students today are not applying the prevailing debt theory of political economy in their own lives, nor are they looking to the government to provide them with jobs."

Of the students under survey, 42.5 per cent preferred part-time employment; 32.3 per cent favored scholarships, and 14.5 per cent favored university or private loans. Those receptive to government aid were in the smallest group.

Replies to a negative question, asking whether there were any sources from which students should not receive aid, showed direct opposition to government generosity.

"As capable and needy students prefer part-time work to loans or scholarships," the dean said, "it may be desirable and necessary, in order to attract this type of student, for educational institutions to adjust their curricula and assist students to obtain part-time employment."

Prof. Roper's investigation of students' attitudes toward careers, Dean Ackerman continued, points further in the direction of student independence of government. Only 18.4 per cent of the men interviewed, and 9.1 per cent of the women, believed that careers in the government service offered the best opportunities. The rest expected to make their living in industry and the professions.

Book Exchange May Operate Another Week

Books may be turned into the book exchange of the Women's Service Society in Room 104 for at least another week, Mildred Bartosiewski, WSS president, commented this week.

"The Exchange is open from 8 o'clock to 4 o'clock every day," Miss Bartosiewski said. "Special attention will be tendered by the book exchange attendants to entering freshmen," she added.

"Book exchange business is booming these first weeks," Miss Bartosiewski noted, "the girls working there have their hands full."

The number of books handled by the book exchange this semester equals easily the volume carried last semester.

"Comments on the book exchange have always been favorable in the past," Miss Bartosiewski said, "we hope that we can continue to satisfy the students."

In addition to its work at the beginning of each semester on the book exchange, the WSS aids new students during registration periods and furnishes hostesses at college gatherings.

Membership in this society is invitational each semester. Its central aim is to render general service to the college.

Verrell A. Weber, athletic instructor, acts as adviser to the organization.

• Student Card Controversy
Editor, The Guardsman:

It has been brought to my mind that the policy of the college paper has been altered for students with student-body cards.

All well and good — but how about the students who cannot afford to purchase same card?

Would it be out of the question to reconsider the matter? The paper, as you know, is for all of the students and not solely for the student body card owners.

Thanking you, I am yours sincerely,

James McGreevey, Jr.

Editor's note: Allow us to point out that The Guardsman is supported and paid for by every student who holds an Associated Student card.

As to the paper being for all the students, please note the line in the upper left hand corner of page two which reads "Published Twice Weekly By The Associated Students Of San Francisco Junior College."

We wish the paper could be given to everyone, but as you must have noticed if you read the list of money budgeted in last Tuesday's edition, The Guardsman costs quite a considerable sum.

The only way every student could receive a paper would be to raise the student body dues to take care of the cost of extra copies. This would be the same as putting an additional tax on the members of the association, which is unfair and of course out of the question.

Meet The Students

Virginia is majoring in science and like Betty is interested in sports. Another of her hobbies is dramatics, so perhaps in a few years we can say we knew her when.

She thinks the building is "swell", and her favorite part of the structure is the big dome on the fourth floor where astronomy students gather to study the stars.

Virginia thinks Associated Student cards are well worth buying because they give one "so much for their money. I think everyone should buy one, because they are really worthwhile and show that the students have some spirit," Virginia said.

She doesn't approve of sororities because she feels that they are too "cliquy" and confine a person to one small group.

Virginia likes to dance to sweet music and her favorite band is Artie Shaw's.

Last but not least on the list of Meet the Students is little brown-eyed, brown-haired, Viola Miles. She is also 17 and a George Washington graduate (there must be millions of them).

Viola is also majoring in science. She finds the women's gym her favorite part of the campus.

She is glad to see the radio receiving sets in all classrooms because Washington has the same set up and she thinks it is "swell."

Viola, unlike her chum Virginia, is in favor of sororities because they acquaint girls with each other and make their college life fuller.

Miss Miles loves to dance to sweet music (she also favors Artie Shaw), and thinks that jitterbugging is very crude and undignified.

Bing Crosby gets her vote as her favorite singer.

There we are, three of the college's newest coeds (phone numbers furnished on request.) Next week, we'll talk to some of the fellows, darn it.

ONE of the smartest and wisest political moves ever made by this country was the transferring of 50 old age destroyers to Canada in exchange for 99 year leases on English possessions in American waters.

Adolph Hitler's blitzkrieg methods have shown the people of the United States that the two oceans on each side of the country do not make us impregnable as was once believed.

A defensive ring of air and naval bases around the United States is just what this country will need for her future protection.

Now if America and Americans will continue to stay awake instead of returning to slumber, we never need worry about the roar of bombing planes overhead being anything but a flight of United States ships on flying maneuvers.

THOSE dizzy Mexicans sure go in for politics in a big way. It isn't enough to elect one Congress to run the country, Mexico has to elect two. (Maybe it is a good idea but it sounds kind of crazy).

Several people have been killed and wounded in street fighting between the two factions but the Mexican police say everything is quiet and under control. Perhaps that is quiet for Mexico.

It's a good thing the United States doesn't fool around with two Congresses for it would probably take us about five years to pass the conscription bill by which time Hitler would be putting his feet on the President's desk in the White House.

COLLEGE

PHELAN AVENUE is fast becoming an Indianapolis speedway to members of the college who have the good fortune to own automobiles.

Last week there were two collisions between speeding vehicles right in front of the college. Luckily enough, these accidents were not serious and no one was hurt. With a little less luck however, some students might even now be lying in a hospital bed.

There is no reason why automobiles should speed along Phelan Avenue as if they were going to a fire. The space for passage is none too large with cars parked along both curbs.

We are not concerned about the people who get their cars battered through their own negligence, but it is important to realize that if the attempt to convert Phelan Avenue into another Bayshore Boulevard continues, some student is likely to be seriously injured.

Surely the students who have racing blood in their veins can find some other road that is not a busy thoroughfare to give vent to their passion for speed.

ADVANCE reports seem to indicate that the college judicial committee is well organized and off to an excellent start.

The judicial committee is usually the least liked of any student committee because it has the hard task of trying to keep the students in some semblance of order. When any headache concerning student cards or admission at games or dances arises, it is usually referred to the judicial committee.

Thankless job though it may be, the committe's work is important, and it is a pleasure to see them off to a good start. Let's hope they continue in this manner.

NOTE to the welfare committee: It's all right to go ahead and investigate the possibilities of a college year book for such a publication is needed, but we suggest you complete your unfinished business of last semester first.

We seem to recall that a student questionaire was given to 1300 students on the relative values of extracurricular activities. Although the results are now completely tabulated they have never been announced to the college. After all the trouble it took to give and tabulate the questionaire, you might as well publish the results.

THE U. S. Army has gone in for streamlined recruiting methods. Currently on exhibition on Treasure Island is a mobile recruiting station consisting of a very nicely furnished 1940 trailer.

Inside the trailer are comfortable seats, typewriters, and recruiting information.

Evidently the army feels that it is easier to convince someone of the merits of the army, if the sales talk is given in a comfortable streamlined trailer.

THE Congress of the United States certainly takes the prize for the biggest collection of deadheads ever assembled under one roof.

It is of course understandable that there is bound to be a difference of opinion on such a controversial subject as conscription, but what makes the situation deplorable is that the Congressmen insist upon playing politics at a time when every part of the nation should be working together.

After all there is a time and place for everything, and this is most definitely the time for adequate preparations for the future defense of the nation.

To hear some of the members of Congress talk, conscription means the end of democracy. This is utterly ridiculous. Naturally such a bill will not be completely democratic and the people will for the time being lose a slight amount of freedom. If however, the draft method is not used to strengthen the defenses of the nation, we are liable to find ourselves in a much more precarious position, one in which we would have no democracy at all.

A year ago we would have been called a rabble rouser and an alarmist for voicing such views. The last year has shown us all that the greatest mistake in the world is unpreparedness.

Unfortunately our Congress isn't thinking right now in the best interests of the country but merely for the best interests of their own personal skins. Of course it is idealistic, but we can't help wishing we had some statesmen who were really willing to help the country instead of plunging it deeper into the mire of stupidity and petty politics.

Progress

Building Will Be Completed In Two Weeks

"The college building proper, according to promises of the building commission, will be finished within two weeks from now," Registrar J. Paul Mohr said today.

All blackboards and other fixtures will be completely installed by them and workmen will vacate the building, he added.

Parking Problem Considered

A plan, to be submitted by Commissioner Richard E. Doyle, chairman of the physical properties of the Board of Education, whereby Phelan Avenue would be widened in order to permit diagonal parking and two lanes of traffic, was also mentioned by Mohr.

Another plan for parknig facilities lies in the possible acquisition from the city of the level ground north of the building.

Beautification of the grounds about the building will be speeded up because bids for shrubs are to be received within a few days, Mohr said.

Present plans call for the planting of lawns on both sides of the sidewalk which surrounds the college building. Wild grass will be planted on the hill, sloping down to the gymnasiums.

Gym Lights Soon

Work is also being rushed toward the early completion of paths, and roads, as well as for the early installation of lighting facilities both within the gymnasiums, and without.

At the close of the Golden Gate International Exposition, a mosaic will be received by the college for the interior beautification of the building. The mosaic is now being executed by WPA artist Herman Volz, at the Fair in the Art in Action section in the Palace of Fine Arts.

Also, Mohr said, sometime in the future, the two blank wall spaces at the entrance of the building will be adorned with egg tempera paintings.

Luckless Friday Fails To Scare

Ducking under two ladders, D. D. Dripless Zoop ambled down the hallway of the main building (no other) this a.m. with a "Hyar, my fran'!"

He looked over his right shoulder at the moon (this college has every modern facility, from ladders to moons) and squeaked, "What nonsense, eh?" Arching his scalp as he took a match from his wig to light three Coll Caddies With A Lift, Deedeedee added, "Utter nonsense!"

"Whatiz?" we quizzed, trying to dodge the smoke screen.

Whiffed he, "This ancient belief in bad luck omens, har-r-rumph—such as Friday the 13th jinx. I'm not superstitious, you know."

With wary eyes, we watched a black cat zither across the hall.

"N-n-n-neith-ther are we," declared we boldly, as we turned back to D. D. D. But he was gone.

Far down the hall we heard a distant, "Help! Murder! There's a black cat in the building!"

AWS Plans Future Events To Hold To Tradition

With Orientation Week activities concluded by yesterday's tea for new women students at the college, the Associated Women Students organization is looking forward to several future activities at dates to be decided later, Virginia Hubbert, AWS president, declared today.

"Our plans are still quite indefinite," Miss Hubbert said. "However, we are considering some sort of affair for parents of the college women similar to last semester's Sunday afternoon tea."

Among the affairs traditionally sponsored by the AWS are the tea held in honor of seniors at the various high schools in the city and the last women's activity for the semester as either a tea or a rally, she said.

Time Between Classes Too Short; Needs Adjusting

SINCE the beginning of classes, the matter of five minutes between periods and 55 minute classes has grown from a matter of small moment to one of some importance.

The inadvisability of such a system becomes more evident as the days pass.

Complaints have come from both students and faculty alike on this subject, so it is in order that it be discussed here.

There is little or no reason why this college should differ from all others in the bay and peninsula area by having 55 minute class periods instead of the customary 50 minute period. The University of California, Stanford, San Jose State, San Francisco State, and San Mateo Junior College all have class periods of 50 minute duration. Why should there be a different schedule here?

It is not so much the point of 55 minute classes that is objectionable, but rather the five minutes between periods which are all too short.

For five years the college had the regular 10 minute intermission used in other colleges and it sufficed very well. The need for changing the status quo is not at all apparent.

It can hardly be said that now, because we have our own building, the 10 minute intermission is unneccessary, for if that be true, such a regulation should have been put into effect at Powell Street and Galileo, for there too we were in but one building at a time.

Nor can it be said that the extra five minutes in class gives the student that much more education. The extra five minutes will hardly teach a person anything more than he learned the preceding 50 minutes.

If there were any necessity for such a procedure, or if any good were derived from such a system, perhaps it would be understandable. But there is not. In fact quite the contrary exists.

The general consensus among the students is that to go from one room to another any where in the main building (from the cafeteria to the library excepted) takes fully five minutes when walking very quickly—but who can walk quickly through our overcrowded halls? This does not take into consideration the fact that a student may want to consult the instructor about something in the lecture or a homework assignment. IF A STUDENT DOES THIS, HE MAKES BOTH HIMSELF AND THE INSTRUCTOR LATE FOR THE NEXT CLASS. Then too, while walking to class, a student may meet a friend and want to chat for a moment or two, or perhaps the friend may want to know the class assignment. This would make both parties late for their next class.

Surely it is not the purpose of this institution to keep students from having an occasional chat about some every day topic while on the way to class.

Moreover by not giving a student time enough to speak to the instructor after class upon some matter pertaining to the education of the student, the whole purpose of the college is being defeated.

There is the faculty point of view also. No instructor likes to have to grab his papers hurriedly, ignore the questions of his pupils and rush to his next class. If the instructor stops to answer the questions, he is late for his next lecture. This puts him in the rather embarrassing position of having to walk into class late, through no fault of his own, thus setting a poor example for his pupils to follow.

Even after class has settled down and the instructor has begun his lecture, some students who chanced upon an acquaintance in the hall come filtering in, breaking the trend of thought of both the instructor and the class.

What is the object of this curtailment of student and faculty freedom? What is it seeking to accomplish? Why must it continue when it is opposed by both students and faculty?

The Guardsman, as the official organ of the Associated Students of the college, feels that it is only right that these questions be asked and that the administration take action to rescind the present schedule.

Panel Discussion On National Defense Monday

Student self-government part in national defense will be the theme of the panel discussion which starts Monday, September 16, at 12 o'clock in Room 254.

President Archibald Cloud and Mr. Alden Smith, instructors are on the panel discussion group. Lyle Shultz, Jean Arnold, Alden Thorogood, and Mary Frances Malone make up the committee which is headed by chairman Ed Hardies.

Each member will give a five minute talk and then turn the discussion over to the group at large. The panel discussion is not open to all students but will be limited to those who hold college offices, Smith disclosed.

Addresses by the students will be followed by corrective advice by President Cloud, according to tentative plans.

The panel discussion is part of the Political Science 2A course.

Students Go To Work As NYA Funds Arrive

Funds for NYA employment arrived last Wednesday and many NYA students were put to work, Edward H. Redford, college NYA director announced today.

Also pointed out by Redford was the fact that the time-keeping procedure for NYA students is "drasticially different" from last year.

Main point of difference lies in the fact that all time schedules must be turned in the day after the payroll period ends, he said. Since this payroll ends October 6, all time schedules must be turned in by October 7.

"If this is not done, the students will be dropped from the NYA payroll," he added.

Another new regulation is that, students can not work more than four hours in any one college day, nor more than seven hours in any non-college day, according to Redford.

Each day, also, when the supervisor of each NYA student records the time the student has worked, the supervisor must initial the recorded time.

New Officers

Thorogood Wins Sophomore Class Presidency

Freshmen of the college took the lead in the class elections last Tuesday morning with a total of more than 200 votes for the office of president, and nearly that number for the other offices, while the lowest number of votes was recorded for the high sophomore class.

Chosen for class leaders at these elections are the following:

High sophomore — Alden Thorogood, president; Mercedes Dahleen, vice-president; secretary not elected.

"There was a fairly good representation at the class meetings," Mary Frances Malone, election chairman, commented. "It is interesting to note that nearly every semester, it is the low freshman class that votes in the largest numbers. This semester's incoming frosh were no exception, and it is hoped they will keep up their class interest."

Class nominations and elections were held after the 11 o'clock rally last Tuesday.

Biggest College Chiseler Found

By NORA BAKER

Biggest chiseler about the whole college is the man who works to the east of the building on a huge piece of Indiana limestone.

His name is Rissiieri Bona, but as he works away at the huge hunk of limestone he is only paving the way for the artist who will finish the job, Fred Homster, W.P.A. project artist.

The figure upon which Bona works will someday take on the brilliant features of Thomas A. Edison, the wizard of Menlo Park.

Also to share the limelight with "Eddy" will be the limestone figure of Leonardo Da Vinci. Leonardo has already come to life under the skillful hands of artist Homster, but he still reposes over on Treasure Island.

What a feud there will be when he arrives on the scene, for the beaming features of Thomas A. Edison stand for modern science, while Leonardo Da Vinci can only put in his two cents worth for ancient science.

Noon Employment Open To Men Students

Opportunities for noon employment with compensation and meals for men students of the college was announced by Dean Edwin C. Browne, today.

All those desiring such employment are requested to file their applications in the dean's office, Room 123, as soon as possible.

In a commentary upon the actions of the members of the student body, Dean Browne expressed the opinion: "Students have adjusted themselves remarkably well to their new rooms and conditions in our new quarters."

In the future when landscaping and lawns have been completed, the dean said he was anxious that all students feel a personal pride in them.

Also pointed out by the dean was the warning that students who misuse their student body cards will be classed as serious offenders.

"Strict regulation of the use of student body cards is especially necessary at colleges dances because of the crowded conditions," Dean Browne said.

College dances will not be held in the women's gymnasium until lighting facilities are installed, he said. It was originally intended to use the gymnasium for all Associated Student dances other than the Sophomore formal.

Social Activities

Low Frosh Semi-Formal Dance At Palace Tonight

Sponsored by the Low Fresman class, the first dance of the new semester will be paced by the music of Bob Saunders' orchestra at the Palace Hotel's Gold Room tonight, from 9 p.m. until the stroke of 12.

Faculty To Attend

Announcing particulars of the event, Jean Arnold, chairman of the social committee, revealed that Dr. and Mrs. Archibald J. Cloud, Dean and Mrs. Edwin C. Browne, Mr. and Mrs. J. Graham Sullivan and Dean of Women Margaret Dougherty will be in attendance.

"We are also sure," Miss Arnold said, "that many other prominent faculty members will be present."

Warning On Cards Issued

Emphasizing the fact that admission will be by Associated Student cards only, with one card serving to pass a couple, Miss Arnold announced that an identification committee will be stationed at the doors for the purpose of checking on the cards.

"Several warnings have been issued already against the lending of student cards to unauthorized persons," Miss Arnold asserted, "and so any cards found in the possession of anyone save their owners will be promptly confiscated."

Urging students to attend tonight's dance, Miss Arnold viewed it as the beginning of a new college social life amid new surroundings.

"We hope everyone will make the first dance of the first semester at the new campus a spirited start toward making that semester a memorable one in college history," she said.

Petitions To Graduate Should Be Filed Soon

"All students who are expecting to graduate in January are requested to file their petitions for graduation in the registrar's office, as soon as possible," Mary Jane Learnard, assistant registrar, announced today.

Of equal importance, according to Miss Learnard, is the fact that all incompletes incurred by students during the 1940 spring term, must be removed by Friday, September 27.

Yesterday, all students who had not procured their blue, stamped certificate of registration, cards, were excluded from classes by their instructors. All students who were excluded from class yesterday, will not be readmitted again until they are able to present their cards.

"Therefore," Miss Learnard said, "students should have their blue registration cards in their possession at all times, so that they may present them when requested to do so by their instructors."

Civil Service Exam Data To Be Posted

All college students who are interested in taking a United States Civil Service examination should watch the bulletin board across from the college bank in regard to examination particulars, Lloyd Luckmann, instructor, said today.

Requirements for taking the exams, and the time for filing of applications are posted on the board.

The tests are open competitive examinations required for city, state, and government positions, which include various fields, Luckmann added.

Hotel Division Solves Cafeteria Rush Problem

Satisfactory adjustment to a rush business are being made by members of the Hotel and Restaurant Division in the college cafeteria, Paul Wendell, coordinator of the division, revealed today.

"Our intake is equivalent to a commercial restaurant's intake of $500 a day," Wendell declared. "Of course, we are a non-profit organization, so one can see what crowds we are handling."

It is estimated, Wendell said, that from 2,500 to 3,000 persons use cafeteria facilities daily.

The college offers the only two year training course in restaurant and hotel management in the country, he added.

AMS Bonfire September 19

Lack of facilities have forced a definite cancellation of the semi-annual Associated Men Students' smoker, announced Ted Theodus, AMS president. In place of the smoker, Theodus has tentative plans for a bon-fire on September 19, the night before the football game with Placer Junior College.

Bon-Fire Open To All

"While the smoker was restricted to men students, the bon-fire will be open to all students of the college," Theodus said. Refreshments that were to be furnished for the smoker will be on hand to assure a quantity of food, according to the AMS president.

The program is more or less of a pep rally, Theodus indicated. He promised to have on hand Ernie Smith, and at least one outside football coach, probably George Malley of the University of San Francisco. Also part of the program will consist of introducing the college coaching staff with a few words from each.

If present plans are successful, Theodus expected a large turnout for the affair. "In the past the smoker was always well attended and this will be bigger and better than the smoker and is not all stag," he remarked.

The bon-fire is to be held at night in between the two gymnasiums, Theodus said.

Student Card Admission

Theodus commented that one student body card entitles every person attending to refreshments. Malley, the college coaches, some of the college football players, Ernie Smith and other will probably be present. He claimed that it will be well attended if present indications can be taken as a criterion.

Faculty Association To Honor President Cloud

To honor President Archibald J. Cloud, members of the Faculty Association will meet in the college cafeteria at dinner October 3, at 6 o'clock, according to Lloyd Luckmann, president of the group.

Honored guests will include Dr. Monroe Deutch, Provost of the University of California, who will give the address of the evening, and Timothy Pflueger, college architect, and Paul Mohr, registrar, will also speak, Luckmann said.

All faculty members and their wives are invited to attend the dinner, following which there will be a tour of the building.

Dinner will be prepared and served by students in the college Hotel and Restaurant Management division, under direction of Paul Wendell, coordinator of the division, and Mrs. Hilda Watson, in charge of the dining room.

This will be the first affair of its kind to be held in the new building, Luckmann pointed out, and heralds the many activities planned by the Faculty Association. It follows a tea held last Wednesday in honor of the faculties of the Denman Junior High School and Balboa High School.

Future plans of the association include meetings of the various teacher organizations, Luckmann said, and requested that members of the faculty interested in the organizations act on a reception committee.

President Cloud's Address Marks Keynote Of College

EDITOR'S NOTE: The following address was given by President Archibald J. Cloud last Tuesday at the Associated Student rally. The text of President Cloud's address is reprinted here because of the excellent content material contained therein.

IT IS a source of much satisfaction to me to have an opportunity of addressing you at this family gathering today. We of the faculty are happy to extend the warm hand of fellowship to President Lyle Shultz and the entire membership of the student body.

I am deeply conscious of the fact that this occasion is historic. It is our first assemblage on our own campus, marking another milestone in our forward march.

We should indeed be grateful to our generous fellow-citizens who have made it possible for us to meet in these magnificent surroundings and under circumstances so fully conducive to growth and development as these conditions are. Numbered among these citizens are men and women whom you see every day in the home, the store, or on the street. Numbered among them are your parents, your friends, your neighbors; but many, many thousands of them can be no more than dim shadowy figures whom you know not by name or in person, and who, on their side, know you not, either, by name or in person.

Yet they have given freely of their money, have often drawn upon very slender financial resources, to supply the funds in the form of public taxation, through which this site has been secured and these buildings erected and equipped. These outlays have now reached an appreciable sum. Speaking of the buildings, without reference to the grounds, an investment of approximately $2,000,000 is represented at this stage, while an equal expenditure will be required to bring the educational plant to completion.

In these respects, as well as in making adequate provision for instruction on a free tuition basis, your fellow-citizens have manifested a decisive interest in your welfare. Why this interest? Why this concern?

The answer is not far to seek. They know full well that the human resources of a nation constitute its primary wealth. They are aware that you form an important part of these human resources and that you are soon to enter into your inheritance of complete citizenship rights and duties under the banner of the Republic. They cherish the belief that education is the most effective means yet devised through which you can have been made ready to undertake those rights and duties.

Our forefathers had the courage and vision to create a system of free, universal, popular education, without precedent in any other land. By setting up this plan, in accord with the ideals of a new social order, they gave America her chief contribution to civilization. They foresaw a people living happily and usefully because the individuals constituting the society had learned through educational processes to conduct their personal and community affairs with the highest degree of intelligence and morality.

It will soon be—yea, even now is—your responsibility to prove in your own persons the values of education in relation to these underlying tenets and principles of the democratic way of life. It will be your part to demonstrate in your daily lives that, as a direct outcome of education, men and women can be free and yet can learn to work together for the common good under wise direction; that they can obey intelligently such rules as are necessary to promote good government, can live on a plane of goodwill, tolerance, and decency, and can control their economic affairs without injury to the well-being of their neighbors.

I am firmly encouraged to hold confidence in your ability to meet this challenge. I am convinced that, in due season, you will make full restitution to your fellow-citizens for the benefits they have conferred on you—restitution not in dollars and cents, gold or silver, or any other material thing, but in the fruits of good citizenship.

You are even now citizens of San Francisco Junior College. It is a city in itself, in the conduct of which you have immediate possibilities of participation as evidenced in the activities of the very Association whose members I am now addressing. Capitalize on your opportunity! Take advantage of the facilities and services provided by the College which are open to you to use to the full extent of your capacity to learn, and your willingness to profit from the educational offerings. Use these facilities and services, but refrain, as good citizens of San Francisco Junior College, from abusing them! Guard and cherish these buildings and grounds.

But—above all—ever carry in mind and heart sentiments such as these:

How much America has done for me!

What may I do to repay my debt to my good homeland?

Bus Service For College Poor; Needs Improvement

WHEN the rainy season begins in earnest this year, everyone forced to travel on the 10th Avenue Municipal bus to and from college is not going to have much regard for city transportation facilities. Bus service, as it now stands, requires about a four-block walk from the nearest bus stop to the college. As the bus changes its course on the return route, two more blocks are added to the distance when leaving the college.

This situation would have perhaps minor significance if the Balboa Park district were free from rain. The walk would not hurt anyone. But a five to seven minute walk in a downpour is hardly palatable. In addition, the distance from Judson Avenue, along Phelan Avenue, to the college may only be traversed by one of two dubious ways: one may either walk along the dirt pathway where a sidewalk isn't or the street gutter. Of course many are now taking a short cut through the campus grounds, but a good rain should void that route.

In one of the first issues of The Guardsman a student wrote to the publication complaining of this transportation difficulty. The first rain should bring a deluge of similar letters.

A patent solution to the problem is to effect a rerouting of the bus line. Such an action is not as drastic as it may seem, and the amount of people that would materially benefit from it would appear to furnish ample justification.

Starting the machinery for this change, however is another matter. The administrative officials of the college are in the best position to negotiate with the Municipal Railway Company. A reasonably swift solution to the question would undoubtedly be appreciated by a sizeable portion of the college.

Meet The Students

By Eve Burkey

THIS week, readers of this column are in for a treat. Rarely does an opportunity to go behind the scenes and breathe down an interviewer's neck present itself so early in life. But, inasmuch as nothing is too good for Meet the Students patrons, just such a golden moment is given herein . . .

Closing one eye and plucking at random through the hall . . .

"Miss Wong," politely, "may I have the honor of an interview?"

"No! she snarled, showing the benefits of a massage with Ipana, and strode off mouthing dire warnings as to the foolhardiness of following her.

Icy terror chilling our heart but unfaltering in our duty we crept warily behind the Cub, seized her gently by the hair and dragged her to a vacant lecture room.

When she came to, Miss Wong was in a far more agreeable mood.

"I'll talk," she breathed grimly. . .

An hour or so later, as she unsuspectedly stopped for breath, Miss Wong was stumped by "Name?" "Theo or even Teddy to my friends and bill collectors. You may call me Theodora."

She slapped viciously at a fly who had perched nearby and was listening wide-eyed to the conversation.

"How tall are you?"

"Don't get personal," said Miss Wong with righteous indignation. The fly giggled hoarsely (any simil. to a pun l. or d. is p. c.) and she smacked him. Breathing somewhat audibily from her exertion, Miss Wong sobbed piteously, "I'm five foot two but nobody will believe me . . . " The fly patted her shoulder tenderly and she smiled wistfully at him.

Then came the question of the hour. "How do you like the new building?"

"I like it fine. I like attending classes in a single building much better than rambling around to a dozen places. Who doesn't?"

"Are you athletic? Do you dance or jitterbug?"

Horace nudged her and Miss Wong woke with a start. She confessed to a passion for basketball but denied the more heinous charge. "I jitterbug," said she, "only when I have to." "Icky," buzzed Horace and dodged.

The Spectator

TEAMING Ronald Colman and Ginger Rogers together in a photoplay would seem slightly incongruous at first glance. The dignified, stately Mr. Colman, remembered chiefly for his magnificent pretending in such successes as Lost Horizon, Prisoner of Zenda, Light That Failed, etc., would seem hardly suitable to co-star with the light, sparkling, vivacious Miss Rogers, undeniably one of the screen's top comediennes. The combination of Colman and Rogers clicks, however, with great gusto in Lucky Partners which just goes to show what an expert director, with the assistance of a good story, can produce even with stars of differing personality traits.

Lucky Partners is a slightly naughty comedy adapted from a French farce by the well-known Sacha Guitry. Sacha's plays are certainly blazing challenges to the dictatorial cutting of Censor Will Hayes. That the censoring and curbing of its rather ribald theme has not weakened the film, is a tribute to scenarist, director, and the acting talents of the stars. Lucky Partners emerges as a grand piece of entertainment with dialogue that sparkles, and laughs that are sustained from fade-in to fade-out.

The plot traces the adventures of a painter (Colman) who encounters a charming book-shop owner (Rogers). They pool their cash to purchase a sweepstake ticket, Colman goes through with his end of the transaction only on the promise of the girl that she will go on a trip with him before she marries her sweetheart (Jack Carson). She accepts the proposition, because she believes in a superstitious manner that Colman will bring her luck. So the strange pre-honeymoon trip is taken. Poor Mr. Carson tags along wondering what it's all about. Complications pile up until Ronald and Ginger find they are in love, and Carson is forced to retreat.

Able support is furnished by Spring Byington, Hugh O'Connell, Cecilia Loftus, and Harry Davenport. The aforementioned Jack Carson, who is gradually developing into a first-rate comedian, comes close to stealing the film. The principals, themselves, excel with brisk, human portrayals.

Lucky Partners is unreservedly recommended. It has verve, sparkle, comedy and two grand leads to pursue the tangled skeins of a laugh-provoking plot.

Lucky Partners is the first of the new Fall crop of motion pictures. The Spectator will endeavor in its next column to forecast some of the cinematic highlights in this new season.

On The Feminine Side

WITH the Low Frosh semi-formal at the Palace Hotel's Gold Ballroom coming up tonight, there is a constant undercurrent of puzzled feminine voices all over the campus. Two questions are being heard everywhere women gather. "What are you going to wear?" "What on earth shall I wear?"

Since to our minds the saddest words of all are not "It might have been" but instead "Oh, why did I wear this dress," we've been hounding college women, trying to discover what they're planning to wear tonight. Maybe some frosh will be helped to decide on her own outfit by knowing what others are wearing.

Jean Arnold, Associated Students vice-president, is going to wear a navy and white polka dot taffeta formal. It's edged in white ribbon about the hemline and its only adornment is found in two snowy white bows at the neckline.

Dorothy Trood, former AS vice-president, has been won over to the street length dress contingent. She will be sporting a crepe dress in this season's sensational brown. With short sleeves, full skirt, and a close fitting bodice, her dress will be topped by a small brown toque.

Another of the devotees of the street length dancing dress will be Edith Callaghan, secretary of the Associated Students. "Gina" will wear a violet blue crepe with matching glass elephants in a necklace and bracelet set. From all accounts, it should be very amusing and very smart. Oh yes, she'll have a tiny black sailor to complete her costume.

Very different is the semi-formal which Marian MacKillop, president of Alpha Phi Omega sorority, will wear. Made of silvery brocade embroidered with varicolored flowers, the dress has a wide, flaring skirt and tight bodice. A novel touch will be found in her matching slippers and bag.

Anita Welt, last semester's high frosh vice-president, will be clad in a simply made black taffeta semi-formal. Her princesse style frock will be adorned only by a strand of pink beads, and she will probably match her necklace with a pink velvet bow in her hair.

A street length black jersey will be chosen by Mercedes Dahleen, high sophomore vice-president. Very ultra it sounds, too, with its newer than new side saddle draped effect and its smart pearl necklace and bracelet.

Associated Women Students President Virginia Hubbert will also wear a short date dress. She is probably going to wear a simple beige jersey dress, banded in grosgrain and featuring a drawstring waistline. A huge natural leghorn trimmed in brown will complete the ensemble.

Of course, all this is very tentative, feminine nature being what it is. Anyhow, we hope that you'll be helped a little and, above all, that you'll have a super time!

Balancing the accounts almost half in favor of semi-formals and half in favor of street length dresses is Barbara Brown, Phi Beta Rho president, who is a member of the former division. Barbara is planning to wear a red, low waisted formal with one of those huge, billowing skirts so popular this season. Since she is known primarily for her impeccably tailored clothes and excellent taste, it is doubtful that she will wear any jewelry of any sort.

Shots At RAMdom . . .

IT will be the policy of this column always to bring to you the latest reports on the latest productions or momentous events at the latest possible time. In keeping with this policy, we heartily endorse the titilative, tuneful revue, Meet the People. Unfortunately the show closes tomorrow night, but you still have time to see it—if any seats are left.

Most novel bit in the production depicts a graveyard scene wherein five, gentlemen,—you'll know them if you follow popular music—namely: Chopin, Beethoven, Tschaikowsky, Dubussy, and Ravel, are picketing Offenbach in the best traditions of Labor. No bricks or bottles were thrown, however. The Big Five chant that Jacques (Henceforth we shall use first names to demonstrate our knowledge of music.) is unfair to defunct dispensers of classics because modern decomposers had not yet seen fit to introduce him into the Big Ten. All is resolved, however, when a young man wanders onto the scene and sets Orpheus to somnolent dance tempo.

A scene like the latter causes a man to reflect on the injustices of the world. How different would have been the lot of these men and their heirs if the ASCAP had had its beginnings in Ludwig's time. Present day descendants of Peter Iljitch would reap untold dividends from Moon Love, Our Love, The Isle of May, etc. Offsring of Claude Achille and Maurice could do likewise with My Reverie and The Lamp is Low. The Breeze and I, Playmates, and—but this sort of thing could go on indefinitely, in the same indefinite sort of way. Anyway, students, be on the alert the next time you hear any popular music with even the faintest spark of real melody. Some such thing as My Dreamy Danube Dallience might be taken flat for flat from some such thing as Antonson's Fugue in F Minor for strings. Who knows, next week you might even be swaying to Richard Strauss' Thus Spake Zarathustra at the St. Francis on the Palace.

While on the subject of the classics, could some well-versed person advise us of the title of a recent composition; it's all about somebody losing something somewhere. We think it was written in B Flat.

A CRITICAL role is not always a pleasant one, but sometimes it is very necessary for the general well-being of—well, for one thing, the critic; he has to vent his spleen once in a while. We are always the last ones to be critical; but when any system strikes, even in the most subtle way, at American foreign policy, we must cry out. It is with sadness that we must poke at crooked finder at the college cafeteria. Perhaps its defection is innocent. We hope so.

There is a tacit agreement, though at times it bobs up rather ostentatiously, in this country that Britain is a bit of all right. Anything English should be welcomed with open arms, even Gertrude Lawrence. With the exceptions of Noel Coward, General Ironsides, C. Aubrey Smith, and tea, the most typical British institution is crumpets. Snubbing crumpets is tantamount to snapping your fingers in the pudgy countenance of Winston Churchill. Serious, what? Well, students and oolong-doting faculty members, we do not like to term the cafeteria anti-British, but it does not serve crumpets! True, it serves coffee in accordanee with the "good neighbor" policy, but that does not compensate for its slight to the British and its undermining of our foreign policy.

TO further the work begun last week by Congress' coruscation of legislative brilliance, we feel that the following suggestions—we're in a suggestive mood today—will be on inestimable value to recruiting stations should conscription be delayed: 1. Place Kate Smith on every other street corner to sing God Bless America (wonder what ever happened to the Star-Spangled Banner?). 2. (a) Attire all the little Miss Poughkeepsies etc. in two-piece bathing suits. (b) With a placard reading, "Broaden your education in the army," stand them before the door of every recruiting office.

Win With Willkie? While Thinking Gets Advice

Willkie For President

Editor, The Guardsman:

Like many others, I am a supporter of Wendell Willkie and would like to see a "Willkie for President" club formed in S.F.J.C.

Let's hear from some more of you Willkie boosters regarding the club.

Yours for Willkie,
—J. W.

Editor's Note: It is doubtful if you will be able to accomplish much in the way of promoting Mr. Willkie in a college where a majority of the students are under 21. You are welcome to try however, although it might be better to join a Willkie club outside the college and plug for the Republican candidate where it would do some good.

To The Ivory Tower!

Editor, The Guardsman:

In reading Ram's Horn in the September 6 issue of The Guardsman, I find you well complimented on your fine work in publishing such a super-periodical. So just to break the monotony I'm going to add a dash of cold water in the form of constructive criticism.

In your column While Thinking in September third's edition of this paper, you quoted a sign outside of the Embassy Theatre on Market Street. I think this sign, slightly reworded, should pertain to this publication:

"We do not print campaign, war, or political news. Read your daily newspaper or listen to the radio for foreign developments. We believe a school paper is for the entertainment and enjoyment of the school and has no use for political or foreign propaganda."

Any day we can pick up a newspaper and read of Hitler's vandalism or of America's supposed vulnerability.

A school periodical is published basically for entertainment and information concerning that school, its student body, and its relative interests.

What do you say we keep it that way?

Sincerely yours,
Jack A. Cederlund

Editor's Note

You evidently read rather hastily. As a matter of fact no one claimed we were a "super" periodical. It does so happen however that we are rated by our press as-

By Kei Hori

As any San Franciscan who lives in San Francisco long enough and has been living in San Francisco during the duration of the Fair would do, we went into the Palace of Fine Arts, bringing our collegiate minds and thoughts with us. Wandering aimlessly about (as any non-art appreciative character would do), we suddenly found ourselves before the massive mural—the one which is to be a part of our library—and Diego Rivera. So what has Diego got to do with sports? Well, whilst we were looking at the massive mess, a few things caught our eye—there were two figures, clad in white bathing suits, both executing flawless dives. If they aren't dead ringers for our Helen Crlenkovich and formerly our Pat Robinson—. Of course, neither figures had the Fairmont emblem on their suits, but . . .

There Was An Athelete

Also at the Fine Arts Building was Douglas Fairbanks Sr.'s "Three Musketeers." There was an athlete, by golly. His cavorting was at its best during the year when "Musketeers" was being made. Tumbling was his best assest, which made us wonder why we don't have a tumbling team. The college has some new mats, why not use them? (Or have we been seeing too many moom pitchers?)

Call Of The Lucre

News from reliable sources gives us the inside dope on why the two skate stars of the college, the Galbraith boys, Murray and Sheldon, have not registered this semester. It seems that the "call of the filthy lucre" was greater than the lust to learn. At any rate, when you chance upon the Ice Follies again, look in the program for the two Galbraiths. According to the grapevine, they are getting enough between them to buy a new car '41 model in two months.

The Barbecue To Draw Crowd

From the inside come claims that "The Barbecue" is to expect a capacity crowd. Sigmund Stern Grove, incidentally is not too far from the college. Games, entertainment, songs—practically everything but men is promised for the women who attend. (Apologies, Barbara Smith).

Explanations

A letter to Mr. Dick Friendlich columnist, The Chronicle:

Dear Mr. Friendlich: The difference between an external and an internal publicity department is that the external publicity dept. takes care of all publicity outside the college. Therefore, Mr. Friendlich, you will never, if ever, hear from our internal publicity dept. Because if you do, Mr. Friendlich, it will be external publicity.

Songs From WAA

The song contest going on sponsored by the WAA claims some songs already. Incidetally, publicity chairman Jeanne Arnold, who gives us an example of the type of songs, says short and snappy ones are the best—like "Pop goes the Weezil"—well, that's the way she spelled it.

Conscription Hits The Basket

Seen around the college was Al Opalinski and his side-kick Cholly Martin, both star basketball players of the college of yore. Cholly won a scholarship to the University of Nevada in Reno. Only he didn't go. Conscription difficulties.

The inside dope on the athletic contest this afternoon is a little on the interesting side we think. The affair was supposed to be a rough and tumble encounter, but somewhere along the line, an objection arose. No Bodily Contact. So the students thought up a few games—tiddly-winx, tic-tac-toe and a few other "games" that don't contact bodily. As it has been revised, 'twon't be so bad now. Tug-o-war, with a stream of water as center-line has always been good for a laugh. Come one, come all.

Large Response Expected For WAA Extra-Curricular Activities

Sign-ups for extra-curricular sports in the Women's Athletic Association are being taken in the women's gymnasium until late this afternoon, Bertha Mae Keller, Women's Athletic Association adviser, announced early this week. Although lists of sports recruits were not complete at this writing, there is every indication that the number of these will exceed that of previous semesters, when classes were held in scattered places, Miss Keller said.

Most new sign-ups were expected after the women's rally last Tuesday, when Barbara Smith, WAA president appeared to explain the aims and purposes of recreation for women as sponsored by the WAA and to invite the younger women to plan at least two or more recreational hours in addition to their physical education classes.

"We can't say at this time which activity has the largest or most enthusiastic response because of incomplete sign-ups, but we are very pleased with the large number, and it is interesting to note that the students seem to be very anxious to take the recreational sports that they can do when they get out of college," Miss Keller commented.

Both members and non-members of the WAA are urged to attend the sport spread—the first social event on the organization's schedule—which will be held at Sigmund Stern Grove on September 25, from 4:30 to 10 p.m., Miss Smith said. Tickets are now on sale at 35 cents, and may be bought from sport leaders or department instructors.

At this barbecue will be featured songs and songsters which the current WAA contest is expected to uncover. Different sports as offered to the women of the college will be discussed also, according to Miss Smith.

Officially, women's sports begin today, Friday the thirteenth notwithstanding. Skating, however, will not commence until September 20, since the skating rink at Winterland does not open until tomorrow.

"A change of schedule has been made in swimming, Miss Keller announced, and starting last week women students enrolled for that sport meet at the YWCA on Saturdays instead of Tuesdays and Thursday, 10 o'clock for elementary water splashers and 11 o'clock for intermediates. "Suits and towels are provided, but each girl should bring her own bathing cap, and should see Aileen Kinkel regarding change of program," Miss Keller said. "We apreciate very much the privilege of using the pool on Saturday. Many girls who found difficulty in making the other days will find this change more convenient; they will have more time to do their hair!"

Women who enroll in the various sports each semester work toward a definite aim, according to Miss Keller. "For instance, those participating in riding are beginning now to work toward a horseshow. Ice-skaters will soon be learning the fundamentals so that they may someday participate in a carnival—perhaps."

Hockey, as the big team sport of the semester, is receiving large attention. Women who have signed up for this sport will meet on the football practice field today, where, with completely new equipment, they will "initiate the turf."

"Team sports have not lost interest," Miss Keller declared, "although individual and duo sports—archery, badminton, swimming, golf, tennis, riding—all seem to have a very enthusiastic response from the students."

Pigskin Forecasts From Mephisto's Realm

By LOUIS GOLDSTONE

Whether you like it or not, I intend to publicize the exploits of one Schuyler Goop, a logistic epicure who has weighed what we are pleased to call "science" in the balance and, finding it wanting, relegated it to a select ash-heap.

Before formally inroducing Goop, who by the way has lifted a conglomeration of doctorates from various underprivileged institutions dedicated to the advancement of goblins, ghouls, djinni, werewolves, etc., etc., etc., I want to tell you something of the man's attainments.

If you want to get technical, I won't insist on calling Goop a man. There has been considerable doubt expressed as to the precise genus of his antecedents. Some of the local men about the general store claim to have been informed, from sources close to the Witch's Sabbath, that Goop is a mandrake—and, as nobody has ever succeeded in flashing a mirror before him in order to determine his nature for once and for all, it may well be a fact.

But, in the final analysis, this is colossally unimportant. Suffice it to say that Schuyler Goop looks like a man and lives at the "Y"; you can accept these facts for what they may be worth. What we will concern ourselves with is Goop, be he fish, flesh or fowl, vegetable or mineral, hot or cold.

As you have likely already surmised, Goop is a Consulting Magician. I don't mean the kind of magician who yanks bunnies out of toppers; I mean a real honest-to-Lucifer magician, all wheels and a yard wide.

Goop is experienced in things that would make your eyebrows wither if I described them. He is not a bad egg, you understand, and for a consideration he will do you a favor. Then man (to stretch a point) is the friend of everybody except a certain brand of hairy leprecauns that inhabits the empty vats of a local brewery; these happy little monsters, Schuyler Goop asserts with vehemence, are embroiled in unholy alliance with the snakes, pink elephants and little green men with white whiskers whom you have undoubtedly seen on more than one occasion.

Goop is unremitting hell on these nauseous little creatures, but otherwise he is a remarkably mild guy.

Foremost among Goop's many outstanding attainments in sorcery and allied magical fields is his excellent mastery of the elements of theory which regulate his trade just as fluidly as do the fallacious "principles of physics" control inflexibly our merry human peregrinations on and about this cosmic clod of ours.

Unless you are insufferably ignorant, you will know that all the theory of magic—be it black, white or Aryan—is evolved from two fundamental laws, namely: the law of contagion, and the law of sympathy.

Contagion is what Joe Witchdoc of the Congo uses when he profoundly expectorates and then expects rain. If he is an able practitioner, he will get rain, and if he drools he will probably receipt for a light mist.

If Joe gets his nimble digits on a few of your fingernail parings and a postage stamp that you have licked, watch out. Anything you have contact with retains part of your identity, and Joe can go to work on the stuff and work his devious and diabolical plots on you by remote control. Ever heard of people being hated to death? Okay.

No Schuyler Goop is the maestro-magician of our time. He knows all of this and enough in addition to fill all the pages of this yellow sheet out to column eight.

What I have told you is nothing. Limitations of space preclude the possibility of going further into Schuyler Goop's attainments. I will add that he is a football fan, and that by special permission of the copyright owner, to give the Devil his due, we are able to present Dr. Goop next Friday in an anlysis of our first pigskin encounter of the year.

You don't know what a genuine prediction is until you see Dr. Goop putting the laws of magic to work for the Rams.

Rams All Set For Placer

Preparedness wins half the battle. So it is with the Ram football team of the Fall of '40. Lee Eisan, his men and his fighting spirit prepares itself for the initial, yet crucial encounter with Placer, the Mountaineers of the North, next Friday.

From the North comes no news. This makes predictions almost impossible. Types of defense, as well as that of offense to be used against the Placer team is still tentative. However, Eisan will probably, as he has been against Placer in former games, be mostly on the offensive side.

Line-ups or teams have yet to be chosen. However, Cunningham, Naumann and Honnert, ex-Lowell all-city will probably start. Since there is still a week of practice, Eisan is more than likely to have a complete roster for release the day before the game.

Foremost of returning veterans are Naumann and Cunningham, Herb Taylor, George Meyers, Luke Lowell, Ken Hagen, Clark Johnson, Bill Windler, Dick Wilson and Tom Rielly. Many new students from high school and transfers will also be tried out for their ability in this initial game, Eisan remarked.

Golf Moves In To Supplant Classics At Purdue

LAFAYETTE, IND.—(ACP)—English 30, ancient history, algebra and kindred subjects of higher education probably will have to take a back seat at Purdue University next month when the teaching staff of the Professional Golfers' Association of America moves in to take over the task of teaching the Boilermaker student body—how to play golf.

April 10 and 11 are the days that have been set aside for a general pow-wow on how to swing a golf club correctly, the occasion being a golf clinic—first thing of its kind ever held in this country and possibly the forerunner of similar mass seminars to be held elsewhere on college campuses under P.G.A. auspices.

The clinic, part of a broad educational program that is being launched by the P.G.A. this year, is expected to play a large part in the scheme of the pros to stimulate interest in the game among college students and thus add to the constantly-growing number of followers of the ancient and honorable pastime.

Bowling Omitted From College Curriculum

Bowling has been indefinitely banished from the college curriculum, announced Joe Lantagne, boxing and soccer coach.

"Bowling, which was a very popular sport in the past, has been dropped this year because of the difficulty in finding allies which would be conveniently located," Lantagne said.

Since Joe Amori, colorful bowling coach of past semesters, is on leave, Lantagne has taken over his coaching duties, but has found that bowling is not to be offered this semester.

Coach Lantagne Cagey In Spite Of Promising Soccer Turnout

Twenty-six prospective soccer stars turned out for the soccer signup held last Tuesday afternoon in the office of Joe Lantagne, head soccer coach, the mentor said.

Lantagne was pleased at the number of prospective shin-kickers, but declined to comment on the possibilities of a championship team until practice has really started.

A preliminary workout was held all of this week, and Lantagne will start picking a starting team some time in the near future. The league schedule has not been released at the present time, but it was believed that it would be released some time next week.

The Rams are competing in two soccer leagues this season, against both college and junior college competition.

Shinkickers who signed Tuesday are as follows: Lewis Davy, Frank Dea, Nichy Dezdevich, Win Fairfield, Edgar Eliy.

Andrew Javrotsky, Bert Korn, Ken Kingsbury, Gene Kocherga, Henry Kreuzmann, Ben Krunsky, John Lezar, Bill McCarthy, Dan McHugh, Ed McNamara, Jim Mahoney, Al Maisler, W. M. Menary, Frank Michel.

Smoker Cancelled For Lack Of Space

Because of lack of adequate space, the traditional AMS smoker for new men students scheduled for last Tuesday was postponed indefinitely, Ted Theodus, AMS president announced.

It was originally intended to hold the semi-annual affair in the college cafeteria but this plan was discarded because of the difficulty in moving the tables and chairs out of the way.

"Then we decided to hold the smoker in Room 100, one of the large lecture halls at the end of the building. This idea was also discarded as impractical because the hall will only hold 200 students and approximately 500 students were expected to attend the smoker," Theodus said.

This is the first time the traditional event has been cancelled. There is a possibility that the event will be held later in the semester if suitable facilities can be arranged, Theodus concluded.

College Boxers May Learn Self Expression

Prospective boxers, currently enrolled in Joe Lantagne's boxing classes, will receive an opportunity for self expression later this semester, if plans for the Intramural Boxing Tournament materialize, Coach Lantagne announced this week.

The tournament, scheduled to take place some time during December or next January, will feature bouts between boxers of all weight divisions.

Boxers not enrolled in this semester's class, may enter the competition, Lantagne disclosed, but those not in classes will have to meet "rigid requirements."

Lantagne did not say where or when the bouts would be staged, since present plans are very indefinite. He did announce, however, that almost 50 students are enrolled in the boxing class, and should provide many interesting bouts in the near future.

Rifle Team Plans Delayed; Action Promised

Customary confusion in class schedules and registration has neccessitated a delay in the planning of a program for the college rifle team, Captain Fred C. MacFarland announced today.

"The rifle team will of course be active this semester, as usual," he said, "but as yet no definite plans have been made for any matches."

Regarding the social side of the rifle team's activities, the Rifle and Pistol club is contemplating numerous picnics and dances, with plans as yet tentative, MacFarland also noted.

"Conversation is largely the art of 'playing up' to the other person's favorite subject." — Donald Ogden Stewart.

Swashbuckling Activities Set For Traditional Event

In the athletic field south of the Men's Gymnasium, students of the college will witness the traditional Soph-Frosh brawl this afternoon, reaching the peak of Orientation Week's activities, Mel Chicazola, chairman of the affair said.

Carried through from former semesters, the brawl this semester will be "no bodily contact" to prevent possibilities of injuries. The last brawl was held a year ago on the muddy field known as the Galileo Stadium, when the sophomores managed a slushing victory over a muddy mass of freshmen.

This year, through some difficulty, the Administrative office appeared hesitant to sanction a "brawl," but through the efforts of Chicazola, athletic manager of this institution, the college will continue its tradition.

Scheduled for the program are sack races, jousting, buck the bear, and tug-'o-war. The events will be competitive with the point system used.

Balboa Park has seen more than this one contest. During the last weeks of school during learning at the Powell Street institution, the college, in order to inaugurate the opening of the campus at Balboa Park, had a "meet your campus" picnic. Races, games of all kinds were enjoyed, and novel games under the auspices of Florence Hansen, chairman of that affair. (Sports ed. note; see issue 24, of last semester's Guardsman.

Unlike the brawls of other colleges, the affair will be "good clean fun" and not a sham battle of rotten fruits, slush and unpleasantness, Chicazola promised.

The only slush will be in the tug-'o-war, when a stream of water will be played as a center-line, and the participants will be doused as they pass through the stream. It's gonna be good," Chicazola said. "We're gonna have fun and forget all about studies, and be in condition for the dance at the Palace tonight. This thing is a warm-up."

WAA Sponsors Song Contest

Open to all women in the college is the WAA song contest which begins this week and closes September 25, according to Jeanne Arnold, chairman of the contest.

Songs which are being sought fall into three classes, (1) those for the WAA, (2) those for specific sports, (3) and those for introducing persons (example: "He's a Jolly Good Fellow). The only rules are that they be "simple, short and snappy," and that they be composed of original words which may be sung to a folk or original tune.

At the close of the contest the songs will be presented at the WAA barbecue at Sigmund Stern Grove on September 25, and any woman student who is interested in singing in duets or quartets on this occassion is advised to see Miss Arnold.

"The song contest is to be in the way of a competition between the freshmen and the sophomores," Miss Arnold said. "They will be judged by popularity, and after being selected will be used for future WAA events."

Further information may be obtained at the WAA headquarters on the second floor of the women's gymnasium.

Veterans Return As Ski Team Gets Under Way

Announcing that two members of the college ski team are back this semester, Alden Smith, adviser to the team disclosed that ski activity for this semester will begin next week.

Falk Falkenberg, Norwegian ski expert is one of the returning members, and Bob Ogg, Club Advisory Board president, is the other.

Folkenberg is to assist Smith in coaching members of the ski club and team. "Falkenberg is an excellent skier who knows all the fundamentals and principles of skiing and in addition can teach these things to newcomers. He has skied all his life and learned the finer points in the sport while in Norway," Smith said.

Ogg was reelected as club president for the semester.

First meeting of the ski club is to be held next Wednesday afternoon at 2 p.m. in Room 252. A team captain will be named at this time, Smith disclosed.

Pre-Game Rally Promised Sept. 19; Fun And Food

Replacing the traditional Men's Smoker that was scheduled for last Monday, the college students are promised a pre-game rally in the dirt field between the men's and women's gymnasiums Thursday, September 19, according to Ted Theodus, AMS president.

Announcement of the cancellation of the smoker came too late to stop publication in The Guardsman, hence the story was run. Limited facilities and lack of space was the reason given by Theodus for the cancellation of the traditional affair.

Songs, yells, and arousing of spirit by skits and such, are promised by Theodus for those who attend the night affair. A large crowd is expected for the pre-game rally of the first encounter listed for the college Rams.

Ernie Smith, NBC sportcaster, and other luminaries of the sport world will be introduced to the Associated Students who attend. Refreshments are to be served, so that the affair will be more "picnic-ish", the chairman of the affair said.

Chemist Delivers First Lecture To Paint Students

First of a series of lectures delivered to students of the college paint course, was that given last Friday by Hal R. Harlan, of Harlan, Associates, consulting chemists for Bay Area paint plants.

Harlan, a prominent figure in his field, talked on the history and manufacture of white lead paints.

It is planned, according to Walter D. Forbes, co-ordinator of the college paint department, to include in the course several lectures by paint experts in leading bay area concerns.

"In addition," Forbes announced, "the paint classes will make supplementary visits to some of these plants during the semester."

Discussing the full extent of the paint curriculum, Forbes revealed that officials of local paint plants have met several times in the past year with him, and have collaborated in outlining the present college course.

"Our course as outlined," Forbes asserted, "is unequaled anywhere else in the United States."

The paint courses, extending over a two year period, are said by Forbes to provide experience and training which should be sufficient to assure prompt employment in the paint industry for those completing the subject.

It is understood that a quantity of fine equipment for the course is either already here or en route from the manufacturers.

Honor Society Eligibles To Sign Up In Library

Students eligible for Alpha Gamma Sigma, the college honor society, are requested by Alice C. Cooper, faculty adviser to the society, to sign up in the library this week any day between one and four.

"Thirty grade points on the last final grades are necessary," she said, "for those returning students."

New students who have just graduated from high schools and who have gold seals on their diplomas are also eligible for membership.

"We are anxious to get on with our plans for the semester," Miss Cooper added, "and as soon as the registration for new members is completed the society will begin its activities.

Miss California (Connie O'Connor) pulls down the curtain on Pacifica, theme statue of the 1940 Golden Gate International Exposition which concludes its second year on September 29.

Lipsitz, Levick Speakers At First Forum Discussion

All students are invited to attend the first meeting of the Forum Club on September 20 at the home of Dorothy Mercer at 2251 Jackson Street, Apartment 4, at 7:30 o'clock. The speakers of the evening will be Sol Lipsitz and Paul Levick who will discourse on the subject "What conscription will mean to America."

This club will be of interest to those interested in discussion and writing, as it holds all types of discussions including those on art, literature, and politics, and in the spring term its members edit the college literary magazine, "The Forum."

No definite meeting date is set for the forums, but they are generally held every three weeks on Friday evenings. Anyone interested is urged to attend the first meeting and to participate in the election of officers that is to take place at that time.

150 Pre-Med Students Hear Obstetrician At Meeting

One hundred and fifty invitations were sent out to medical students to attend the first pre-med meeting of the semester which was held last night, Glenn Noble, faculty adviser, announced today.

Guest speaker of the evening was Dr. Karl Schaupp, well known obstetrician.

This club constitutes the largest group in the college, and has been since its existence which dates back to the first semester of the college.

The club is more unified this semester because of the new building, Noble said. Its membership is not open to only those who want to become doctors, but to students of dentistry, nursing, and embalming as well.

Opening Session Of CAB Set For Next Tuesday

Bob Ogg, president of the Club Advisory Board, today urged that every club send a representative to the first meeting of that group next Tuesday in Room 167 at 2 o'clock.

Clubs which have been in good standing or which were suspended the previous semester only, may file petitions for renewal of charters at the time, while new organizations or those which had been declared inactive may arrange for membership in the CAB, Ogg added.

"Affiliation with the Club Advisory Board offers not only a wider interest in college affairs, but may also result in other benefits," Ogg said.

First issue of the club board's bulletin, CABBY, will appear next week, according to CAB officers, and may possibly be ready for distribution at the group meeting.

Publicity Committee Will Handle Bulletin Boards

Last Wednesday, the college Executive Council aproved a recommendation submitted by the internal publicity committee to act as a central clearing house for all organizations wishing to post notices on college bulletin boards.

Commenting upon this move, Hugh Waite, chairman of the committee said, "We feel that by instituting this new method of coordinating we can facilitate the handling of all college notices."

It will be the task of the committee to approve all requests for poster space on the bulletin boards.

Any organization desirous of putting up such posters must first secure the approval of the committee.

If any notices are placed on the bulletin boards without official approval, they will be taken down, Waite concided.

Four Day Fair Fete Planned

Looming as the outstanding highlight of the 1940 Golden Gate International Exposition, Construction Industries Jubilee, September 12 to 15, inclusive, is rapidly taking form, with every branch of the industry participating.

The four days will be marked by the most spectacular programs ever presented at a world's fair. There will be thrilling balloon ascensions with parachute jumps each day. A replica of a huge battleship will be bombed and blown up. Rock drilling and log sawing contest, a tug of war between the workers on the Shasta and Friant Dams, a synthetic electrical storm, and scores of other features will make the four days memorable ones.

A unique feature of the four-day celebration will be a contest to choose "Mr. Construction Industries," with a jury of beauties from the Folies Bergere and Aquaçade making the choice. A jitterbug contest and a monster Labor ball also are planned to round out the occasion.

College Library Receives Many New Books

Numerous books ordered at the close of last semester are here now to enlarge the library and give the students better library facilities than have ever been offered them before, Marcus Skarstedt, college librarian, said today. Because of the large circulation the library hours will soon be extended from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. to from 7:45 a.m. to 5:15 p.m. If warranted the library may be kept open later in the evening, Skarstedt declared.

"I have heard several of the students say that they thought the library should be larger," commented Skarstedt, "but, I think students should be satisfied and pleased with their library considering the facilities that have been available in the past."

Over 200 books are on reserve and students have free access to the other books, but are urged to remember to check them out through the desk, he added.

Radio Broadcasting

Up-To-Minute Equipment Utilized In Radio Classes

With a brand new transmitter, two brand new receivers and an opportunity to operate standard studio equipment of the same type broadcast stations use, The Radio Engineering students, under the direction of Mr. Lowell M. Hollingsworth, are anticipating a very successful new semester. All members of the class are anxiously awaiting final completion of the laboratory so that they can use the new equipment, according to Hollingsworth.

Two Antennas Erected

Installed on the roof are two antennas: one, on the steel towers is for use with the transmitter; the other, a multiplex antenna is used for all radio receivers in the building.

A Hallicrafters HT-9 transmitter and a National 100-X receiver are provided for the instructor and those students who hold amateur operators' licenses.

The studio and control room on the main floor are used to operate the speakers mounted in all of the rooms. Microphones in the president's office, the music room, and the lecture rooms permit a varied choice of local program material. A special radio receiver provides a choice of radio programs for use throughout the building.

Practical Experience Obtained

The speech and dramatic classes expect to use the studio and control equipment to get practical experience in the production of radio programs. Recording equipment makes it possible for students to watch their improvement and to keep a permanent record of progress.

Prize Posters On Display

Twelve prize-winning posters, representing Americanism as conceived by commercial art students of the Academy of Advertising Art in San Francisco, will be exhibited for a week in Room 160, according to Evans M. Ecke, art instructor. Tentative date for the arrival of these posters is September 16.

The art work is the result of a year's efforts by the academy students, culminating in the contest which ended last week. Winner of the second prize was Fred Hammersley, a former student at this college. "Hammersley was one of the best commercial art students we had," Ecke commented.

Book Exchange To Return Cash Or Books Next Week

Books or cash will be returned to those students who left used texts at the Women's Service Society Book Exchange between 11 and 1 o'clock in the bank next week, Mildred Bartosiewski, WSS president, announced today.

"We should like to ask students to call for their cash or returned textbooks as soon as possible," Miss Bartosiewski said.

First meeting of the semester for the WSS will take place on Monday, September 16, at Barbara Smith's home.

By the time students reach college they are supposed to be able to think clearly and judge to the best of their ability, the affairs of the world. Since it is an estblished fact that many college students do not have the time to read the daily papers, the college newspaper should to a certain degree serve as a substitute.

Yours and anyone else's constructive criticism is greatly appreciated and we hope such constructive efforts will continue. The Guardsman however, is not a "school periodical" but a college newspaper and as such will continue to present such information that alert young men and women should be concerned about.

College Art Work Will Be Exhibited October 3-6

During open house, which is to be held in the college from October 3 to October 6, the art class will exhibit student work, announced Richard M. Allman, art instructor.

"The pictures to be exhibited will be chosen from work done this semester and last," he said.

At this time visitors to the college building will also be able to see other examples of student work from other departments, Allman pointed out.

COLLEGE

THURSDAY, the college broadcasting system will begin a series of weekly programs devoted to the entertainment and enjoyment of the students.

This writer, and another student of the radio class will present a program of popular music, interviews, and news, deigned to please the students in the cafeteria while eating lunch.

As with all new ideas, this one will probably need a lot of ironing out. It is hoped that the students who hear the program will cooperate and give us any constructive criticism they deem advisable.

The scope of radio broadcasting is very wide and it is possible that if this first venture meets with success, others may follow.

In answer to several queries—actual air programs will not be broadcast from the college this semester. Any such work will come from station KSFO.

Just in case anyone is wondering, the weekly broadcast will not concern itself in any way with foreign news. It would be rather difficult to digest food while listening to the latest death toll and air raid story.

WE notice the Forum Club has announced September 20 as the date of their first meeting.

That also happens to be the date of the opening football game with Placer Junior College.

It would seem that the members of the Forum could have picked some other date not conflicting with the opening of the football season.

Although perhaps some members of the club are not interested in supporting the efforts of the football squad, others may be.

The handful of club members that fail to support the team on Friday night will not seriously affect the total attendance at the game but the lack of spirit and cooperation shown by the group services to illustrate that the college is still not united.

NATIONAL

AN interesting incident brought to light in the munitions factory explosion last week was that members of the Nazi-American Bund were employed at the factory.

This does not necessarily mean that the bund is responsible for the explosion.

It does seem, however, that it is rather tempting fate to employ members of an organization that is admittedly working for the cause of Nazism in a plant where products vital to American defense are being manufactured.

FOREIGN

THOSE Italians are sometimes the most amusing people on earth. Last week an Italian newspaper came forth with the surprising statement that Paul Revere whom we had long considered an American patriot was really Paolo Riveri, an Italian.

According to the Italians, Paolo practically won the revolution single handed and chased the British back to London.

Isn't this whole theory rather silly? The Paul we read about was born in Massachusetts but of course he could have had an Italian twin.

Virginio Gayda, editor of the Mussolini organ, also spends considerable time explaining in great detail what the axis is going to do to the bad little Americans. He's full of hot air too. Maybe if the Italians would do less talking and more fighting they might get some where.

Judicial Body Promises Check-Up On Student Cards

"This semester, as in the past, care will be taken to see that students present their own Associated Students' membership card at all functions where a cost to the student body is involved," Edward Hardies, chairman of the judicial committee announced after a preliminary meeting of the group this month.

"Illegal use of student cards is one of the greatest problems in our college activities," he added.

To prevent such use of cards, Jean Arnold, Associated Students' vice-president, was appointed to carry out the necessary arrangements for proper identification of students at dances, while Hardies himself will be in charge of the checking system at athletic events, he revealed.

"From now on we must also request that cards be filled out in ink," Hardies said, "and students should be warned on that point."

Weekly Broadcast

Student Radio Program Slated For Lunch Hour

A weekly radio program piped only to the college cafeteria will be presented beginning Thursday afternoon from 12:15 to 12:50 p.m., Marie Weller, college broadcasting instructor today announced.

Planned as a weekly feature for the entertainment of students during lunch time, the program will regularly be heard on Wednesday mornings, but as there is a college holiday tomorrow the program will make its debut Thursday instead.

The program will consist of interviews with several students, recordings of the popular dance tunes of the day, and a summary of last minute college news, sports reviews and administration bulletins.

The idea was conceived by two radio broadcasting students, Bentley Schoenfeld, and Len Gross, Schoenfeld and Gross will write and broadcast the program.

"A program of somewhat the same type has been broadcast at San Mateo Junior College and has met with approval from faculty and students," Schoenfeld said.

Gross, Guardsman editor, commented that, "The program is being presented for the noon-time enjoyment of the students in the cafeteria, and any suggestions or criticisms will be greatly appreciated."

Such communications should be left in the Publications Office, Room 134.

Palace Hotel Announces Junior College Night

At prices specially reduced for students of the college, the Palace Hotel will honor the college at a Junior College Night in the newly redecorated Rose Room Bowl of that hotel on Friday night, September 27, Mary Frances Malone, campus representative, announced recently.

"Despite the fact that prices at the hotel have been raised for Artie Shaw and his orchestra, the hotel is offering those students who make their reservations with campus representatives a flat rate of $2.07 for two cover charges and one coca cola per person," Miss Malone said. "Students who check those prices against those regularly charged will be quick to realize their saving."

Singing Contest Sponsored

In connection with the Junior College Night, which will follow the football game against San Francisco State College, a singing contest similar to that staged last semester, will be held. Men and women interested in participating in the contest for the opportunity of singing at the affair are requested to submit their names to Miss Malone, Len Gross, and Lyle Shultz. In addition to singing, the man and woman chosen will receive complimentary cover charges for the evening, Miss Malone added.

"While we have not completed plans for the singing contest, it will probably take place during the afternoon on one day next week, possibly in one of the lecture halls, provided that Registrar Mohr's approval is given," she revealed.

Hotel Cooperation Offered

The affair will coincide with the State football game, and the success of similar college nights in the past after athletic events was taken as a criterion in planning this, she said.

Eagerness to cooperate with the college students for the success of the affair was expressed by Lyle L. Guslander of the Palace Hotel promotion department.

"If the college will arrange to send down the music for the college song, we will be pleased to play it in honor of the college students," Guslander announced. "We want the students to have a good time, above all else."

Early Reservation Urged

Necessity for putting in reservations through the campus representatives soon was emphasized by Miss Malone.

"Because of the large number of students who attend affairs of this sort, it is more than advisable for those desiring good tables to make their reservations very soon," she said. "We don't want to be compelled to disappoint persons who might come down and find no accommodations for them and their party."

Complete information concerning the affair can be received from any of the representatives, she declared.

Friday's Brawl

Sophs Eke Out Victory Against Frosh In Grim Fought Battles

Fighting with true Sophomoric heroism—and the help of the football team—the Sophs barely managed a victory against the invading Frosh in Friday's mythical brawl. Speaking with due reverence, it was definitely not a brawl. Call it an afternoon of friendly rivalry if you have to.

Though the spirit of the frosh team was, in the words of Coach Tom Wilson and Ted Theodus, AMS prexy, "Exceptional, the best that ever came to this college," it was outweighed particularly in the tug of war by the pigskin fanciers on the other end of the rope (rope by courtesy Eaton and Smith).

Spectators, of which there were, in the sponsors' opinion, a good number, perched precariously on the rocks above the athletic field and maintained a grim or else dazed silence while the sophs won the second and third sack races, the hog-tying, the jousting, and so ad infinitum, leaving the first sack race by mistake to the frosh.

In the tug of war, the expected stream of water which had been promised bloodthirsty spectators was very much absent. Theodus explained its absence by the ungraciousness of the fire department which refused to lend a hose. He pointed out the impossibility of using the only faucet on the field, a thin pipe of perhaps two inches in height. "Besides, the frosh drank all the water in that," he charged.

In case the various events aren't familiar to all students of the college—if they are you can stop now—a brief description of each follows:

1. Sack race—it seems there are sacks in the middle of the field and everybody grabs them and runs somewhere, last one home is a ——(fill in your own version).

2. Jousting—takes two to make one of these. One gets on the other's back and sophs shove frosh and vice versa off their mounts. What the better half does is immaterial so long as the rider doesn't use spurs. Team with last rider up wins.

3. Hog-tying—no offense meant by the title or is there? Everyone snaffles a rope and tries to tie the feet of their opponents. When an opponent is done up in a neat package, he is carried or dragged over the enemies line. Side with most provisions stored on its side wins.

Guardsman Desires First Issues Of Paper

Anyone having any or all the issues of The Guardsman of Volume One and desirous of giving them to the paper for its files should bring them to Room 134, Len Gross, editor of The Guardsman, requested today.

"We would appreciate it greatly if any person can comply with this request," he said.

Issues from this volume would help to complete the files, Gross explained. If enough copies can be collected to complete the files, they will be turned over to the library for a record of college history.

Women's Day At Fair Brings Holiday Tomorrow

No classes will meet tomorrow throughout the San Francisco school department according to Mary Jane Learnard, assistant registrar. The holiday was declared by action of the San Francisco Board of Education because that day has been set aside by Fair authorities as Women's Day at the Exposition. The college will resume schedule as usual Thursday, with no further holidays during the week until Monday, November 11.

Employment Applications Accepted In Room 148

Applications for NYA employment are still being accepted in Room 148 Edward H. Redford, college NYA director, announced. They will be accepted until recently arrived funds have been exhausted, so students desiring employment should apply immediately, Redford said.

Workers now employed on NYA are advised to remember that definite changes have been instituted in the handling of the time schedules and that failure to abide by the newly established regulations will result in their being dropped from the NYA.

"Time slips must now be turned in the day after the payroll period ends, October 7, and must be kept by the supervisor and not by the worker. Supervisors failing to follow directions will lose the use of further NYA help," Redford added.

Such stringetn rules have been set up because the "time slips" are now sent directly to the government where they are checked for errors, and incorrect slips would result in a slowing up of NYA continuity.

Redford also observed that changes have been made, for the better, in connection with NYA typists who will now have regular working schedules. "Previously," Redford stated, "typists were not sure whether or not they would be able to get all of their hours in, but, with the inception of our new policy, workers who do typing need not worry."

According to Redford a department has been established from which typists are sent and in which their schedules are arranged so as to provide for completed time programs.

"As yet student typists are not always available to all departments of the college, but we expect to relieve this situation presently," Redford concluded.

Perry, Nelson Selected To Advise Low Freshmen

To advise members of the freshman class, Mary Perry, assistant in the registrar's office, and Nelson Wells, science instructor, were appointed officially last week to act in that capacity by the administration. Miss Perry can be located in Room 121 and Dr. Wells in Room 327 for consultation.

First Football Rally This Thursday; Eisan Featured

"To get the football off to its best year in the history of our college will be the purpose of Thursday's rally at 11 o'clock," was the statement issued recently by Pete Aydelotte, head yell leader. "Because of the holiday tomorrow, it is necessary for us to postpone the rally until that time in the center court."

Besides the customary yells which are a part of every rally there will be guest speakers, introductions of athletics, and also several new ideas in the way of rally entertainment, he said.

Guest speaker will be Varsity Coach Lee Eisan, who will comment on the game with Placer Friday night. Several members of the team will be introduced to the student body to better acquaint the members of the school with the men on the team, Aydelotte declared.

The rally will take place in the center court, scene of last week's rally and will continue for a half hour, according to tentative plans he repeated, urging a wide attendance.

Specific word has been received from the dean's office that all students report to class immediately at completion of the rally. Aydelotte requested that all students comply to this request as it is through this agreement with the dean's office that permission was received for the rally.

Aydelotte will be assisted in this rally by his two new assistant yell leaders, Bill Menary and Merrill Steele. These two men were chosen from a group of 12 who contested for the honor of assisting Aydelotte in getting up student interest in the current athletic campaign.

Menary has been an assistant yell leader of the college for the past two semesters, and this will be his third semester in that capacity. In his high school days, he was head yell leader at Balboa High School.

Steele is a sophmore and his yell leading experience consists of a semester spent at Oakland High School as yell leader.

"The competition for these positions was very keen," said Aydelotte, "and I had a tough time making my choice."

"I am very proud of the men I did choose," Aydelotte continued, "and I am sure that with their help we shall have bigger and better rallies than ever before. We also want to see many of the students and faculty out at the football game at Seals Stadium Friday night."

Aydelotte and members of the rally committee have been active during Orientation Week in giving out frosh buttons to freshmen students and assisting during registration.

AMS

Bonfire Date Set Forward

Having secured President A. J. Cloud's approval of the proposed Associated Men Students' bon-fire which is to take place of the cancelled smoker, Ted Theodus, AMS president, announced that plans for the affair are being rushed.

The bonfire is scheduled to be held the night of September 26, which will be the eve of the college football game with San Francisco State College. According to Theodus, a portable public address system will probably be installed. "All freshmen should come to this affair," he said, "as we will introduce prominent faculty members, some of the football squad, and several outside notables."

Reminding women students that the bonfire is for men only, Theodus promised that it would more than make up for the smoker. He said it would be held on the hill near the gyms at 7:45 p.m. Admission is by Associated Student card which entitles the holder to refreshments. Enough refreshments for 1000 students will be supplied he added.

The complete program for the bonfire will be released in the near future.

In addition to working on bonfire plans, Theodus and his committee are already deep in plans for the forthcoming traditional barn dance. The dance will be held either on Friday night, October 25, or on Friday, November 1, Theodus said. He pointed out that the Fridays considered are those just before and just after Halloween.

Expecting to hold the dance in the women's gym, Theodus promised to obtain a well-known college band for the occasion. Theodus also hinted a prize costume contest.

100 Football Posters Set For Store Distribution

One hundred season football posters have been arranged for purchase by the publicity committee for display in various stores, Hugh Waite, publicity committee chairman, announced.

No posters on the bulletin board or walls of the college are allowed without the OK of the publicity committee. This resolution was recently passed by the Executive Council. Any club or organization desiring to display posters must present those posters to the committee the day before they are to appear, Waite stressed.

For the benefit of the new students the official bulletin board of the Associated Students is located in front of the student body office, Waite directed.

Committee appointments by Waite include Marion MacKillop, Barbara Brown, Sylvester McAtee, and Barbara Randall.

Anyone interested in serving on the publicity committee, Waite said, should get in touch with him early this week at the student body office.

Sophs To Rectify Lack Of Tradition

By EVE BURKEY

Theyre' growing grass, planting trees, installing lights, parking facilities, and blackboards, but with all that the college is still lacking in one essential—where, is its tradition?

No walk, reserved for the sacred tread of sophomores winds down the mountain, no bench upon which luckless frosh dare not rest adorns the grounds. Because of this tragic lack the college is in danger of being considered noveau rich, or so say knowing observers.

All is not yet lost though. Guided by President Alden Thorogood the high sophs have pledged themselves to remedy this omission and have promised to set to work immediately on the installation of maybe a soph walk or at least, a bench.

"We have a committee working on setting up tradition," Thorogood announced. "We expect our biggest and best soph week since we are now in the new building." He advised men students to elect the sophomore sweetheart as soon as possible.

The case for tradition looks good from here.

- Trood Appointed to Head Year-Book

Dorothy Trood, former vice-president of the Associated Students, has been appointed temporary chairman of the college year-book.

Miss Trood said the assistance of anyone with previous year-book experiance would be appreciated.

Plans for the book are now nearing completition and have met with the approval of the administration.

- Special Train for Sacramento Game

Negotiations have been completed for a special train to carry students to the Sacramento game on October 18. The train will leave here at 3 p.m., and the trip will cost $1.75.

According to present plans, a car for dancing and an observation will be available for the sole use of college students.

Further details will be published in next Friday's Guardsman.

Student Courtesy Bans Disruption Of Lectures

MANY students of the college seem to be unaware of the fact that certain things tolerated in high school are not in the best of taste here.

One of those things is the matter of disrupting a class by walking into the room and asking the instructor a question.

To say that such a procedure is rude is putting it rather mildly. No one likes to be interrupted in the midst of some discussion and college instructors are no different.

Interrupting a lecture not only breaks the train of thought of the class but is disconcerting to the instructor as well.

There is really nothing so important that it cannot wait until the end of the class period.

Instructors at the University of California and other colleges in the bay area do not have this trouble, for the students seem to understand that they should see the instructor before or after class and not bother him in between.

The college has a great many friendly and understanding instructors, something a great many other institutions cannot boast. It is only right that we extend to them the common courtesies we expect from others.

Collegiate Mixer Gets Approval, Criticism

SOME glowing reports have been received about the collegiate mixer dance held last Wednesday.

The joint AWS-AMS committee that handled the affair came in for the largest share of praise, being described as one of the most efficient and active committees ever to function within the college.

Student cooperation at the first gym dance of the semester was very good, and its continuance will speak very highly for the attitude of the majority of the student body.

There were a few adverse criticisms given. Although the committee as a whole functioned very well, the dance as a mixer, designed to acquaint the new students with the old, did not quite carry out its purpose. Although there were some of the new students dancing and seemingly enjoying themselves, the great majority were standing on the sidelines as spectators.

There is little that committees and organizations can do to assuage this situation without the sincere cooperation of the incoming students themselves. Dances, with their air of friendliness and informality, should prove the perfect agent to bring out this feeling of kinship between the students. Still, however, the newcomers remain in the background.

Students coming to the college from high school are naturally somewhat at a loss for the first few weeks for they have begun work in an institution that is run on an entirely different basis than high school.

It is because of this that the student officers and older students should do their utmost to make the strangers feel at home. Perhaps at the next mixer dance, this point will be stressed.

Shoving chewing gum underneath the chairs and marking the walls with fingerprints were two other criticisms.

These errors in courtesy probably were not deliberate but merely examples of the occasional carelessness that exists among students wherever they are.

These faults are not particularly glaring, yet they could be avoided.

If we are to keep the campus in good condition, things like that should not occur. Perhaps if we stop and think for a moment these incidents won't occur again.

Imperturbable British Inspire Unique Stories

NO ONE country but England could have given birth to the story that United Press dispatched from bomb-wracked Britain last week. It told of the King's request that tea be served to him and the Queen directly following their confinement in a shelter during a severe air raid. The story is not momentus in itself, but it serves to illustrate, like the action of an aged woman several weeks ago who refused to enter a air raid shelter that she might see a bombing raid in progress, the imperturbable calm of the British who refuse to be intimidated by a modern scourge.

Everywhere, everyday, similar incidents displaying traditional English sangfroid occur in England. This quality in the English has often been the butt of many jokes. Perhaps, this time, it will enable them morally and physically to resist the attack on their country.

The daily heroism of the noble and common people gives tangible substance to the grim, stern, but hopeful words of the Right Honorable Winston Churchill. In speaking of Hitler, Churchill said, "Little did he know the spirit of the British Nation." It is this spirit that the invader will have to reckon with, a spirit that is strongly national.

Rupert Brooke, one of England's great war-poets, expressed beautifully this vehement British love of country when he said:

If I should die, think only this of me:
That there's some corner of a foreign field
That is forever England. There shall be
In that rich earth a richer dust concealed;
A dust whom England bore, shaped, made aware. . .

Constitution Day Now Symbol With Added Force

CONSTITUTION Day, celebrated throughout the land today, has always been a heart-warming symbol of all that we Americans hold dear to us. Each year the realization of our most precious possession is brought closer to us with world-wide events thundering about us. Bloody conflicts, nations enslaving one-another, crushing one another—all this adds stark realism to our observance of that most valued object in the United States of America, the Constitution. With might prevalent throughout the world, we can well look to our Constitution with thankful hearts, and solemnly vow to protect it with our lives and keep it at the head of our American heritage.

Meet The Students

By DOROTHY PIERCE

FEELING like a spring onion, strong enough for anything, your interviewer set forth seeking a prospective interviewee.

Walking down the hall at the psychologic moment came blonde, blue-eyed (what again?) Marcella Mahoney. After a few preliminary bouts — introductions, weather, classes — we came to Marcella herself. Miss Mahoney disclosed she was registered for her third semester of college, the first two having been spent at San Francisco State.

This fact naturally lead into the time worn question of how she likes her new home. "Junior college is wonderful," Miss Mahoney gushed. "Everyone is so friendly, even the instructors. Why at State, the teachers hardly ever gave a sign of recognition even after you've been in their classes for a whole term." More power to our instructors!

As usual the man question popped up. Marcella agrees that our men are very handsome indeed, (pull in your chests, men) and, she adds, "there's so many of them." Miss Mahoney said that at State the women outnumber the men about four or five to one. (Not thinking of transferring, are you men?)

"I'm an English major, and my ambition is to become a teacher," Miss Mahoney volunteered. "I have no particular hobby. I like to dance, sing, read, and bicycle."

Marcella is working for her junior college degree (aren't we all?) After that she intends to further her education at some higher institution of learning.

Her favorite color is blue; her favorite class is dramatics; her favorite reading matter, The Guardsman. (Mr. Gross, take your bow.)

Her pet peeves are long lanky hair (ahem!); loud voices; candid camera shots; and jitterbugging.

At home, Miss Mahoney confided, when she is not occupied doing homework or housework, she is "busily burning fudge." She invites any male student to drop in and sample some. (Marcella, ask him if he has a friend).

Miss Mahoney commented upon the college's wide and varied extra-curricular activities. She intends to join one of the clubs and is anxiously awaiting the first dance.

She is fascinated by the astronomy dome, and would "just love to take the course" if she had the time.

Speaking of time—your reporter realized dead-line time was nearing, was, in fact here.

The Spectator

DEPARTING from the usual routine of reviewing a motion picture, Spectator, today, lifts the covers off the coming Fall motion picture season. To anticipate some of the highlights in the entertainment world. Judging from the announced product, the Fall Season should maintain an exceptional standard in entertainment values.

Charlie Chaplin's long-awaited production, The Great Dictator holds the main spotlight. Chaplin, as usual, has put millions of his own money into this along with all the creative genius he possesses. A typical Chaplin production, Charley has written the script, directed and produced the entirety, written the musical score to bring to life this satirical travesty on Adolph Hitler.

That perrenial master of the epic, Cecil B. DeMille will have an entry in the field, Northwest Mounted Police. Here in technicolor, with a fine cast headed by Gary Cooper, Madeline Carroll and Paulette Goddard, the sweeping saga of the guardians of the North should unfold with typical DeMille extravaganza.

Another film in epic manner to anticipate is Zanuck's Brigham Young. With the title role portrayed by the brilliant Broadway star, Dean Jagger, Brigham Young should raise itself to cinemaic heights with its American saga of a great man's pilgrimage.

That master of the screen, Frank Capra, has another up his sleeve. Remember Lost Horizon? Need we say more. His latest contribution is Meet John Doe, co-starring Barbara Stanwyck and Gary Cooper. If Capra maintains his high average, his latest opus should be a Fall must-see.

Spring Parade starring Deanna Durbin should hit the screens shortly. The scintillating star of so many hits should be in her element here. Incidentally, this will be Miss Durbin's first period picture and will also exhibit her dancing talents for the first time.

To mention another epic, we need only point to Alexander Korda's long-delayed technicolor filming of The Thief of Bagdad. Here should be a great spectacle with lavish settings. The war has delayed the making of this adaption of the Arabian Night classic. The Entire company has been forced to switch production from England to Hollywood, but in spite of such sundry difficulties, The Thief of Bagdad should be a pageant of color.

Perhaps at this point, it would be proper to announce our choice of King of Coming Attractions. To all indications, this will be the Walt Disney-Leopold Stokowski colabaration, Fantasia. Here will be blended the magic tones of great classical music with the sprightly, laughable Disney cartoon humor to bring a full-length feature to life. This innovation in theatrical entertainment will require special sound equipment in theaters to fully reproduce the musical tones in all their true fidelity. Fantasia may well be the forerunner to a new cycle of entertainment. Watch for Fantasia.

Film adaptions of best-sellers will continue to pour from Hollywood as they have in the past. Chad Hanna with the title role amply filled by Henry Fonda should be promising. How Green Was My Valley will also be filmed by Twentieth-Century-Fox. As yet, casting is incomplete.

Those rooting, tooting Westerns, a Hollywood tradition, won't be missing this Fall. There'll be the usual so-called "grind" output and the super hoss oprys. Rangers of Fortune, The Westerner, Western Union, Calamity Jane, and Santa Fe Trail. The latter will prove particularly interesting because of the presence of Raymond Massey in the cast. This fine actor will insure a memorable performance.

In numerating the highlights of the coming season, one could not omit the mention of Orson Welles and his movie debut. Welles has been in the southland about a year working on various plots for his first film. To all appearances, the "Boy Genius" who frightened America out of her wits with his Martian invasion, has finally started filming his premiere presentation. We are in no position to say whether Welles' offering will be auspicious or merely a sorry flop, but is should be interesting at least.

If plans previously announced go through, David O. Selznik, the man who gave the world Gone With The Wind, will commence work on his next feature, Joan of Arc. In these words, one can foresee a mighty screen document that may equal the success of Margaret Mitchell's long narative of the old south.

CAMBRIDGE, ENGLAND—(ACP)—For the first time in Great Britain a university is subsidizing an investigator of psychic phenomena. The innovation is a scholarship worth $1,500 a year, open to both sexes, founded by Trinity College, Cambridge, from a bequest left to the college as a memorial to a former fellow of Trinity and founder of the Psychical Research Society.

The investigator must approach the task "with an open mind, willing and determined to cope with the peculiar problems involved in a scientific spirit."

PITTSBURGH, PA. — (ACP) — While thousands of students sit quietly in their classes in the University of Pittsburgh's Cathedral of Learning, lightning may be shivering the spine of the Cathedral, for it has been struck more than any other building in the university district, declares H. E. Dyche, professor and head of the department of electrical engineering.

A bolt of lightning which attained the crest magnitude of 21,000 amperes, enough electricity to supply four and a half Cathedrals at one time, hit the main University building.

Three direct contacts have been observed. The first occured early last spring, when 16,000 amperes shot through the Cathedral. A 3,000 volt distributor was shattered by the stroke. The second "unidirectional surge" was confirmed on June 10 and reached 21,000 amperes. The last recorded hit came sometime between October 21 and 25, 1939.

"What we need is not so much technological development but an increased development in the art of living. We've made great progress during the last 40 years in mechanical development, but there's been a tremendous lag in social development." Dr. Marion B. Smith, assistant professor of sociology at Louisiana State University, suggests a re-weighing of emphasis in America's educational institutions.

Shots At RAMdom . . .

LADIES beware! In our best Dorothy Dix demeanor we say, in resonant tones, to you college women, "Beware the avid gleam in your swain-of-the-moment's eyes." Take with a proton of cheap salt his clumsy attempts at adulation. Look askew, yea, even aslant, when he offers to take you out and see his baby nephew. (This is a subtle attempt to introduce his potential paternal predilections.) When he squints into your eyes and claims they are comparable to limpid South Sea lagoons, you must discard your vanity and face the facts! For when your 20th century Casanova is blurbing this rot, 100,293½ to 1 his mind is far away and you enter his thoughts only as a means to an end. We perceive disdainful, even incredible visages upon our feminine readers. You mutter, "My Dickie isn't like That."

But ladies do you know that your Dickie's mind resembles a movie montage in these tender moments? He sees before him marching feet; hands, dramatically cleaning a gun; men, his own age, arising at unholy hours; more marching feet, marching in shoes that really fit the feet marching next to them. Yes, you have guessed it; he sees before him, in a word, conscription. And, through you, ladies, does he descry an escape mechanism. It's not pleasant, is it girls? We are not fain to assume the role of an iconoclast; but when our womanhood is menaced by ulterior motives, we must, in fairness to our conscience, (yes, a few men still have one) cry out in protest. We know several young ladies in the college who sport news from time to time of their fiances. We trust these revelations have come to them in time.

MEN beware! Now is the time to decide whether 'tis nobler in the mind to suffer the slings and arrows of outrageous marriage or to take arms in conscription. Ay, gentlmen, there's the rub. What would you have, signing your lives away until your decree became final; or spending a year at a governmental resort? Or, in the succint words of the Assyrian philosopher, and theosopher Otineb Giwselhics, "Ich ipso nugae virginibus puerisque," you have that alternative. You may or may not concur in Giwselhic's statement. Personally, we fall in with his wisdom. But since Giwselhic would be the last one—he always did pursue a dilatory way—to deny you the right to your own fatuous thoughts, we shall do likewise. Go your own uneven way, but bear this in mind: "He who engineers a mesalliance usually ends up ———." (Three words censored here.) Credit for this last bit of counsel should properly go to Iahmae Giwselhic, brother of the aforementioned Giwselhic, also a profound student. The study of lycanthropy rather than marital bliss occupied most of Iahmai's sleeping hours, however.

Readers Demand Pictures; Editor Explains

• Mr. Moto, Please Take A Foto
Editor, The Guardsman:

Living as we do in an age of miracles, we sometimes find it hard to believe that something can be repeated until it loses its flavor. An old adage tells us that "familiarity breeds contempt." Perhaps we should then have that feeling for some of the cuts seen in The Guardsman. The Guardsman, to those unfamilar with the workings of this institution, is the newspaper published here, but which uses cuts that were old when Roosevelt was inaugurated for whichever term you care to pick.

On page 1 of Vol. XI, The Guardsman, we observe the smiling faces of Lyle Shultz and Alden Thorogood peeking at us from cuts which have become old friends during past semesters. Being vaguely known to the aforesaid gentlemen, we know, although the college apparently doesn't, that they are capable of changing their expressions. Shh, don't let the Ex Council hear of this, or it might never permit a new photograph to be taken of the college's personalities. If it will help the Council, we will ask The Guardsman to economize on printing by "foto-ing" the subjects. What a "ghastly" idea.

Turning to page 4 of this fotoless rag, we see the Military Science class plotting the same piece of ground they have been plottting since land values went up.

3000 students wearing the same face ad infinitum. Prisoned for semester after semester upon a 3 inch by 5 inch cut, forever destined to be recognized only when they might happen to wear their Guardsman expresion.

What is the matter? Photography is a comparatively simple operation. You press a little button and out comes a face. Maybe somebody ought to press a button and release the purse-strings of "X" (we're saving on printing as our contribution toward better photography—in fact, any NEW photography.

Editor's Note:

We realize as well as you the lack of cuts in The Guardsman. Unfortunately there is nothing we can do about the matter as we have no money for new pictures. All the money alloted The Guardsman by the Executive Council goes for the publishing of the paper. We are unable to issue two papers a week and have new cuts. Sorry.

• Again—Pictures
Editor, The Guardsman:

I am only one student of the college wondering where all the pictures for the sports page are. If I am not mistaken, in previous semesters the sports page of The Guardsman has been crowded with sports pictures, especially football pictures, as well as those of other types of sports. When the campus was all over the city, pictures could be taken and printed; now, when we have a home of our own we should be able to have twice as many pictures. As it is too soon for pictures of football games to appear, why can't pictures of scrimmage be taken, or of individuals who show great promise for the coming season?

Editor's note: The same applies to the sports page as the rest of the paper. Please read editor's note of above letter for explanation.

Men's Gym Class Instructors Have Woes; WAA Turns Kiddish

COACH LEE EISAN has troubles. Not only has his gym class the biggest bunch of cutters, (of which we are a member—of the gym class, Oscar, not the cutters—or are we?) but he has 80 pachyderms which he has to cram football into. Intramural Program On Experimental Basis

Because of the strangeness of the new surroundings, and the usual commotion of being settled, the intramural sports program will more or less be put on an experimental basis this semester, reported Louis "Dutch" Conlan, sports adviser for men.

The three events planned are basketball, touch tackle football, and boxing. Any club or society is eligible to compete, and all men are encouraged to participate in as many sports as possible.

Every participant will be given a thorough physical examination before entering any activity. Finalists of the boxing tournament will meet at a men's smoker scheduled later in the semester, Conlan said.

The physical education department has been alloted $125 for intramural activities, and awards will be given to winning teams and contestants, Conlan also reported.

During the past years, intramural sports have been going on with increased popularity. First place last season was won by Alden Smith's ski team, who managed to wallop the highly touted blockmen of the college. Because of a unified club advisory system, this semester's games promise to be of a greater attraction.

No Swim Team Until Spring Says Hurley, New Coach

Although there won't be a swimming team representing the college this semester, more than 4 prospective swimming champs invaded the Jefferson High School pool at Daly City last Thursday, coached by John Hurley.

Hurley, who is new at the college this semester, remarked that he planned to have a team next spring. Uncertain as to the ability of his swimming prospects, Hurley decided not to attempt to form a swimming team for this fall.

Two Swim Classes

There are two swimming classes at the Jefferson pool this semester, and Hurley plans to test the mermen in order to find out what their ability is.

The college has leased the pool for the remainder of this year. Then, after a two month lapse, it will resume swimming next March.

Strokes, Dives Demonstrated

Hurley will stress the mastery of various strokes and dives this season and will undertake the task of building up a team next March.

"The one safe, sure, serviceable, attainable quality is that of attention; it will grow in the poorest soil, and in its own due time bring forth flowers and fruit."—Dickens.

Racqueteers

Madamba, Hare, Meade Score In Tennis

Three of the college's former tennis stars came into the news recently, according to Tom Wilson, college tennis coach.

Bill Madamba, according to unconfirmed rumors, won a tennis tournament. Madamba was last semester's number one player on the local squad. Madamba has been seen around the college this semester, according to Wilson, but he has had two years of conference competition and is ineligible for further competition.

Hare Places Second

Another college tenniser, Jack Hare, entered an Oakland tournament and placed second. Wilson was unable to say who Hare's partner was, but he did know that Bill Canning, also a former Ram tennis player, was one member of the team that defeated Hare and his partner in the finals of the tourney.

Hare, according to Wilson, injured his side during the play, and continued to place second. Wilson is not positive whether Hare broke a rib or severly strained his side. He believes it to be the former.

Mead Goes To Stockton

Chet Mead, the third former college campaigner, entered a Stockton tournament. At present Wilson had no available information as to how Mead performed in the tournament.

As the college tennis situation, Wilson said that he was unable as yet to comment on the prospects. After about two weeks he hopes to be able to have a line on his players.

Song Contest Continues; Frosh Sadden Soph Hopes

Women composers of the college may hear their lyrics sung by a Women's Athletic Association chorus if they hurry to join the current song competition sponsored by the organization, Jeanne Arnold, chairman of the contest said today.

This suggestion, she added, is a means of inducing women of the college to enter the song contest which is being held between the Freshman and Sophomore women of the college.

Purpose of the contest is to provide songs for WAA meetings, songs commemorating specific sports, as well as songs for introducing people at various WAA social activities, according to Miss Arnold.

Folk Tunes May Be Obtained

For the convenience of those who are unable to compose tunes for their words, a suitable list of old folk tunes may be obtained in the checkroom on the second floor of the gymnasium, she said.

According to Grace Nell, chairman of the freshman team, interest in song writing has already been shown by several women, but Miss Arnold reported that practically no sophomore interest has been forthcoming.

Contest Closes September 23

All those who intend submitting either the words to songs, or the lyrics and melody of an original song, are urged by Miss Arnold, to begin work as soon as possible, because the closing date of the contest is September 23.

Songs submitted will be judged, and their first presentation will be at the WAA Bar-b-q, which will be held at Sigmund Stern Grove, on September 25.

Lantagne Has Big Turnout; Schedule To Be Released

More than 30 athletes turned out for soccer practice last week, much to the expressed pleasure of Coach Joe Lantagne. The league schedule, still in a formulative state, will be announced Friday, according to Lantagne.

"The boys looked rather tired after last week's workouts," Lantagne announced. "We hope to get them in shape to start practice contests some time in the very near future."

It will be hard to make any predictions about the championship possibilities this early, Lantagne remarked, but he felt that the men would make a good showing after a few practice games had been played.

Several veteran shinkickers, as well as many newcomers, have turned out, Lantagne commented. Some of the boys starred on high school teams, and should prove themselves capable of winning in college competition.

Forerunner Of College Champs

Members of the college racquet squad Bill Madamba, Jack Hare and Chet Meade made names for themselves during the summer months as did former Ramster Hal Wagner pictured above. Although Hare, during one of his matches, suffered an injury, he managed to play his game holding his own. He is expected to be completely recovered for the coming season to win more laurels for himself, his college and his coach, Tom Wilson. (See story adjoining.)

Track Veterans Return; Prospects Bright—Sweet

Prospects for next season's track team look brighter than they have for several semesters, announced Russ Sweet, college track mentor.

The field events especially are well in hand, he commented. Returning veterans include Keith Groswird, who vaulted 13 feet 6 inches for the Olympic Club, Larry Krochet, and a transfer from San Mateo Junior College, Bob Bowers.

McMeekin Returns

Among those coming back for duty in the running events is Jack McMeekin, member of last semester's relay team and quarter miler.

Sweet lists approximately 40 men registered for pre-season track, and as yet has been able to get acquainted with just a few of them.

Among those reporting whom Sweet has a line on is Raymond Scott, son of the Balboa High coach. Sweet has great expectations for this man.

Sweet lists discus throwers, pole vaulters, high jumpers, broad jumpers, shot putters, and javelin throwers as being available for duty. On the track, he is not well fortified, but has hopes of building a championship team out of the material at hand.

Several Veterans Return

Material at hand, according to the track coach, include Groswird, Loving, Krochet, Bowers, Scott, McMeekin, and several other veterans.

In about two weeks, Sweet will be able to tell more about the men under his tutelage.

Many Return To Sign For Fall Basketball

Considering the date as being too early yet to make any statements as to the outlook on fall basketball, Tom Wilson, college basketball coach, refused to make any statements concerning the local quintet.

He did say that some of last semester's veterans had signed for the pre-season practice. Prominent among them, indicated Wilson, were last season's center and guard, Bob Staynor and Joe "Fox" Pfahnl.

Pfahnl was seized with appendicitis right after the last game of the schedule and was forced into the hospital. Pfahnl claims complete recovery from his illness and is yearning for action.

WAA Plans Spread This Month At Sigmund Stern

Plans for the WAA Spread, to be held on September 25, from 4:30 o'clock to 10 o'clock at Sigmund Stern Grove, are being completed, according to Betty Teter, general chairman of the spread committee.

Replacing the traditional splash party, the spread will be held this year for the main purpose of acquainting new WAA members and possible members with the activities and aims of the WAA, she said.

Student Card Admission

According to Blanche Noyes, vice-president of the WAA, admission will be by means of a student body card plus a nominal amount, which will entitle the ticket holder to participate in all the games which are to be held, and also to partake of the barbecued food which will be served.

Another feature of the spread, will be the introduction of the new songs which are judged winners in the song contest now being promoted.

At a recent WAA council meeting, the plans for the spread were discussed, as well as plans for a "kid" party, which will be held sometime late in October or early in November, according to Bertha Mae Keller, physical education instructor.

Purpose of the "kid" party, according to Miss Keller, is to commemorate the six year anniversary of the WAA in this college. The "kid" party, which will feature "kid" games and contests, such as kiddy car races, will offer the women of the college an opportunity to dress up in "kiddy" garb. Stressing the point that all WAA activities are for all the women of the college, Miss Keller stated that this affair will be no exception.

"It is the responsibility of WAA to plan a coeducational program for all the women of the college," Miss Keller said.

Friday Afternoons Used

"That is why we have especially set aside every Friday afternoon, between the hours of 2 and 4 o'clock, for special contests and playdays, as well as for mixing activities for the women of the college," she added.

Further information is available at the WAA headquarters on the second floor of the gym or from any of the following committee for the spread: Betty Teter, general chairman; June and Irene Schunick, entertainment; Dorothy Nelson, hostess, invitations; Bernice Strube, sports; Rita Weiman, arrangements; Allene Watt, publicity; and Rita McDonald, rearrangements.

Opening Encounter

Grid Squad Meets Placer Friday At Seals Stadium

By KEI HORI

Three days of practice are left before the initial encounter with Placer, this Friday night in the half shell diamond field of Seals Stadium.

Probable starting line-ups for the Ram team was released for publication by Head Coach Lee Eisan. Back for his second year as pilot of the college team, Eisan, in his initial year, made a name for himself as a potential threat in the athletic coaching field.

Line-Up Finally Released

Back in the pivot location, Dick Wilson, stubby meatball will be flanked by Al Larracou, formerly of Berkeley High, and Clark Johnson, another returning veteran. George Meyers, 6 ft. 1 in. tackle returns to his favorite spot as will his comrade of the other side, Bill "Windy" Windeler, bespectacled behemoth. Four prospects look forward to filling the flank positions. They are Herb Taylor and Ken Hagen, the only returning veterans for that spot, with Howie Council, all-city end from Lowell and Bill Ross, formerly of Mission.

Al Nauman, spark of the '39 team will hold his spot at quarter, with Dave Cunningham in at blocking half and Luke Lowell as the running half. Johnny Blakemore, 207 pound plunging full hails from Berkeley to fill his spot.

Alternating at the tail spot will be Jimmie Honnert, all-city half from Lowell High. A potential triple threat, Honnert has not been definitely set by Head Coach Eisan as to his permanent position.

Power To Meet Placer

For this Friday's encounter with Placer, it was unofficially rumored that Coach Eisan will use a wide open attack with full power over the weak side. As for passes, they will be used as few times as possible, depending mostly upon the ground gaining of the ball packers and the stubbornness of the line.

With the ineligibility of Leo Leggett, the college has lost one of the best open field runners. Closest to this is the shifty Jimmie Honnert and Al Nauman. However, the loss of Leggett will be sorely missed.

Eisan's Second Year

Head Coach Eisan, who played football for the University of California in the late '20s, is at his second year as master mentor for the college Rams. Defeated in only one conference game last year, Eisan claims to his credit a win over the college's greatest rival, the State team's Golden Gaters. With deliberation and coolness, he and his line coach, John Gaddy, managed the men over a massive State team, stripping the Gator of 19 points. Placer, the college's first rival, was also stung for that amount.

Practice will continue throughout the week, with a possible lay-off Thursday, the day before the Ram's first game.

As yet, the type of game to be played by the Mountaineers is unknown, but may be released by the publicity department of that college by today or tomorrow.

Johnny Baries, Ram manager, released that the college has obtained new playing pants to be worn for this game. Made of gabardine, the pants are more slippery than the canvas type. "This should be good for our open field runners," Johnnie said.

College Ski Club Holds First Meeting Tomorrow

First meeting of the semester for the college Ski Club will be held tomorrow afternoon at 2 o'clock in Room 252, Bob Ogg, president of this ice-scratching group, announced.

All members of the club last semester and those who wish to join this semester are urged to attend this meeting, Ogg said. Students who checked their interest in this sport group on the Club Advisory Board blanks will also be notified of the first general meeting, he added.

"Activities this fall will be concentrated on starting training and preparing for a meet within the club, and also for forming a ski team to compete with other colleges at the end of this semester in January," Ogg commented. "At our meetings we'll have talks by prominent skiers and movies on ski technique, so members will be very busy where skiing is concerned."

During the time of Edward II and Edward III of England men dressed half the body in one color, the other half in another; frequently both colors appeared in stripes on one leg.

WAA

Women Hold Swim Classes

By NORA BAKER

College swimming classes at the Y.W.C.A., which were formerly held on Tuesdays and Thursdays, are now being held from 9 to 11 a.m. on Saturdays, Bertha Mae Keller, physical education instructor announced.

"Most women seem to be pleased with the new arrangements, because now they will be able to go in swimming on Saturday morning, and have their hair 'set' in the afternoon at favorite beauty shops," she said.

Water Polo Planned

Future plans of the swimming classes, according to Miss Keller, are for more water games, such as water polo.

"Many women at the splash party last semester said that they would like to play water games during swimming classes, so the WAA will go in for aquatics this year, as well as for diving and swim meets," Miss Keller added.

Another important sports activity class date, disclosed by Miss Keller, was that of the coeducational riding classes which are held every Thursday afternoon at the San Francisco Riding Academy on Stanyan and Haight Streets, from 1:30 to 5 p.m., with a cost of between $11 and $15 per semester.

In order to excite more feminine interest in the sport Miss Keller said, "This semester, some of the most handsome men are out for riding. Since the sport is coeducational, there is a great opportunity for making acquaintances."

Hockey, which according to Miss Keller is one of the most well-liked sports by women, has seen a remarkable turnout this semester. Miss Keller revealed that for the first time in the history of the college there has been a signup of enough women in the college to make up two complete hockey teams.

Elections Being Held

According to Miss Keller, starting last Friday and continuing through this week, election of managers for the various sport clubs, such as hockey, tennis, swimming, badminton, riding, are being held.

Promised in the near future, Miss Keller said, is a hockey playday with the women of San Francisco State College.

Miss Keller also sent out a call for all members of the Women's Block Society to plan to be present at the dedication of the gymnasium on October 3, so that they can assist in ushering. Members of the block society, of which there are about 20 in all, are those women who have received the highest award possible in WAA.

Lantagne To Train Men For Intramural Bouts

Still waiting for an opporunity to meet his boys, Joe Lantagne, Ram boxing instructor, is making plans for the Intramural Boxing Tournament to be held toward the end of the semester.

Rallies, registration, and innumerable other events, have kept Lantagne from seeing his boxing prospects. When he finally does get them together, he plans to teach them the fundamentals of the pugilistic art.

"I want it understood," Lantagne exclaimed, "that no boy will be allowed to fight until he has proved to me that he knows how to defend himself properly."

All men entering the intramural matches will have to undergo strenuous training, he remarked.

It is too early in the semester to predict future boxing events, but Lantagne mentioned that several matches might develop during the course of the semester.

National Defense

College Military Science Students At Camp McQuade

Ten students, enrolled last semester in the department of Military Science, yesterday began a program of intensive military training with the National Guard at Camp McQuade, near Watsonville.

Members of the 250th Coast Artillery, they were among the first to be called out in California by the recent legislation of the President, and the first to be called from the Bay Area.

The regiment, armed with 155mm. guns, is the only mobile artillery unit on the Pacific Coast.

Edward Terzian and Eugene Center, members of B Battery, are awaiting their appointments as second lieutenants at Camp McQuade, according to James S. Hughes of the college Military Science Division.

Already designated for posts as second lieutenants with the Guard are John Benton and Howard Cloud, former students here, Hughes said.

James Huntsman, who continued his education at the University of California after his graduation here, has already received his commission, and has been assigned to the regular army for one year of active duty. He is now stationed at Fort Winfield Scott.

Two former editors of The Guardsman, John Julius and Bill Frantz, were among those at Camp McQuade. During Frantz' period of editorship, The Guardsman attained national recognition when it was rated among the firs six junior college publications in the country.

Others who began training yesterday were Stanley Doughty, Robert Hawse, Ezra Morgan, William Noble, John Proctor, Raymond Rhode, John Stahmann, and Samuel Ware.

Jobs

Grads Need Personality

LOS ANGELES, CALIF.—(ACP)—A college graduate has the best chance of getting a job in the business world if he has a good personality, former experience and specialized training, according to a recent survey conducted on the Los Angeles campus of the University of California.

Good grades in college rated a poor fourth.

Most employers indicated a preference for college-trained men over high school, business school or trade school graduates. They emphasized, however, that college-trained men should be equipped with some practical experience before graduation.

Among the faults that business men found with college graduates were that they are somewhat over-confident, that they expect the world to give them a job because they are graduates, and that they err in thinking that a diploma may be an excuse for an untidy appearance, careless work and a lack of desire to learn the fundamentals of business.

Today's Newspaper Reporter College Trained

AUSTIN, TEXAS—(ACP)—Today's composite reporter is 75 per cent college-trained, knows a little less about any given subject but boasts a working knowledge on far more subjects than his predecessor.

This is the finding of P. J. Thompson, chairman of the University of Texas department of journalism.

The old-time editors were well-informed on a few subjects, he said, but today's college-trained journalist has been at least "exposed" to a variety of fields that weren't opened to the old-timers in their composing-room apprenticeship.

"Probably 90 per cent of those entering journalism in 1940 will have college training" Thompson declared, "and perhaps 75 per cent will be products of journalism departments and schools."

Library Open To Students For Reference, Study

With registration over, the library is again back to normal and open to students for reference and study. Several new students have been added to the staff of assistants and more NYA members are being assigned to library work to give better and faster service, according to Marcus Skarstedt, librarian.

Assistants in the cataloging department are processing new books for use. Most of these books are volumes of editions already on file, but have been added because of the increase in library circulation over last semester. The object of the department at present is to get the books requested by instructors and students ready for use and on the shelves.

This spirit is manifested by the display of empty lunch bags, sandwich wrappings, empty cigarette packages, empty milk bottles, burning cigarette butts, old newspapers, and even pieces of uneaten sandwich crusts thrown indifferently around the rear entrance of the school. The sum-total of this individual carelessness and selfish disregard of the other fellow's feelings, is an ugly area resembly a refuse heap. Students sitting out of doors during rest periods on the rear steps are forced not only to face this spread of refuse, but are also annoyed by the black stinging flies that have been attracted to the spot by an unerring instinct in search of bits of decaying food.

Why is it that a certain small group of students here are so utterly lacking in a feeling of pride for their college?

If for no other reason, it would seem that it might be wise for them to recognize that their Junior College days provide an experience in social living that might well be taken advantage of. For the same code of behavior is demanded within the school walls of their college, as is expected and demanded in the outside world.

So why not begin today to develop a social behavior pattern worthy of a decent American citizen? The elementary rules are simple. A sense of cleanliness. A sense of respect for the other fellow's feelings. And above all, a sense of pride in one's personal surroundings, whether in the privacy of one's own home, or in any other place one may find himself—public or otherwise.

And as a general reminder. There are two large galvanized containers standing in the area so disgustingly cluttered with lunch refuse. They are conspicuously displayed. They are to be used for but one purpose, and that is for the disposal of REFUSE.

Peanuts Contain Energy Says Biology Professor

PITTSBURGH, PA. — (ACP) — Briefly, here's a story and a half in a peanut shell.

All the energy the average person uses in his thinking during one day could be obtained by eating one peanut, says Dr. E. Alfred Wolf, associate professor of biology at the University of Pittsburgh. The average college student, however, uses that much energy in one hour's sustained mental work.

The average college student takes from 1,200 to 2,400 calories a day for mere subsistence. Anything he does—even eating—must be added to this basal metabolism figure.

The average football player, for instance, needs enough energy to raise six gallons of water from freezing to boiling point, Dr. Wolf added.

You could talk for two hours on the energy you need to eat your food every day. Maybe that's the origin of the saying, "She'd rather talk than eat."

Then, the student who plays Bach on the piano adds only 40 calories to his basal metabolism; if he plays one of Teddy Wilson's musical gyrations, his figure will be upped to 580 calories, which is the same number used when trotting down to the corner pool room.

Wrestling is by far the most strenuous sport says Dr. Wolf. It would take 125 hours of thinking to use up the same energy that you must have for one hour's wrestling.

A note for girls who wish to reduce: If you eat enough proteins, these proteins will carry away the excess calories which you have eaten. Excess calories, you know, are responsible for that excess weight.

Market Street Car Tickets At Bank Soon

Beginning Thursday, Market Street Railway car tickets will be sold to all junior college students at the bank in Room 188, Michael M. Zarchin, faculty treasurer, announced.

Starting this week the bank is ready to return all book exchange money to the students, Zarchin said.

Municipal Railway car tickets cannot be purchased more than two at a time. Signature and serial number are now required as the car tickets are not transferable, Zarchin explained.

Zarchin again reminded students that the bank is open only from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m.

Social Committee To Meet, Adjust Social Calendar

To adjust the college social calendar, the social committee will meet at the home of Jean Arnold, Associated Students' vice-president, some time this month at a date still undecided.

"We postponed a previously scheduled meeting because of uncertainty concerning some activities," Miss Arnold said.

The Associated Students' vice-president heads the committee, other members of which are Alden Thorogood, Bill Williams, John Mowbray, Jim Honnert (class presidents elected last Tuesday), Barbara Brown, Marian MacKillop, and Henry Suerstedt.

Business

Jobs Available But No One To Fill Them---Marsh

Jobs open—

But no one to fill them!!

That's the slightly bewildering plight of the college business department as revealed by F. Grant Marsh, business head.

"There are jobs available," he said, "but no students qualified to fill them."

Pointing out that "the business world, recognizing the fact that a large number of people are unemployed, is able to pick and choose very carefully from among applicants by raising their standards," Marsh declared the result to be a raising in turn of the college standards to meet employers' qualifications.

Through the insurance and other business classes, the college has been steadily increasing the number of student placements until now, demand is threatening to exceed supply. Already this semester, three students have been placed in full-time positions: namely, Margaret Sommerset, Pearl Insurance Company; Edward Porter, Fireman's Fund Insurance Company; and John Riordan, Pacific National Fire Insurance Company, according to Marsh.

"In the few weeks since college opened, I have had calls for male stenographers and I have no one to fill them," Marsh said. "It's gratifying to know, however, that the number of male students enrolled in the beginning classes in stenography is more this semester than ever before," he added.

People do not know where to look for work, Marsh said, adding that his office is constantly receiving calls for competent students.

Any students interested in obtaining employment in the business world should file an application with him, Marsh advised, at his office, Room 222.

Officer

AWS Appoints New Secretary

Appointment of Aspasia Vasilatos as secretary of the Associated Women Students was announced today by Margaret Dougherty, AWS adviser.

"Gladys Young, who was elected at the end of last semester has evidently not returned to the college this semester," Miss Dougherty said. "At least, she has not answered several messages which we have sent her, and she has not communicated with us in any way."

Miss Vasilatos, a sophomore student, has been active in women's activities and was on the orientation committee which helped new students.

Plans for AWS activities later in the semester are being considered now, Miss Dougherty added.

Affairs traditionally sponsored by the AWS are the tea held in honor of seniors at the various high schools in the city and an activity which usually is either a tea or a rally.

Virginia Hubbert, AWS president, disclosed tentative plans for a Sunday afternoon tea similar to that held last semester for college women and their parents. In the past this event has always been generally considered quite successful by sponsors and those attending alike.

Flask Of Cow's Milk Sealed For Posterity

SYRACUSE, N.Y.—(ACP)—How would you like a glass of 500-year-old milk for breakfast? Several centuries hence some lucky individual may have the opportunity of enjoying that very thing, and he may thank the ghost of Dr. C. W. Root, head of Syracuse University's bacteriology department.

It was nearly 11 years ago when Dr. Root placed in the cornerstone of Hendricks chapel a hermetically sealed flask of cow's milk, along with a flask of nutrient agar, both purified of all bacteria before sealing.

"Five hundred or a thousand years from now some one will be able to drink that milk, which will be as sweet as it was the day it was placed there," said Dr. Root in a recent lecture.

The purpose of Dr. Root's experiment is simply to demonstrate that, with the absence of bacteria, foodstuffs can indefinitely retain their nutrient value and edibility.

"The only thing that can spoil the demonstration is the breaking of the flask by extreme temperature change, said Dr. Root.

The flasks of Dr. Root have as company in the cornerstone a copy of the Daily Orange, student newspaper, published in 1929, along with various other articles not on record. A few days preceding the laying of the cornerstone by Chancellor Charles W. Flint, June 9, 1929, Dr. Burgess Johnson, director of public relations, suggested that samples of boarding house food be placed into the small vault in order that future observers may inspect the quality of our present-day hot-dogs, milk shakes, and barbecue sandwiches.

Hygiene Tests Determine Student Background

Tests given to the personal hygiene classes at the beginning of the semester are to determine the students' background and not to classify them according to individual ability. These tests have been worked out by the departments heads in order to adapt the couse to the individual needs of the student, according to Russ Sweet, athletic instructor.

Students who have been changed to different classes since taking the test have been moved because their test either proved that they had a great deal of background for the course or none at all, Sweet said.

Before this system was used, the hygiene classes were fundamentally suited to few of the students and those who had taken such courses in high school that would give them a background for the course found themselves far in advance of the other students. The new system has been used and revised several times and is nearing perfection.

Debate Team To Meet Other State Colleges

The debating class, under the direction of instructor Lloyd Luckmann, will compete this semester in debate with the University of San Francisco, San Francisco State College, and Salinas, Modesto, and Sacramento Junior Colleges. The topic for discussion will be National Preparedness and War.

Everyone in the debate class will participate in the discussions. This year's debating class is entirely new, but the speakers have had former experience in speech work.

Men's Athletic Council To Discuss Activities

With all plans completed for their first meeting of the year, today, the Men's Athletic Council, is looking forward to a very busy and successful season. A large scale intramural program is being planned consisting of a six man football, soccer, and many other sports.

The program will be under the charge of Coach Fred McFarland. All the men are earnestly requested to come out to the men's gymnasium, and sign up for some sport when sign ups start.

Four New Instructors Added To Business Dept.

Announcement of the addition of four new instructors to the college's business department staff was made recently by the department.

Edward Larsen, from San Mateo Junior College; Ruth Plimpton from Fullerton Junior College; Phoebe Ward, and Llewellyn Snyder form a group of "frosh" instructors which is perhaps larger than that of any other of the college's departments.

The department also declared its intention to do all of the college's mimeographing in the college mimeographing classes. Mimeographing was formerly done through the registrar's office, according to business instructors.

Purchase of several new office machines, among them a multilith duplicator, an electric addressograph, a billing machine, and an International electric typewriter was disclosed.

Tickets For Football Games Go To High Schools

Tickets for all college football games will be sold at reduced rates to students of the city high schools, Hugh Waite of the Internal Publicity Committee announced today.

The tickets, which would be sold at the gate for 25 cents to student body card holders will cost the student only 15 cents if bought at the schools.

Tickets for the first game will be on sale in the schools soon.

COLLEGE

IT HAS just come to our attention that some of the students of the college really go to great lengths to gain an education.

The person we had in mind is a freshman student who lives in Benicia. He has to travel for three and a half hours every morning to get to the college, and of course just as long to get home.

This freshman has to get up at 5:20 in the morning to make a TEN o'clock class.

Next time some of us living in the city or even in the east bay begin moaning about the length of time it takes us to get to classes, we should think of this fellow from Benicia and then realize how well off we are.

Anyone who is that determined to get an education will probably make good use of it and someday amount to something.

WANTED: a beautiful girl between the ages of 19 and 21, no taller than five feet, six inches, to marry eligible young bachelor before he is eligible for the draft (personal description furnished on request). Girl must have money for engagement ring, wedding ring, and marriage license as bachelor is broke.

IF plans for the AMS bonfire go through, the affair should be one of the best the college has ever had.

It is rumored that if the bonfire meets with the approval of the students it may become a semi-annual affair, either in addition to or replacing the usual men's smoker.

THE hotel division should certainly receive a few bouquets on the way it is handling the noon-time rush in the cafeteria.

The place is certainly a madhouse from 11 to 1. We walked in there recently and had to take cover from the mob of students hurrying back and forth.

The amazing part of the whole thing is that the hotel division students breeze about, handling things efficiently and quietly as if they were accustomed to living in a madhouse all the time. (Any similarity to hotel students living or dead is not intended.)

SOMETHING will really need to be done about this rally situation. The center quad, although a nice enough spot for a rally for a small school or college, is hardly the place to gather the number of students we have here.

Of course, this is one of the disadvantages the college must put up with for a while, but there is a possibility that something can be done to improve the situation.

Perhaps the Executive Council will take it under advisement.

A SIGN of progress: The actual beginning of plans for a college yearbook. Slowly but surely, the college is acquiring all the superficial but important things that go into the making of a complete college from administration to student activities.

NATIONAL

WITH the opening of the national political campaign, the people of the United States at home listening to the radio, are beginning to realize that all is not a bed of roses.

Whether or not they favor Willkie or Roosevelt, they are finding that most of the time the family radio is turned on, the receiver gives out with either a political talk from some over-stuffed politician, or the latest news bulletins from abroad.

It is of course vitally important that the nation be informed of the latest war developments and also hear both sides of the political question but too much of this is going to sour the American public.

AT THE rate Wendell Willkie is going, even if he wins the election he won't have any voice left to take the oath of office.

FOREIGN

SINCE the fall of France, that nation has more or less taken a back seat in the newspapers.

The Germans, however, do not seem to share the attitude of the rest of the world for they are transferring some one to two million French soldiers to prison camps in Germany.

Although the war with France is actually over, the temper of the French soldiers is such that the Nazis dare not release them.

Perhaps some of these poilus should have been the generals instead of the blind and hesitant men who lost the battle of France.

Extra-Curricular

New Intramural Athletic Program Planned By College

Plans and formation of an intramural athletic board have been released by faculty adviser, Fred C. McFarland. This is the first large scale attempt at organizing such a program for the college.

The program for this semester's intramural activities is presented below.

1. Athletic period

a. During the athletic period from 3 p.m. to 4:45 p.m., Mondays, Tuesdays, Wednesdays and Thursdays, there will be an intramural program consisting of eleven sports.

Intramural

Sports Ruled By Gym Dept.

Replacing the Club Advisory Board, the physical education department now wields final authority over intramural activities for this semester, Fred McFarland, intramural adviser, announced this week.

Pending a general survey within the next two weeks between McFarland and the physical educational department concerning the eligibility of competing teams and available equipment, intramural sports have thus far been a closed incident.

In past semesters, the intramural program has been held under the auspices of the CAB. No reason for the change has been released.

Activities scheduled by the program are basketball, touch-tackle football, and boxing. Every participant will be given a thorough physical examination before being allowed to compete. The physical education department has been alloted $125 for intramural activities, and awards to be distributed to winning teams and contestants.

Rustic Art Comes To Cafeteria

Students who want to enjoy art and the great outdoors at their meals will henceforth be directed to the college cafeteria, where a large figure of a ram, carved from the redwood of California's outdoor empire, will stand.

This symbol of heretofore rambling Ramdom will be ready soon, according to Archibald J. Cloud, president of the college, although no definite date for its completion has been announced.

Plans of Dudley Carter, sculptor-on-the-job, include giving Mr. Ram the height of 9 feet 8 inches, while a base 15 feet high is also being fashioned, possibly to guard against competition by local Goliaths. Mr. Ram will not have the tax collectors know it, but he is valued at approximately $2500.

Not related to the ram, but also being sculptored by the same hand, is the Goddes of the Forest at the Golden Gate International Exposition, where Carter spends his spare time (full day) demonstrating Art in Action.

Clubs Must Renew Charters Before October 15—Ogg

College organizations which fail to apply for renewal of charters to the Club Advisory Board by the date of the third meeting this semester will be put on a suspension list, Bob Ogg, CAB president, announced this Tuesday, when representatives from various organizations assembled for the first time this fall.

Applications thus far received will be examined by the CAB membership committee, and if found satisfactory will be presented at the next meeting, he added. These must now include the complete constitution and by-laws of the clubs, James S. Hughes, CAB adviser noted. Forms may be secured in Room 169 by those groups which have not already received them.

Regular meetings of the club board have been set for every other Tuesday at 2 o'clock in Room 142.

First issue of CABBY, Club Advisory Board bulletin, appeared at the first meeting, and will continue to be put out every other Tuesday thereafter, Ogg said, advising representatives to hand in any notice of their club activities that they wish published, not later than 2 o'clock on the Tuesday preceding each meeting.

Contest

Win Prize By Naming Year-Book

To secure a name for the college yearbook to be published next semester, a contest open to all students begins today.

Entries will be accepted until October 1, and announcement of the winning title will be made shortly after by the committee of judges.

A copy of the yearbook, with due recognition of the title it will bear, will be presented to the student who submits the chosen name.

Entries should be original and unique, and chosen with an eye toward permanency, for the title selected will become the official name of the publication.

The only previous attempt to publish a college annual was done by the class of June '37. It did not have the scope of the ideal yearbook, and was merely a record of the first two years of the college's existence. Through lack of student support it was not attempted the following year, and none has been published since that time.

This issue marks the inauguration of an annual which is to be a yearly publication of permanent standing. Only through full co-operation of the students can this be made possible.

Every student is asked to co-operate in determining the yearbook's name.

The committee of judges will be comprised of President Archibald J. Cloud, Dean Edwin Browne, Dorothy Trood, Dan McHugh, Len Gross, and Lyle Shultz.

Entries will be accepted by McHugh, or they may be submitted to the student body office, Room 169.

Welfare Council Handles Annual Plus Other Work

By working in two separate groups this semester, the Welfare Council will be able to take up college problems other than the planning and editing of a proposed year-book, Dan McHugh, chairman, announced.

The group now concerned with a yearly publication for the college is headed by Dorothy Trood, former Associated Students' vice-president who has been appointed temporary chairman. The assistance of anyone with previous yearbook experience will be appreciated, Miss Trood said. As soon as plans are completed, they will be submitted to the college Publications Board, she indicated.

McHugh, with Miss Trood and Associated Students' President Lyle Shultz, has been conferring with representatives of various printing and engraving companies.

Three Advisers Appointed

Francis Colligan, Richard Allman, and Beverly Pasqualetti, all instructors at the college, have been appointed by President Archibald J. Cloud as faculty advisers to the year-book at the request of the student committee. "All three men have had valuable experience in their respective fields and possess knowledge which will be indispensable to our year-book," McHugh commented.

Last Monday McHugh, Miss Trood, and Shultz discussed with President Cloud the problems and details incident to the publication of the annual. President Cloud was favorably impressed with the plans, opining that "such a work will contribute to the enjoyment of the students of the college."

Survey Given Last Semester

Activity of the Welfare Council last semester was concentrated on a survey of student interest, in which men and women of the college were asked to rate the various clubs and athletics. These results have now been tabulated and will shortly be available for publication, McHugh revealed.

To find a name for the college yearbook, a contest open to all students is being contemplated, according to council members. Further announcements of this contest will appear later, they said.

The publication of a year-book, said McHugh, is not an easy task, and it will require a tremendous amount of effort.

He seconded Miss Trood's request for persons with experience on yearbooks. Artists, people with a reasonable typographical knowledge, students versed in picture make-up, people with originality—all these will be required for the production of a generally satisfactory year-book, McHugh pointed out.

Administration Appointment

Conlan Takes Over Coordinator Position As Sullivan Leaves

To San Diego

J. Graham Sullivan, for the past year Coordinator of Educational Management at the college, will vacate his post within the next few days to take up new duties as Director of Vocational Education in the San Diego school system.

During the last four and a half years Sullivan has served the college in various capacities, receiving the appointment to his present duties as assistant to President Archibald J. Cloud in 1939.

He became a member of the faculty in 1936, when the college was still in the throes of development, was an instructor in the Hotel and Restaurant Management Division, and within a comparatively short time was made coordinator of that division.

Sullivan Given Job In '39

In 1939 Sullivan was proffered the numerous duties of the Coordinator of Educational Management which he accepted.

As assistant to President Cloud he has had charge of all purchasing of equipment, has aided in the Hotel and Restaurant Management Division and has been responsible for the coordination of many new courses in the college curricular, in addition to maintaining coordination of the present educational program.

Leaving After Four and a Half Years

Now, after four and a half years of service, during which the San Francisco Junior College has acquired its own buildings and has firmly established itself in collegiate circles, Sullivan departs to still further advancement.

"It is regrettable," the coordinator said, "that after dreaming all these years of having our own campus and buildings, to have to leave when that dream has finally come true, but my new position offers advancement and cannot be refused."

J. Graham Sullivan

New Job Important

As Director of Vocational Education in San Diego, Sullivan will direct not only vocational activity for the regular school system, but will carry his experience into the continuation and trade school branches as well.

In his new work, vocational training in aeronautics probably will be stressed, he stated, because of the recent National Defense Measures, and the expansion of several large airplane companies in that area.

Sullivan's resignation has been sent to the Board of Education, and its acceptance is merely a matter of formality.

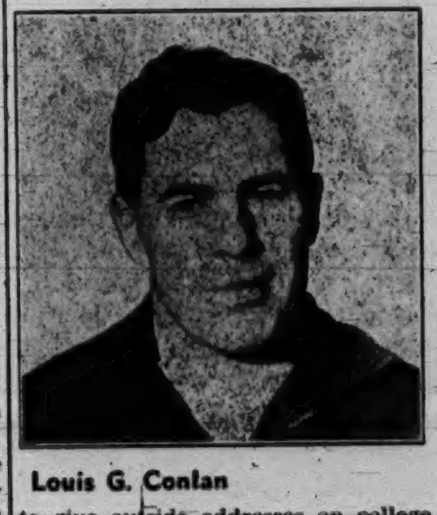
Successor

Louis G. Conlan, college basketball coach, has been named to succeed J. Graham Sullivan, former Coordinator of Educational Management, by an action of the Board of Education last Tuesday.

Conlan is to assume immediately the post Sullivan vacated this week to take advantage of a highly responsible position in the San Diego school system.

In replacing Sullivan, Conlan will assume a position that requires exceptional resourcefulness and untiring work. The college coordinator is one of the busiest men in the administration.

Conlan has had previous administrative experience as an organizer of the civil service courses within the college, and has often been called on to give outside addresses on college civil service work.



Louis G. Conlan

He is also well-known in the sports world as one of the outstanding football officials on the Pacific Coast. Last year he was head referee at the Rose Bowl game.

St. Mary's claimed him as a star quarterback for three years.

Tonight's Game

Cheer Section For College

For tonight's game with Placer Junior College, a roped-off rooting section for the students of the college has been provided, announced Pete Aydelotte, college yell leader.

The local rooters will be expected to remain in or near the section and show some spirit, the yell leader continued. "In the past the games have not been too well attended but we expect to have a large crowd on hand now that we have our own campus," Aydelotte revealed.

Admission Free With Card

Admission to the game is free to all holders of student body cards from the college, he said.

Aydelotte also announced the names of the members of the rally committee. They are Bill Menary, Mel Steele, Hugh Waite, George Retelas, Dan McHugh, Lyle Shultz, Ted Theodus, Mel Chicazola, Bill Croter, Ed Ebbey, and himself as chairman.

Sacramento Excursion Planned

The new committee has already made plans for an excursion to Sacramento on October 18. The occasion, according to the chairman, is the football engagement with Sacramento Junior College.

If present plans are successful, the excursion will be by train, commented Aydelotte. The train will leave San Francisco at 3 p.m. and will arrive in Sacramento in early evening, allowing time to eat and look at the town, he announced.

Fare $1.75 Round Trip

The fare will be $1.75 for a round trip, according to the yell leader. "This will include a dancing car and an observation car on our own train," Aydelotte concluded.

"The Southern Pacific will give us the special train only if 200 students make reservations before October 14," announced the yell leader. This should be easy when the students realize the advantages of a train excursion, according to him.

Aydelotte pointed to the previous successful excursions of this type that have been fostered by the college. Students who went on these excursions have had nothing but praise for them, he said.

Panel Discussion Held Over For Additional Week

Scheduled to begin next Monday, the panel discussion prepared by several students of Political Science 2a has been postponed until the following week, Alden W. Smith, instructor in the course, announced.

The panel discussion group as named by Smith includes himself, President Archibald J. Cloud, Lyle Shultz, Jean Arnold, Alden Thorogood, Mary Frances Malone, and Edward Hardies, chairman.

A five minute talk will be given by each member of the panel followed by a discussion from the group at large, which is limited to those students who hold college offices, Smith said.

The theme of the discussion is expected to treat with the part student government should play in national defense.

Addresses by the students will be followed by corrective advice by President Cloud, according to present tentative plans.

Part-Time Housework Jobs Open To College Women

Some part-time positions are open to women of the college, Margaret Dougherty, dean of women, announced. The positions open are in the nature of housework during after school hours.

Judiciary Group Cracks Down On Card Offenders

Though not yet ready for official announcement, a system of checking illegal use of Associated Students' membership cards has been formulated by the Judiciary Committee, and revealed by Chairman Edward Hardies as follows:

First offense on the part of students, upon being discovered, will bring notice to appear for verbal warning before the committee.

Following subsequent offenses, one of these measures will be imposed:

First degree censure—Stamping of card.

Second degree censure—Stamping of card and withholding for period of one month from date of confiscation.

Third degree censure—Stamping of card and withholding for period of two months from date of confiscation.

Full censure—Confiscation of card for remainder of semester and suspension from all extra-curricular activities.

Hardies defined the illegal use of Associated Students' cards as the holding of the card by other than the owner at dances, games, etc.

Measures will be adopted also for other college problems, such as cheating, perhaps, which may be referred to his committee this semester, he announced.

Regular meetings of the judicial group is scheduled for 12 o'clock every Friday. Members include Hardies, Jean Arnold, Barbara Brown, Henry Suerstedt, and Stanley Ward.

Football Season Will Test College Spirit

TONIGHT the football season opens. This time, however, tonight means more than just the opening of another grid season.

For five years we have gone blithely along supporting the athletic department in a very half-hearted way and blaming the whole situation on the lack of our own centralized location.

We now have that central location, and tonight will in a measure determine whether we were justified in excusing ourselves on those grounds, or whether it was merely a blind to cover up our lack of spirit and morale.

It seems strange that there could possibly exist a college that does not support its teams, yet we have held that position for five years.

Now is the time to get out of the rut we have dug for ourselves. Now, there is no excuse for lack of attendance at games, and at rallies. Now, there is no excuse for the yell leaders getting no response to their exhortations to cheer on the team.

Reports seem to indicate that the Rams have a good football squad this year. To those students who only support a winning team (and unfortunately there are many persons like that) this should prove heartening. To the students who support their team, win or lose, it should be an added incentive to attend the games.

The least the students can do is to get out to the game and support them with cheers.

Off-Campus Location Feasible For Dance

LAST Friday's dance at the Palace has called up a lot of comment concerning the possibility of more off-campus dances.

Because of financial reasons and the facilities for social affairs at the college, the finance committee has recommended to the Executive Council that all dances be held on the campus. This point of view is more than understandable to the average thinking student who is aware of the college's increased expenditures this semester. Cutting out rental charges for various social affairs seems the first logical thing to do.

However, most of the students will agree that affairs held off the college grounds possess more attraction than those taking place in the college gymnasium, for example.

Thus, there has arisen a question in the minds of many students as to whether it would be possible to have not all college dances but at least one more dance away from the campus. And, by popular opinion, it seems that the affair under discussion is the semi-annual Associated Men Students' barn dance.

In answer to the anticipated argument that to hold the dance in a barn or country club as the AMS has in the past, is expensive, it can be said that rental of the Alvarado Barn, for example, is certainly a negligible expense as persons checking on last semester's AMS expenses can verify. Moreover, no reasonable student can deny the fact that such an informal affair is a lot more fun in a suitable location.

Another point in favor of having the Barn Dance in a barn or club is found in the fact that such informal affairs are undoubtedly hard on the place where they are held. The thought of students clumping about the new men's or women's gymnasiums in heavy boots and scratching and roughening the surface of the new floors in a Paul Jones is hardly sensible or reasonable from a financial viewpoint.

In the final analysis, it will be student opinion which will probably decide the issue. Those who want the barn dance off the campus, should make themselves known to the AMS officers. Perhaps something can be done about the matter.

At any rate, why not try?

Future Gifts From Fair Will Beautify Campus

IF ALL works out as planned, the presence of the Golden Gate International Exposition will have proved highly profitable to the college.

Probably the most valuable benefit accruing from the Fair will be the gigantic mural—22 feet 1½ inches by 73 feet 9 inches to be exact—created for the future college library building by one of the greatest of living muralists, Diego Rivera. Though some time will elapse before the erection of the library building, there is the satisfaction that the mural will be there, waiting.

Herman Volz, who is responsible for those two vivid splashes of color on the Federal Building at the Fair, is executing, on the opposite wall from Rivera of the Art in Action section of the arts building, a sizable mosaic that is to adorn the college science building.

Two tempera paintings, also of good size, have been promised for the college. Neither their nature nor the artists are known as yet.

For the more immediate future is the possibility of acquiring Exposition shrubbery for the landscaping of the college. The scope of the grounds makes this undertaking one of real importance and the acquisition of trees and plants most desirable.

Also under the heading of art is the granite head of Leonardo Da Vinci and the limestone head of Thomas Edison. The first is now resting, completed, at the Exposition; the other, nearing completion, patiently rests at the rear of the college.

All together, an imposing array of gifts is soon to be laid before the college, and real cause for appreciation and thanks exists.

Ram's Horn Is Place To Air Opinions

MANY of the students who read The Guardsman have at one time or another wanted to express an opinion and have that opinion printed in the paper.

The Guardsman runs a feature on page two of every issue which is devoted exclusively to airing the feelings of the students of the college. It is the only column in the paper set aside for the use of students at large.

The college is not perfect, student government is not perfect, and The Guardsman is not perfect. Surely there are some students who have constructive criticism, helpful hints or new ideas that could benefit the college in some way or another. If that is true, the Ram's Horn is the place to put the opinion.

Many students have wanted to express an objection about something connected with the college but do not do so because they do not wish their names connected with their communications.

If such is the case, the writer need only mention his wishes to the editor and his name will be withheld.

Meet The Students

By EVE BURKEY

Shades of Houdini!

There's magic at Balboa Park and it's not just in the moonlight! What started to be a casual Meet-the-Students interview ended up—but, settle down by the fire while a strange tale unravels.

"Why don't you interview Fred Burke?" asked Miss Wong (how'd she get in here?) Little forseeing the consequences, we allowed her to drag us over to a fellow in a khaki shirt. What happened later made us forget most of the stock questions such as height and weight, but we did get an impression of blond hair, grey eyes and a nice grin. Not very weird yet? Just wait.

An engineering major, Fred is studying German and chemistry. Born in New York, he has lived in Illinois, Colorado, China,—anyway, he's been around. (he must have wasted little time in one place for he's only twenty-three now).

Fred has worked in most of those places too. In Denver, Colorado, he worked in an army hospital, in China, with the American legation—at least, we think that's what he said. It sounded like double talk to us, but Miss Wong vouched for it as being a Mandarin dialect. (probably sounded like double talk to her too)

In the evening, Burke is a dancing teacher at one of the schools downtown—which institution he praises highly. He fills in the rest of the day selling drawing instruments, photo supplies, and doing commercial photography. Oh yes Mr. Burke—practices—MAGIC!

"For instance," he said, "if someone offered you a nickle—like this—and then it disappeared—like this"—Burke, talking like Lee Tracy at his glibest, flashed the nickle from his hand and took it out of his elbow, out of his knee, out of his shoulder, out of every portion of his anatomy—"you might call it magic. I don't—I call it a trick!"

Wrong, Mr. Burke. We call it unfair to disorganized reporters.

Cowie

The Spectator

IN THE world of the motion picture, the name Alfred Hitchcock is synonymous with the tops in suspense and adventure. This rotund English gentleman happens to be a master in producing films of breathless excitement and dramatic intensity. Such films as Thirty-nine Steps, The Lady Vanishes, and Rebecca are typical examples of Hitchcock's gripping emotional style.

Walter Wanger's new production, Foreign Correspondent, based remotely on Sheean's book Personal History, is Hitchcock at his best. Frankly, the film is the most thrilling celluloid drama to hit the screen in many a moon. This tale of a newspaper man vainly attempting to fathom the intricate by-ways of European intrigue, is overpowering in its shocking impact. For two hours it holds audiences, to a man, in a state of tense expectation that rises to a dramatic conclusion as spectacular as any ever presented by the screen.

Joel McCrea interprets the role of an American newspaperman sent to Europe to dig beneath the cover of shifting rumors and unearth concrete truths. Immediately he becomes involved in a startling mystery that revolves around the assassination of a high governmental official. That suffices for the main plot element. Hitchcock with his genius for dramatic effect, does the rest.

A superior cast including Herbert Marshall, George Sanders, Larraine Day and Robert Benchely, all give splendid accounts with their diversified talents. Sanders, in particular has numerous opportunities to shine and takes full advantage of them. This lad can really act.

The changing map of Europe necessitated continued shifts in the script. All credit to Hitchcock and Co. for producing such a masterpiece in the face of many obstacles. Foreign Correspondent becomes our nomination as top "Thrill" Film of the Year.

Quotable Quotes

"Perhaps the most frightening aspect of modern war is the intellectual blackout which it creates. One does not have to subscribe to H. G. Well's grim prophecy that 'mankind, which began in a cave behind a windbreak, will end in the disease-soaked ruins of a slum'; but certainly the night in Europe cannot be long continued without the sacrifice of cultural values on so vast a scale that the chance of an enlightened and gracious life, not alone for this generation in Europe but for the children and grandchildren of this generation, will be irretrievably lost." —Rockefeller Foundation's President Raymond B. Fosdick.

Hold That Line — By Sullivan

On The Feminine Side

IF A surrealistic artist were to take "Miss Junior College" as a subject for a more or less disjointed piece of work, he could cover the subject pretty well by painting a couple of worn text books, a heavy camel's hair coat, some rather used looking saddle shoes, and a half filled glass of coca cola.

Certainly those articles mentioned above are most in prominence upon the campus as far as the feminine population is concerned. It is rather amazing to the casual observer that women at this college have become so very conservative in their actions and clothing.

Looking back to the beginning of the semester, we remember our rather naive hopes that at last we would see something startling and different in the line of college clothes. We anticipated every woman as a potential illustration for Mademoiselle or Harper's college issue with the lecture halls and cafeteria fairly teeming with novel ideas in college fashions. But no. Here we find a campus with smart looking women in abundance, to be sure, but where, oh where are the tricky new styles that were going to set us all on our style conscious ears?

What ever happened to knee length stockings on the campus, or does anyone know? According to the magazines and the discussions of pre-lecture "bull sessions", we were led to expect to become practically blase on the matter. And it can be truthfully said that not more than half a dozen women have had the nerve to wear them on campus.

Yet, despite the evident taboo on knee length stockings, we can remember seeing one exceptionally smart woman wearing them. Her stockings were of an ultra cable knit in a red shade that was really brilliant. With her stockings (or vice versa) she wore a corduroy jumper in the same vivid shade and a long-sleeved plaid shirt. Heads turned to look as she passed along the hall, and those glances were really admiring.

Another rather amusing outfit that has been seen about the college consisted of a navy jumper dress with a long-sleeved red flannel shirt and a cocky little jockey cap topping the costume. Those little beanies with long feathers or plumes and jockey caps are on the way to becoming a popular hit from all indications, comments of benighted males to the contrary.

Faintly reminiscent of the "barrel" sweaters we wore in high school days are the new sleeveless sweaters being sported by women in the fashion show. They're mostly in bright, soft wooly knits and the smartest ones, to our mind, are those in expensive looking cable stitch knits.

In the jewelry line, we've noticed several women wearing natural colored polished cantaloupe seeds for necklaces and bracelets. They really are smart, especially when worn with a tailored sharkskin long-sleeved shirt. Quite the best looking and most original bracelet we have seen all semester is the one made entirely of polished safety pins on a wrist-fitting metal band. It's very sporty and yet creates a tremendously smart effect.

Then, of course, there are those ankle socks which fasten with three little bows through eyelet fasteners. They come in shades to match sweaters and bows and provide a a bit of an uplift in an otherwise conservative outfit.

Perhaps as time goes along more and more new ideas will turn up. At least we hope that we'll have a chance to see some of those fads that periodically sweep the colleges taken up here.

Why not be different, anyway? It should be a lot of fun.

50 Minute Period Seconded; Cafe Music Lambasted

• That Five Minute Question
Editor, The Guardsman:

I noticed a front page editorial in your paper last week asking that something be done about the short time between periods.

I wish to commend the editor for his fine editorial, and I believe that the majority of the students agree with his views on the matter.

However something bothers us. The editorial was a good one. But what has it done to help the situation? As far as most of us can see nothing has been done by the college faculty or officials to alleviate the condition.

I remember the old Powell Street days, when even ten minutes wasn't too much time between classes.

Here's hoping that something is done by the proper authorities in the very near future to lengthen the time between periods to at least ten minutes—we really need it. Did you ever try to get from the gym to the top floor of the Science building in five minutes? If the persons responsible for the shortened passing time were to try it once, we are sure that everything would be fixed up in short order.

Yours for a change in the very near future,

Philip Kline

Editor's note: The administration is being contacted concerning this situation and it is to be hoped that a satisfactory solution can be reached.

• Paging Mr. Strauss
Editor, The Guardsman:

I don't like to speak against any attempt to make things more enjoyable at the college, but I think the attempt in the cafeteria is going too far. I have just returned from a hectic lunch in the cafe, and my digestive system feels like an abstract painting by Picasso. The cause: the blaring, noisy rhythm that is still erroniously termed music.

Don't think we're not in favor of lunch hour music, far from it. But please lay off swing music and anything in a similar category. Don't think we advocate Hayden or Mozart, for we would gladly settle for some Viennese waltzes or something similarly relaxing. How about it?

Richard Halliburton. His Story of His Life's Adventure. New York: The Bobbs-Merrill Co. 433 pp.

RICHARD HALLIBURTON, the modern Ulysses, has been both hailed as a symbol of the gay, carefree life, and jeered as a vainglorious publicity seeker. Before his twentieth year he had begun the vagabond life that millions were to admire and more than a few were to hold as an ideal for a full life.

Those countless readers who have followed Richard Halliburton in his books that were more than travel books will welcome this last volume of his writings; for in more than 1000 letters to his father and mother and close friends written over a space of 22 years, there is a personal history as intensely engrossing as any of his most daring accomplishments. In these lively letters, sometimes mirth-provoking, sometimes serious, there can be observed at close range the philosophy and impetus of this product of a modern civilization. Even more fully than is revealed in his books, do we see the tremendous sincerity and the healthful naiviete and boundless enthusiasm that made up Halliburton's character.

When only 19, while attending Princeton University, Halliburton worked his way to England because he felt he would burst if he did not gain some outlet for his nervous spirit. This voyage was just the commencement of a chart for living that was to carry him the world over. It was on this trip that he characteristically said, ". . . when I die there will have been few better traveled men than I." Few will dispute his fulfillment of that prophecy.

At Princeton he toiled endlessly as editor of the Princeton Pictorial magazine. Under his hands the magazine grew to a position of real prominence, reflecting his originality and writing talent. On his graduation from Princeton he began his future life in earnest. Within a few years, still in his early twenties, Halliburton published the stories of his experiences that brought him sweeping recognition in this country.

Book after book emerged from his incredibly swift pen as he flew, swam, hitch-hiked, walked from one land to another. Back of all these roamings was the philosophy that he expressed on his first trip to England. He said then in a letter to his father, "When impulse and spontaneity fail to make my way as uneven as possible then I shall sit up nights inventing means of making life as conglomerate and vivid as possible. Those who live in the even tenor of their way simply exist until death ends their monotonous tranquillity. No, there's going to be no even tenor with me . . . And when my time comes to die, I'll be able to die happy, for I will have done and seen and heard and experienced all the joy, pain, thrills—every emotion that any human ever had—and I'll be especially happy if I am spared a stupid, common death in bed."

The people who have attacked Halliburton's sincerity would change their views were they to read these letters. The adjective "publicity seeker" would fall in the discard when they read private comments of the man who ever remained like a child seeking for pirate gold and who knew the Spanish Armada was always just around the backyard fence.

The story of how Halliburton perished in his attempt to sail a genuine Chinese junk from Hongkong to the Golden Gate International Exposition is known to everyone. The volume ends with Halliburton's last message radioed on March 24, 1939, somewhere in the Pacific. The message read:

CAPTAIN JOHN WELCH OF THE SEADRAGON TO LINER PRESIDENT COOLIDGE SOUTHERLY GALES RAIN SQUALLS LEE RAIL UNDER WATER WET BUNKS HARDTACK BULLY BEEF HAVING WONDERFUL TIME WISH YOU WERE HERE INSTEAD OF ME.

We know an envious life was "spared a common death in bed."

Football Squad Downs Milk To Make Downs

JUST between our three readers and ourself, the football squad consumes enough milk after practices than a cow can produce in a day. According to economical statistics, it would be cheaper if the team bought a cow and kept it for the sole purpose of feeding themselves. Each man drowns himself with at least three-quarters of a quart, and some claim to be thirsty still after four cups of the white liquid have dampened their epiglotis and are reservoired in their belli . . . stomachs.

Dormant Spirit An Excuse?

With bewilderment, this columnist wonders why there is a "dormant" spirit, when football games are free to the holders of Associated Students cards. Perhaps the college needs some pep talks. Perhaps the excuse was that the college has not been organized enough. However, this initial game with Placer should tell whether former "excuses" are based on actual facts.

Dick Wilson and Pinky Laracou have promised touchdowns if we give them a line. So . . . Jim Honnert claims he will hang up his suit if he does not give a good showing tonight. His coat-hanger will not see much action this season, we figger.

Pedometer Needed

Many of the students came back last Monday morn looking like remnants from a fire sale. According to them, dancing in the Gold Room was like going through a Southern Cal forward wall. Will someone get a pedometer and find out just about how far one goes in three hours of dancing in an equally crowded place? Hand it in Room 134, please.

Roster Omission Unavoidable

Students of the college deserve an explanation for the omission from this issue of The Guardsman of the complete football roster and starting line-ups. Reason for this was that the players were not officially numbered in time for publication of this issue. It is to be hoped that for future games such information will be made available by the coaching staff in time for publication.

Recollections From Last Year

This year, Dave Cunningham will probably take over the job of attempting the important extra point.

Tonight's game opens the season for both the college and the Placer Mountaineers of Auburn. Coach Eisan plans an intricate system of plays to foil the Placer team, probably depending on sheer power for points.

District WAA Meets To Plan For Fall Schedule: Spread Details Are Complete

Sports Days

Sports advisers and Women's Athletic Association presidents from north bay district colleges, will meet today to plan the fall schedule of sports days at a 4 o'clock tea, to be held at the St. Francis Hotel.

Representing the college will be Bertha Mae Keller, WAA adviser, and Barbara Smith, WAA president. Representatives from San Jose State, San Francisco State, Santa Rosa Junior College, San Mateo Junior College, Marin Junior College, and Salinas Junior College, as well as others, will also attend the tea.

Round Robin Schedule

Forthcoming from today's meeting should be a rotational schedule for WAA play days, whereby each college will be expected to be hostess for some particular playday in some particular sport, Miss Keller said.

San Mateo Junior College will stage the sectional playday this year, playing hostess to the other colleges, Miss Keller revealed. Last May, Santa Rosa Junior College was the scene of the sectional playday, while this college will not present the playday until five years from now. . .

Cayuse Revue

Expected to be held here sometime this semester is the sectional horse show, Laurine Bergin, physical education instructor, said.

A request for the holding of the archery postal meet will be made today, at the meeting, Miss Bergin said. Main purpose of the playday will be to standardize archery competition for high schools in this section.

Barnyard Golf

"New sports activity to be initiated by the college WAA will be horse shoe pitching, better known as barnyard golf," Miss Keller announced. New equipment for the sport has already been purchased and WAA classes in this sport will begin as soon as the tract of ground in front of the women's gym has been leveled off. Enrolled in the college is Virginia Coker, Northern California Champion of barnyard golf. Women who are interested in this sport are urged by Barbara Smith, WAA president, to sign up as soon as possible.

Still Signing Up

Although instruction in many WAA sports has already begun, it is not too late to sign up. Women of the college have until September 25, to enroll in WAA classes. More members are especially wanted for the swimming, ice skating, volleyball and hockey classes, Miss Smith said.

Only A Dime

College advanced golf classes are receiving special rates of only 10 cents a round at the Ingleside golf course, according to Mrs. Bergin. "Women who have had some golf, as well as those who have signed up for the WAA golf club will be eligible for this low rate," she said.

Elections are being held this week for managers of the various WAA teams. Already elected are Betty Teter, rifle team manager, Jane Visella, hockey manager, and Jane McKinnon, swimming manager.

Goldstone

Without Benefit Of Crystal

As I was saying, Dr. Schuyler Goop stands at the tip-top peak of his profession—a warlock without a peer. Just why he should squander his ectoplasmic prognosticating football contests is, for the moment, beyond me. Nevertheless, he is taking a genuine interest in the Ram grid contests, and, in return for being allowed to squat in the Seals Stadium press-box, he has consented to analyze tonight's game in advance.

Goop To Be Ethical

First I want to make it quite clear that Dr. Goop is telling you how the game will come out; he is not, wherever his sympathies may lie, using his talents to influence the outcome. You can undoubtedly find a few scab goblins breezing about the more proletarian sections of town who would try to fix the game for a bribe. But this college and Placer have long since concluded a gentleman's agreement requiring that both parties play the chips on the table and refrain from thaumaturgic tampering with the cricket traditions. In addition, John L. Lucifer's industrial organization of Hell on a pay-through-the-nose-closed-shop basis has had the dual effect of clogging Purgatory with strikebreakers and establishing a code of ethics which Dr. Goop wouldn't even dream of violating.

Two Dimension Logic

"In the first place," says Dr. Goop, anent this evening's game, "we must determine which team is the bummest, to wax ungrammatical. We might ask which is bestest, but that would be like asking 'is the earth round or is the earth round,' when any paid up member knows that either alternative is idiotic in the extreme."

Dr. Goop solves the problem by a unique form of inverted cabalism. "P being not R, and R being not P, RP can equal but not exceed PR."

"P is as bad as R, but differs from R; the value X is a constant representing the relative probability on a given night of precipitation, earthquake, fire and unfavorable conditions for projected invasions."

Goop Smiles On Rams

Rams 24—Placer 7! Dr. Goop skips lightly into the wings, and his harsh, demoniac laughter floats back, tauntingly: "Also State to get slapped by Nevada . . . If I'm wrong, sue me!"

He vanishes. Return to those dark realms whence you came, Dr. Schuyler, Goop! Never darken our door again! Back to Hell, you satanic flunky! Don't show up again if you're off by more than six points; but if you're right . . . all of us around here will sell out cheap.

Party

Tickets were placed on sale last Wednesday for the Women's Athletic Association spread, to be held at Sigmund Stern Grove on September 25, from 4:30 to 10 p.m.

Especially invited to the affair are the newer women students of the college, Barbara Smith, WAA president said. Admission will be by student body card and the purchase of a ticket, which entitles the holder to barbecued food, she said. Tickets may be purchased from the following: Betty Teter, Irene Schunick, Allene Watt, June Schunick, Dorothy Nelson, Bernice Strube, Rita Weiman, and Rita McDonald.

Replacing the traditional splash party, the main purpose of the affair will be to acquaint new members with the aims and activities of the WAA.

Amusements of the evening will include games, selected entertainment and the introduction of the songs judged winners in the WAA song contest, now being held.

In charge of the song contest, which is being held as a competitive contest between freshmen and sophomores, is Jeanne Arnold, chairman of the sophomore group. "More participants in the contest are badly needed," she said.

Either lyrics composed to old folk songs, or original words and music may be submitted, she said. Three types of songs are acceptable. One type should be suitable for introducing people at social functions, the second type for commemorating particular sports, and the third for signifying the WAA as a whole.

In celebration of the sixth year anniversary of the WAA in the college, a "kiddy party" will be held during the first or second week of November, Barbara Smith, WAA president said.

Women who attend the party are to dress in costumes of six year olds. Diversions of the evening will include kiddy-car races and other childhood games, it was revealed.

Swimmers Look To Spring For Competition

Segregation of the college swimming classes is now getting under way, with the swimmers being classified according to their stroke, John Hurley, college swimming coach, announced this week.

"The mermen with the best strokes are being placed in an advanced group," Hurley said. "These men will work to improve their stroke and will probably be taught life-saving later in the semester," he added.

Although there will be no competition this semester, Hurley expects to put a swimming team in the field in the spring. Although there are a few likely looking prospects in his classes, these men would not stand a chance, at the present, with other teams, he added.

Facilities for the local aquatic performers are limited at present, Hurley announced. Even with the limited facilities, he said that he would be glad to interview anyone who would like to swim for the locals next semester.

Rams In Top Condition For Placer Game At Seals

By KEI HORI

Under the reflecting arc-lights of Seals Stadium, the initial game of the 1940 season will see the college Rams and the Placer Mountaineers vieing for honors tonight at 8 o'clock.

Straining at the leash held by Coach Leland Eisan, the Rambling Eleven is in the pink of condition, despite the loss of George Meyers, stellar tackle, who has been taken out of practice because of internal injuries, and Norman Simon. In all probability, Coach Eisan said, Meyers will not see action tonight.

Looming above the many potential threats is the veteran Al Nauman, seasoned ball-packer of '39. An expert in passing, running and kicking, Nauman has shown more fight and power than last year. Close behind is Jolting Jim Honnert, whom Coach Eisan promises heavy duty this season.

This year, the college has one of the fastest, yet the most powerful backfields under Eisan's regime. Luke Lowell and Dave Cunningham, the halves, have the speed to lead interference as well as come around for reverses.

Ends Howard Council and Herb Taylor, according to statistics, have the speed to cover the punts and kick-offs, and the line boasts an impenetrable wall. Dick Wilson, chunky center backs the line like a dam holds back water. Despite his 190 pounds, Wilson is fast enough to cover the whole short secondary.

Placer, on the other hand, has not been idle since the drubbings received by the Rams two years in succession. Their roster averages well over 170 pounds, their ends are tall and rangy, while the line looks solid and heavy. The Mountaineers from Auburn have tasted defeat twice to the tune of 19 to 0.

With the rumor of a new coach at Placer may also come a new attack, more ferocious, more determined than the last. It was the passing attack that downed the Placer team for the last two years, and the Mountaineers have concentrated upon the short flat passes that proved so effective in those games.

Eisan, in order to have a well balanced team, claims speed and power in the backfield, fast and secure ends and a dependable line. Pinky Laracou and Clark Johnson will hold the adjacent positions to Wilson, while Bill Windeler stands alone at the tackle position. Coach Eisan has not definitely placed a man in the gap left open by Meyers.

Planning a wide open attack for the initial game, Eisan has also some trick plays which are good for precious yardage. Speed, which is so essential for trick plays, is plentiful, and the game looks to be one of the most colorful of the season.

Soccer

League Play To Begin Soon

Opening league competition within two weeks, Joe Lantagne, head soccer coach, started the Rams in a practice game yesterday against a local high school team.

Lantagne still declines to comment on the future possibilities of his team, until the practice season is under full steam. "We are going to have tough sledding during the coming league season," Lantagne said. "Of the nine teams in the league, only two, besides ourselves, come from two year colleges."

Competition this season is confined to one league, The California Intercollegiate Soccer League, which includes both two and four year colleges. California, Stanford, U.S.F., San Jose State, San Francisco State, Cal Aggies, Menlo, and San Mateo Junior Colleges are included in our league, Lantagne said.

During the last two weeks, the shinkickers have been engaged in workouts to bring themselves back into playing condition after the long summer layoff, Lantagne revealed.

The boys have been using the practice field at the far end of the campus in their workouts, but haven't been able to practice goal kicking since no goal posts have been built at the field, Lantagne said.

At the coaches' meeting held last Monday, Lantagne obtained a tentative soccer scheduled for this season.

Official Ice Breaker Today At Winterland

Today, the initial ice breaker for the college will be held at Winterland, from 2 until 5 p.m., according to Joseph E. Williams, college instructor.

Main recipients of instruction will be members of the college skating club, and members of the Women's Athletic Association ice skating club, but all men and women of the college who are interested in skating are invited to attend, Williams said.

Admission prices are 25 cents with skates, and 40 cents without. Location of Winterland, ice skating rink, is at Post and Steiner Streets.

William Hart and Ed Bodel, star skaters of the college, have returned this semester, according to Williams, and will be on hand at today's ice breaker.

Men skaters of the college are invited to enter a speed skating contest. Further details may be obtained from Williams.

Winterland has been the scene of former ice skating activities of the college. Students of the college were unable to practice for the Ice Carnival during the summer months because the Ice Follies had been occupying the rink. However, with the opening of the rink, college skaters are increasing with the sport, Williams said.

Tennis Competition This Semester In Intramurals

Although there is no tennis team during the fall semester, tennis stars will be able to win their laurels during an intramural tennis ladder, to be staged later this semester, Tom Wilson, head tennis coach announced early this week.

The ladder will be open to all members of the Associated Students who have an ability in tennis, Wilson added. Members of the tennis classes will compete as part of their regular class work, and other players may play when they can schedule it.

Both singles and doubles tournaments will be included in the tourney, Wilson mentioned. Plans are not complete at the present time, but hopes to release the plans for the tournament soon, he said.

Since the college now boasts a court of its own, the players can now train during their spare time instead of going to the Palace of Fine Arts as they have been doing. Although the court is not of excellent condition, it provides an exclusive ground for the Ram tennisers.

AMS Bon-Fire

Pre-Game Celebration Bans Women; September 26 Date

Although the date was changed once, the Associated Men Students' bonfire will positively take place Thursday night, September 26, Ted Theodus, AMS president, announced.

One other change has also been made, according to the men's club leader. The affair is to be for men only instead of both sexes, he revealed.

The fire will be in anticipation of the game with San Francisco State, a more-or-less traditional rival, Theodus said. The purpose of the event is to build up spirit and produce a good turn-out at the game the following night, he said.

Fire Between Gyms

The fire will be in between the two gyms, and will be lighted at 8 p.m. that night. All men possessing a student body card are expected to put in an appearance, he pointed out.

The bonfire committee, announced Theodus, is working to make the fire a success. The committee is made up of Bob Dolman, Hugh Waite, Lyle Shultz, Kenneth Rea, Pete Aydelotte, Dan "Meadow-mouse" McHugh, Earl Thollander, Junior Clay, and Theodus.

Stagg May Appear

Efforts are being made to obtain an outside coach for presentation at the event, according to the men's leader. Right now, the possibilities of getting Amos Alonzo Stagg from the College of the Pacific look very bright, he said. Malley is another possibility, he indicated.

Theodus claims that the bonfire will make up for the smoker in every conceivable way. All entertainment, refreshments and accessories that were to have been at the smoker, will be found at the bonfire, the AMS chief commented.

Smith, Mails Expected

In addition to the outside coach, he expects to present the local coaching staff, some of the members of the football squad, Ernie Smith, or Walter Mails, or both, and the inimitable Frank P. "Doc" Sewell. "Sewell will explain his 'Sewell System' and perhaps tell a few of his famous jokes," Theodus said.

"All of the above-mentioned talent free food and accessories, and a big fire are all for the asking and one student body card for any man of the college," ended Theodus.

In Sympathy

Editor's note: We note with sorrow the passing of Barbara Crespi, former Lowell High student who attended the college for two years.

Miss Crespi was well known and well liked in college circles, and the students join us in sending condolences to members of her family.

Salesman Wanted

Taylor Type Preferred

Any tall men of the college who want a job and who can double for an Esquire advertisement are advised by Virginia Gohn, business instructor, to see her immediately.

A position as salesman has been offered through the merchandising course to a student of the college who can meet qualifications. It pays 40 cents an hour and entails 15 hours a week of work according to Miss Gohn, who said the position is with a highly reputable men's specialty shop in San Francisco.

The job is open only to students enrolled in the college merchandising course she pointed out. The course, business 101a, is a two hour one from 9 a.m. to 11 a.m. daily.

Miss Gohn announced she would be in her office, Room 224, daily except Thursday until 11 o'clock. Students should see her this week she said.

The store has insisted upon the applicant's being a "good-dresser" and has expressed a preference for a rather tall man, she said in explaining the requirements.

Space Open In Flight Courses

Places are still open for students in flight training, Captain George Richards, college director of the Civilian Pilot Training program, said today.

All sophomore students between the ages of 19 and 26 on October 1 of this year are eligible for the training, Captain Richards said.

Freshmen are eligible to enter the theory courses given twice each week.

In addition, all persons who have completed two years of college and who are within the age limit, are eligible for the course.

Anyone who meets these requirements, whether or not they are students at the present time, may sign up for training.

Aviation 1a, meeting five mornings each week, offers from 35 to 50 hours of flight training and has a university value of five units.

Interviews are given by Captain Richards in his office, Room 257, every morning from 8 to 10 o'clock.

Songsters To Tryout Tuesday For Hotel Night Friday

Students wishing to try out for the singing contest at the Junior College Night at the Palace Hotel on September 27 should be prepared to sing in Room 100 at 4 o'clock next Tuesday, Mary Frances Malone, campus representative, announced today.

"One man and one woman will be chosen," Miss Malone declared. "Winners will receive free cover charges for dancing that evening."

Judges for the contest will be Miss Malone, Len Gross, and Lyle Shultz, she added.

Featuring a special price of $2.07 per couple including one coca-cola per person, the affair will take place in the Rose Room Bowl immediately after the College-State football game at Seals Stadium, Miss Malone said.

"Artie Shaw and his famous band will be a tremendous attraction for the affair, especially since students at the college will receive such unusual financial consideration," she declared.

She urged that students place their reservations with Gross, Shultz, or herself as soon as possible to assure themselves of being able to get in that night.

"Last semester's night honoring the college was declared a very definite success," Miss Malone continued, "and those who had made early reservations were accorded privileges."

There is a possibility of having the college song sung at the affair, provided that words and music for the song may be obtained in time.

COLLEGE

THE rally last Thursday brought out some interesting sidelights.

Most noticeable of these was the absolute lack of enthusiasm concerning the football team and the game with Placer. The yell leaders weren't to blame either, for they tried their best to instill some spirit into the gathering.

The only conclusion that it is possible to draw from this situation is that the majority of the students attending the college are a bunch of deadheads that haven't the ambition or the desire to support their team.

If this be so, it is indeed a deplorable situation and one which gives the college an undesirable reputation in the eyes of the public and the other colleges around us.

Our traditional rival, San Francisco State does not have as many students as we have, but they have two or three times as much spirit.

RECENTLY this column commented upon the Forum Club choosing the night of the first football game as the date of its first club meeting.

Forum didn't care much for this criticism, so the following letter was received by the writer:

Editor, The Guardsman:

In regard to your statement concerning the lack of school spirit and cooperation of the Forum Club, may we offer the following reasons why the Forum Club held its meeting on the same night as the college football game: (1) We had already changed our meeting because of a dance on a previous night. (2) The announcement of our meeting had already gone into The Guardsman when we were informed that our meeting conflicted with the football game. (3) If we were to postpone our activities because of conflicting school functions, we would never be able to hold a meeting. (4) We believe that the Forum is just as much an activity of the college as the football game.

Dear Forum: The date of the Placer game was published in The Guardsman on September 3, and has been published every issue since then. Do you only read The Guardsman when there is a notice about Forum in it?

Surely you can find a time when there isn't a college function to hold your meetings. Other organizations manage to get along.

There is undoubtedly a place in the college for a club such as Forum but as to the club being important enough to hold an equal place with the support of the college athletic endeavors, we are inclined to be slightly skeptical.

If the students had to decide which to eliminate, the Forum or the football team, which one do you think would remain?

LAST Friday this column mentioned a student who traveled all the way from Benicia to attend classes.

After the paper came out we found that another student lives in Martinez, about the same distance from the college as Benicia.

We wonder how many more there are? Bouquets to all of them, they're getting an education the hard way, but it will probably be worth more to them than the students who live a couple of blocks from the campus.

NATIONAL

Whether one likes Wendell Willkie or not, he must give the man credit for having plenty of energy.

It is a pretty tough grind to travel all over the nation stopping at almost every point to make a speech. He certainly draws the crowds but one is inclined to wonder how many of the people that hear him speak will vote for him?

It seems to us that the hardest part of the whole job is having to smile every minute of the day, whether or not he feels like it.

FOREIGN

SAFEST place in the European war at this time seems to be aboard a British naval vessel cruising in the Mediterranean.

After reading Mussolini's speeches and Virginio Gayda's editorials we thought the Italians were the most courageous, and warlike peoples on the face of the earth. Well, they may be courageous, but they certainly aren't warlike.

British sailors have been hoping for days to catch a brief glimpse of the Italian Navy, but even this hope was denied them, or the highly vaunted Roman fleet is spending all its time avoiding the Royal navy.

Of course, we can't blame the Italians too much, for if the British ever do meet them, they'll blow the Italian navy out of the water and chase what is left right back to the gates of Rome.

Yes sir, the Italians surely talk a good fight.

Palace Night Singing Tryout This Afternoon

Scheduled for 3 o'clock this afternoon in Room 100 is the singing contest held in connection with Junior College night at the Palace Hotel on Friday night, Mary Frances Malone, campus representative, revealed today.

"One man and one woman will be chosen to sing in the Rose Room Bowl Friday night," Miss Malone said. "Judges will be Len Gross, Lyle Shultz, and myself."

Last semester's Junior College night at the Palace also featured the singing of a college student, Anita Welt. Miss Welt is this semester's low sophomore class secretary.

"Winners of the contest will receive complimentary cover charges for Friday night," Miss Malone declared.

She emphasized that even though students had not notified Gross, Shultz or herself of their intention to try out this afternoon, that any student might take part.

"Last semester's Palace Night was acclaimed a tremendous success, Miss Malone said. "This semester's special feature price of $2.07 per couple including one coca-cola per person is expected to prove an added attraction."

Stressing the fact that reservations must be made early, she said that reservations could be made by telephoning or getting in touch with the campus representatives at college.

Anita Welt

"Artie Shaw and his orchestra are expected to be a special feature of the evening," Miss Malone remarked. "His orchestra is known for the fact that they are advocates of music 'newer than swing' and this is the first appearance of Shaw's musical organization in the Bay Region."

A special performance of the college song will probably be given if the music and words are obtained from the music department, she declared.

"Since the football game with State takes place on the same night, it is thought that the affair will have a large attendance of college students," Miss Malone said.

NYA Slips Due October 6; Extra Funds Requested

Applications for NYA employment will be accepted in Room 148, Edward H. Redford, college NYA director, declared recently.

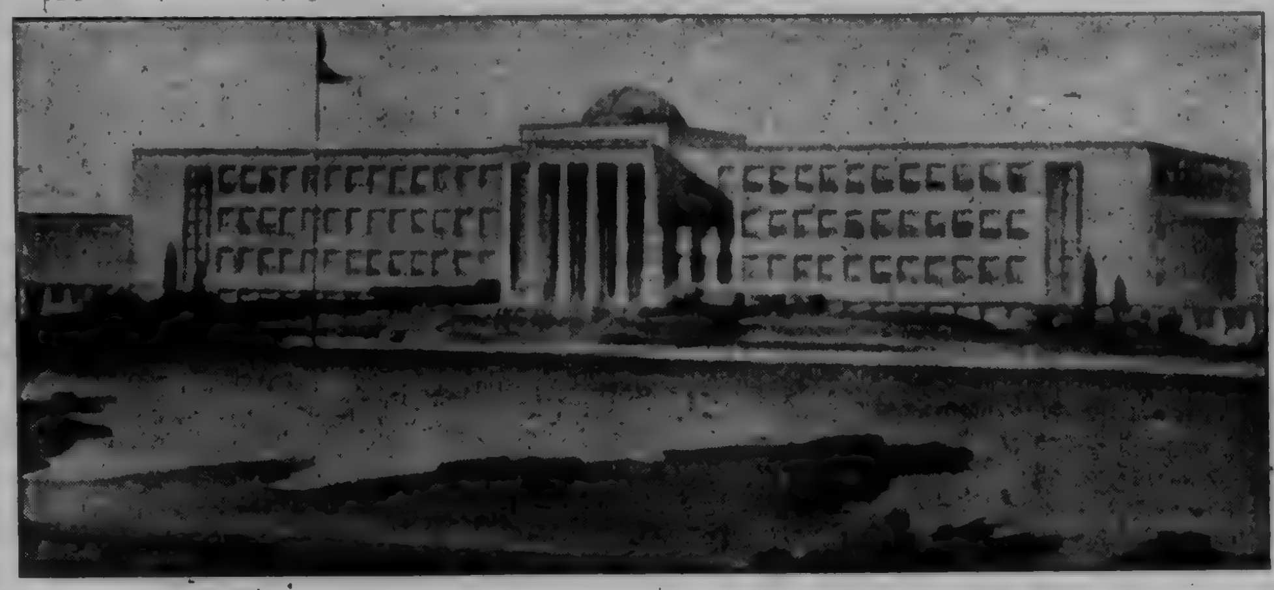
"I should like to inform students working on NYA that slips are due on October 6, and that regulations concerning those slips must be strictly observed," Redford said.

He also warned supervisors that they will be denied NYA help if any of their workers fail to follow instructions.

"Extra funds have been requested from the government because of this semester's increased enrollment and subsequent increase in NYA applications," he announced. "However, no answer has been received from the authorities as yet."

Work in NYA office was delayed somewhat by a rush of applications following registration, but order has been restored, Redford said. "Typists and experienced laboratory assistants are especially needed," he announced, "because of our increased facilities."

Ready For Dedication Day



Twelve days more and the Science Building, an architect's version of which appears above, will be officially dedicated in a ceremony open to the public.

On this day of days for the college, the various departments will put on their best faces for the throngs of visitors that are expected to be present.

The college building itself will be brightly adorned in red and white bunting; students and faculty members will exhibit their work.

In all, a dedication that will make San Francisco proud of its junior college has been planned by hard-working students and faculty members alike.

AMS Bonfire Thursday Night To Feature Guest Speakers

All men students are invited to attend the Associated Men Student's bonfire, to be held next Thursday evening at 8 between the two gyms, Ted Theodus, AMS president, announced this week.

A possibility that the evening's entertainment might be highlighted by the appearance of Amos Alonzo Stagg, head football coach of the College of the Pacific, was mentioned by Theodus.

"There will be at least one outside coach at the bonfire," Theodus revealed, "and either Ernie Smith or Walter Mails of the San Francisco baseball club will appear."

If present plans are a success, Theodus said, the bonfire will not only be "just as good as the cancelled smoker, but will be the talk of the college for generations to come."

Also scheduled to appear at the affair are Coach Leland Eisan of the college, some of the members of the football squad, several student leaders, and Franklin P. Sewell, of the college faculty. Eisan is expected to enlighten the students of the college on the football situation.

"Not only will the event combine these attractions already mentioned, but also there will be free food before the evening is over," Theodus promised.

One student body card per person is required for admission, according to the committee. No women are to be admitted, although they were previously invited.

Theodus revealed that the AMS was pushing plans for the forthcoming barn dance. As soon as the bonfire celebration is over, a committee will be named, he said.

As soon as the committee is formed and plans get under way, Theodus announced that a prize would be awarded to the best costumed couple. At present he has no definite plans.

The site for the dance has been set for the women's gym, but it is rumored that it will be held in the Alvarado barn, north of Richmond in the East Bay.

The barn dance is one of the traditional affairs of the AMS, the bonfire is a newcomer, the AMS prexy revealed. The officers are working hard to make both a success, he added.

The success of last semester's barn dance was due, in part, to the splendid surroundings of Alvarado Park, Theodus also noted.

Cafeteria Requests Student Cooperation

Hilda Watson, supervisor of the college cafeteria, said today that no extra help is needed in the cafeteria but that the situation may change in the future.

Students are requested, Mrs. Watson declared, to refrain from doing class assignments at cafeteria tables during the rush hour, between eleven and twelve, or to remain at a table and prevent other students from making use of the cafeteria.

"However," she said, "the majority of the students have been cooperating splendidly and have helped to alleviate the confused situation."

Students are also requested not to remove plates or trays from the cafeteria room, not only because it hinders efficient operation but also because of the unfavorable appearance that scattered utensils give to the college, Mrs. Watson commented.

Building Progress In Final Stages This Week

Registrar J. Paul Mohr announced today that final work on the college building proper is nearing completion and that all classrooms will soon be adequately equipped.

Blackboards and other necessary fixtures have been placed in almost all laboratories and classrooms and only sliding boards and a few minor adjustments remain to be placed.

"Large blackboards to be used in lecture halls should arrive some time this week," the registrar added.

There has been no further development in the plans to widen Phelan Avenue, so that diagonal parking may be permitted safely, or in the development of a parking area immediately surrounding the main building, Mohr said.

"However," he added, "a parking area is being constructed in the vicinity of gymnasiums and work there is progressing rapidly."

Pathways about the college grounds have very nearly been completed, the registrar continued, and work will be begun shortly on lights for these pathways so that dances may be held in the women's gymnasium.

Beautification of the grounds has been speeded up a great deal and within a few weeks should be mostly completed, Mohr concluded.

More Than 200 Periodicals Now In College Library

Current periodicals on file in the library now number more than 200 with more scheduled to be added from time to time. These periodicals are on the shelves in back of the loan desk and are not to be taken out of the library. They may be used informally in the section of the library set aside for that purpose. The magazines have been chosen for various departments, and cover numerous fields and topics.

"The most up to date information will be found in periodicals," Dr. Marcus Skarstedt, head librarian said. "The students just starting college, as well as students who have been here before, should get to know the periodicals as they would a friend."

New records of attendance are being set as evidenced by the large number of students who use the library during the periods of the day. All are appreciating the privilege of "brousing around the stacks" and mastering assignments in an atmosphere conducive for studying, Skarstedt observed.

Eleanor Blinn, assistant librarian, is busy training students from the NYA office who are new at library technique. The assistants add to the speed of service and lessen the work which has formerly rested entirely on the shoulders of the librarian, she said.

Activities

Semester Social Calendar Ready

Completed at the Social Committee meeting of last Thursday, the college social calendar has been released by Jean Arnold, chairman of the group.

In the list of events to come are class dances, AWS and AMS functions, football meets and WAA activities.

From this date, the calendar reads as follows:

September 25—WAA sport spread
September 26—AMS bonfire
September 27—Game, San Francisco State at Roberts Field
October 1—Game, Cal frosh at Berkeley
October 9-10—AWS senior reception
October 11—Game, Los Angeles at Los Angeles
October 11—High freshman dance
October 18—Game, Sacramento at Sacramento
October 24—WAA swim party
October 25—U.S.F. frosh at Seals
November 1—Game, San Mateo at Seals
November 1—AMS barn dance
November 7—WAA kid party
November 11—Pasadena at Kezar
November 16—Modesto at Seals
December 3—A Capella trip
December 6 (indefinite)—AWS function
December 9-13—WAA Tourney Week
December 12—WAA banquet
December 13—Low soph dance
January 10—High soph formal

Concerning other dates to be cleared on the calendar, Miss Arnold asked that all groups planning an affair open to the college confer with the committee to assure that the date set will be the most favorable one.

"We will have regular meetings this semester, the day and hour to be set later this week. Clubs and other groups planning a social function are welcome to send a representative to these meetings at any time," she said. "We are working in every way to encourage college spirit and to make the dances a success for everyone."

The next college dance scheduled is the high freshman event on October 11. Although indications are that it will probably be held in one of the college gymnasiums, no definite announcement can be made at this time. Problems brought up at the last meeting of the social group in this connection were chiefly concerning the lighting system, the parking space available, and that of weather, according to Jean Arnold.

"If it should rain on the night we hold a dance, there will be one big mess, as the cars will not be able to go over the campus grounds and students will have to battle through the mud to reach the gym," a member of the social committee declared, recalling a dance of the previous semester when pluvial weather descended.

Because of the limited Associated Student budget this semester and in line with a policy of holding most of the social functions on this new campus, plans were to have all future college dances except the high soph formal take place in the women's gymnasium. However, a majority of committee members present last Thursday were in favor of holding the traditional AMS barn dance elsewhere,

A Week From Sunday

Program Complete For Oct. 6 Building Dedication Ceremony

By THEODORA WONG

Marking the formal presentation of this new San Francisco Junior College to the public, a dedication ceremony on Sunday, October 6, at 1 o'clock, will open the building to the public, Lloyd D. Luckmann, president of the Faculty Association and chairman for all arrangements, announced.

The dedication opens in the women's gymnasium on the hour, and will continue until about 2 p.m., according to Luckmann's plans. Acting as master of ceremonies, Richard E. Doyle, chairman of the physical properties of the Board of Education, will introduce as speaker of the day C. Harold Caulfield, president of the board.

Prominent Speakers

Other speakers scheduled for the program are Angelo J. Rossi, mayor; Joseph P. Nourse, superintendent of schools; and Archibald J. Cloud, college president.

Completing this formal ceremony will be the singing of the college hymn by the A Cappella choir, under the direction of Flossita Badger, instructor. "Music for this portion of the program will be supplied by Ralph Murray's American Legion band of Post 233, which by that time will have completed a year's engagement at the Exposition as its official band," Luckmann revealed.

Radio Broadcast Planned

From 3 o'clock on, open house will be held in the main unit, the Science Building, where the public will be invited to inspect the various classrooms and exhibits, Luckmann announced. Moving pictures will be shown in Rooms 100 and 136, and according to the college radio department a half-hour program will be broadcast from Room 200 by the radio production class and repeated at 4. The broadcast will dramatize the life of Franz Schubert, centering on his composition of Hark, Hark, the Lark, and will feature some of his famous music.

All classrooms and laboratories designated for single purposes will be labelled and described, Luckmann commented. Special displays will be those of published works by the faculty and of art works by Richard M. Allman and Evans M. Ecke, instructor in that field. The Guardsman, college publication, will also prepare an exhibit, he added.

Members of the Block Society will act as ushers in the main building, Luckmann disclosed, while the Women's Service Society and students in the block letter group will serve in the gymnasium.

Gay Colors To Deck College

In front of the Science Building, the columns below the motto, "The Truth Shall Make You Free," will appear in solid red and white, alternately. Festive red and white bunting will cover the front and back stairways of the women's gym also, it is planned.

Some of the works of contemporary artists which have been long anticipated as valuable additions to the building will be in evidence, Luckmann said. A ram's head carved from California redwood will be completed and placed in the cafeteria, and the limestone head of Thomas A. Edison now being fashioned, will be seen to the east of the building, although the latter will not be finished. However, should the sculptor working on it feel inclined to continue the job on Sunday, Luckmann smiled, the public

Appointments

Administrative Changes Made

With the resignation last week of J. Graham Sullivan and the appointment of Louis G. Conlan to fill his position as Coordinator of Educational Management, several changes have been effected in college administrative offices.

John J. Brady has been named to fill the vacancy created by the elevation of Conlan, according to President Archibald J. Cloud. Conlan will retain his position as acting head of the physical education department, however.

Sullivan, in addition to his duties as coordinator, was general adviser to the Hotel and Restaurant Management Division. Because of his departure, some duties within the division have been reassigned, and new appointments made.

Ernest J. Hjorth, instructor in charge of chef training will have as assistant, Terry Sandelin graduate student, who will assist in directing production in the kitchen.

Cynthia Richardson, graduate of last season, will be manager of the cafeteria under the supervision of Hilda Watson.

Placement problems of the hotel students, Dean Edwin C. Browne said, will be handled by a committee headed by him and including Mrs. Watson and Wendell.

High School Seniors To Be Honored By AWS

Plans for the Associated Women Students' teas honoring high school seniors on October 9 and 10 are being formed, according to Margaret Dougherty, AWS adviser.

"Because of the large attendance anticipated, we have decided to hold this traditional event on two consecutive days," Miss Dougherty said. "By doing this we expect to be able to give the visitors better attention and also to carry on tours of the campus."

Final plans for the affair and the appointment of various committees to take part in the teas will be accomplished soon, she declared. "This semester we shall not provide dancing and singing as entertainment as in past semesters, but we shall feature instead tours of the college grounds," she commented.

Future AWS plans are still tentative, of course, Miss Dougherty said.

It is believed, however, that the traditional tea for parents of college women will be held later in the semester.

Intolerance Should Be Kept Out Of United States

THE other evening in one of San Francisco's districts an incident occurred which was extremely interesting.

A crowd had gathered around a soap box speaker of the Communist party and was listening to the orator haranguing against the administration, conscription, democracy and other allied subjects.

The crowd was very unreceptive toward the speaker and a few angry remarks were muttered.

Several soldiers were standing on the fringe of the audience and one woman turned to one of the soldiers and said, "Why doesn't the army do something about stopping the lies of those filthy Communists? They ought to be thrown out or shot!"

The soldier after pausing a moment calmly replied, "Communist, eh, well they have their point of view too."

The incident in itself is nothing, but the underlying principles it involves are of tremendous importance.

Although the point of view of the woman is understandable, it is the attitude of the soldier which should make us pause and think for a second.

Perhaps one thing more than any other stands out when reviewing the recent actions of people and nations. That one thing is intolerance.

During the past few years when Europe is mentioned, the word "intolerance" is unfortunately linked with the actions of most of the nations across the seas.

America and Americans should remember this fact and bend over backwards to avoid duplicating it.

It has been said that the United States is too free. This may well be true but it is also true that it is infinitely better to be too free as exemplified by this nation than have no freedom at all.

Closing Date Near For Golden Gate Exposition

FIVE days more and the Golden Gate International Exposition will be filed away with the rest of the world's fairs. As fairs go, this one has ranked at the top. There probably will not be any more Expositions like ours. In fact, there probably will not be any fairs in any country for a very long time.

If you haven't had your fill of the Fair, if you haven't had enough of the Guatemala Marimba Band, if you're one of those persons who never tires of the Court of the Moon, you had better sate yourself within the next few days left.

There are so many things to see and so little time to see them. Many people consider a trip to the Gayway the prime attraction at the Fair while others may consider the most interesting exhibit to be the Science Building. Although there is a wide difference in the two attractions just named, they serve splendidly to illustrate the wide contrast in entertainment that was presented by the Exposition this year. Nothing but praise can be given the Fair officials for the most splendid and diversified list of attractions lined up for daily presentation to the public. There is no denying that the Fair had variety in the full sense of the word.

Last year, near the Fair's closing, most people were rather certain of its continuation. This year, its definite closing is practically a closed issue, so don't defer your visit in the belief that the Fair will be extended.

The Exposition officials purposely do not plan on an extension because they want the Fair to finish with a real "bang." They do not wish to drag out the Fair's run, and, in doing so, bring the Exposition to a slow end.

From all appearances the Fair will "go down" in a real riot of color and noise and gaiety. Everyday, from now to the last, should be well worth attending. B. H. '41

Meet The Students

By DOROTHY PIERCE

WANDERING into the cafeteria with as much sense of direction as an egg-beater, this interviewer happened upon Ted Penland, Great Falls High School graduate. (Don't know where Great Falls is? Wait a minute—Hey, where's that map. Ah, Montana.) Oh, Ted you're a long way from home.

He started this chummy little interview off with "My two strongest dislikes are the conceit of The Guardsman and commuting from Oakland to San Francisco every day." Not being able to let that remark about The Guardsman slip by we asked "how come", praying hopefully that ye dear old editor would walk in and offer some defense.

"Our high school paper won third place in its division but we didn't keep mentioning the fact in every edition as The Guardsman does." (Come now, Mr. Penland, not EVERY edition). Penland was associate and sports editor of that third placed phenomenon.

"I have nothing against the editor, for a matter of fact, I don't even know what he looks like" (you're in for a treat) "but I think he ought to quit resting on the laurels of the former editor," Penland volunteered.

We volunteered with "How do the women at junior college compare with those in Montana." Replied he—looking squarely at your interviewer—"I think the girls in Montana are much prettier." (Mr. Gross, move over in the dog-house to make room for me).

Deciding to confine our remarks to Ted himself, this blundering reporter found out he was a major in mechanical engineering, intending to futher his education at the University of California. He's interested in photography, skiing, swimming, and skating.

Frankness is to be admired so your reporter tends now to give a brief description of the honored guest. Being tall, but not too tall, he was built so that you could either see over his shoulder or around him. This always saves valuable time, not having to walk around great hulks. (Excuse it please, males).

He had a head covered with wavy, blond hair (sounds like Nelson Eddy, doesn't it), eyes that shone mischief, and a smile that explained why little children are taught to wash their teeth three times a day. In other words, he was quite a man in the estimation of this writer (or so I call myself).

Next week the women have their chance to make news. In the meantime leave the men to their sports, studies (presuming they do study), and to the wiles of the opposite sex.

Quotable Quotes ACP

"The reason for our lawlessness is that at present we are just changing over from authoritative control to internal control. The former, as employed by parents of the old days, has been released without the establishment of good internal control by modern day fathers and mothers. Our schools are placing increased emphasis on character development and through the study of music, art, literature and science are providing an 'education for leisure,' so that our future citizens will not spend their time in unprofitable and frivolous pursuits." George Melcher, 72-year-old superintendent of Kansas City schools and a teacher since he was 16, makes the point that education has not failed, declaring that increasing lawlessness is not the fault of the education system.

The Spectator

FOR his first release under the newly organized Frank Lloyd Productions Company, the aforementioned Lloyd translated into strips of celluloid the context of Elizabeth Page's mighty novel, The Tree of Liberty, switched the title to Howards of Virginia, and made his debut as producer-director a most auspicious one.

The Howards of Virginia is the tale of a burly, uncouth backwoodsman, Matt Howard, portrayed by Cary Grant, who, through the friendship of young Thomas Jefferson, meets a young, gentle, aristocratic lass (Martha Scott). Despite the obvious antagonism of her snobbish brother (Cedric Hardwicke), a brief courtship follows, culminating in their marriage. Into the rough, tough back country, Matt takes his delicate bride to face the endless ardors and labor that were slowly to build his wilderness plantation into a thing of beauty and style. Their marriage is happy despite the wide divergence in their upbringing. Three children are born. And then, the Revolutionary War strikes to disrupt the tranquility of their existence. Mrs. Howard flees to the isolated splendor of her brother's home while Matt goes out to suffer with the "lowly rebels" and their general, George Washington. But war, starvation and tyranny can not hold down the Howards of Virginia.

This Frank Lloyd production is done with broad, sweeping scope, and meticulous detail that is reflected in the authentic settings and backgrounds. Part of the film was actually photographed in the restored city of Williamsburg with all the quaint buildings of the 18th century rebuilt and refurnished. The major portion of the film is devoted entirely to the personal story of Matt and his wife while the last reel or two deviates considerably to present a stirring and coherent montage of the American Revolution. This shift in story presentation does no harm, however. On the contrary, The Howards of Virginia is a magnificent piece of history-telling that presents in vivid style the momentous steps that transformed this scrawney group of thirteen colonies into the great nation we are today.

The film moves with a smoothness and fluidity that prestiges the delicate handling of Lloyd. The Howards of Virginia is no slow-moving, somber costume drama, but it's as swiftly-paced as any depiction of modern life.

The tumultuous events leading up to the American Revolution are presented in a series of rapid, tingling shots . . . the "give me liberty or give me death" speech of Patrick Henry; the stifling declaration of the Stamp Tax; the Boston Tea Party; the days of suffering at Valley Forge; the final surrender of Cornwallis . . . all constitute integral parts of this saga of the foundation of American tradition.

We're saving acting honors for the last. Grant and Scott in the leads give splendid performances, but it is the memory of Richard Carlston as Jefferson that lingers warmly in one's memory after you leave the theater.

On The Feminine Side

IT'S rather hard to believe that we've only one more week to go to the Fair.

We can remember the curiously vacant feeling we had last year when the lights went out on the island for the last time. Not to wax sentimental, but we could understand the rather nostalgic note that creeps into our parents' voices when they speak about the old Palace of Fine Arts and the Tower of Jewels. Perhaps some day we'll sigh, too, and tell our children about the Aquacade, the Tower of the Sun, Pacifica, and the Court of the Moon.

One of the things we'll tell them about is the way the lights came on when the day was over, transforming the island into a veritable fairyland of lights, sparkling fountains, and luminous flowers. We'll tell them how incredibly beautiful the colors were, how brilliant, and how strangely alive. And they (being our very fictitious offspring) will undoubtedly give each other meaning glances, reflecting on how sad it is to see someone going to pieces like that and living in the past.

Treasure Island was always exciting, we will continue, undisturbed. There was always something new, something different to quicken one's imagination. The Gayway was alive, vital, with its barkers, spectators, outside shows, penny arcades, hot dog stands, thrill concessions, and omnipresent empty coke bottles. Those were the days!

Of an equally thrilling nature was the Cavalcade, we will tell our long-suffering chidren who have heard it all a hundred times before, anyway. At night it was really a spectacle, with its huge cast of picturesquely costumed men and women, its quaint old props (especially the old cable cars and automobiles), and the magnificent horses and teams that thundered on and off the stage in the best approved "horse-opery" manner. And one of the most moving minutes of all came when the audience arose in silence while the "Star Spangled Banner" was played. (You remember, children, that was 1940, the year of the World War II.)

On we'll rave, about music, about art, about the scientific and mechanical exhibits. The time we heard Lawrence Tibbett and Grace Moore in one concert, the breathtaking clarity of Lily Pons' truest coloratura notes, the day we heard George Stinson sing the prologue to Pagliacci while tears came into our eyes, the amazing Oscar Levant and his almost inspired Gershwin program. The hours we spent in the science building trying to understand what color hair and eyes our children would have, without having 32 to make it come out right.

There were all sorts of added thrills. One of the most stirring was the nightly retreat in which the Treasure Island company of the United States Army took part. All the men were within a half inch of the same size and drilled with an almost automatic precision. And when the national anthem was played and we all stood at attention, a chill would run up and down your spine, we will say. (For pete's sake, will she never finish, the children fidget.)

The Women's Club, it was the Yerba Buena Club the first year we explain, was simply gorgeous. It faced the setting sun and from its windows you could see the ships sweep into the Yacht Harbor. And when the Clippers (old stuff, the kiddies snort) were taking off, it was wonderful.

Oh well, all this is very future and may not actually take place. We may not feel like this at all, but that funny feeling is beginning to take over already.

As we said before, it's rather hard to believe that we've only one more week to go to the Fair.

"No college ever manages a system of registration that works, but each system is a marvel of theory."

Shots At RAMdom . . .

WILLIAM SAROYAN'S new play, Something About a Soldier, was staged last Friday night by the Theater Arts Colony. (No, they didn't send us passes.) We went slumming in a dramaturgical sort of way Friday just to see what kind of defeatism the paradoxical Armenian has turned out this time. If this publication's censor board doesn't tighten, we'll attempt to render some sort of judgment, in a prejudiced sort of way, on Saroyan's Third Street-born literature. And do we stretch a point on that last word!

PLEASE DON'T THINK we went ignoring the manly tussles Friday purposely. Our defection boils down to a question of ethics. We posed this question: Which would vitiate our youthful spirit most, the post football game nocturnal "bust" or one of Saroyan's monsterpieces? We chose the unknown quantity, not having any advance announcement of Saroyan's text.

This fellow Saroyan is an interesting creature. In some of his earlier stories he used to ramble in what we presume to be an impenetrable autobiographical cloak about freezing in some rooming house on the wrong side of Market Street and hocking his typewriter and blowing on numbed fingers. Several years after these stories were published, he refused a $1000 Pulitzer award saying that "Such awards vitiate and embarrass art at its source." But then who are we to say what embarrasses art and what doesn't.

IF YOU LIKE CONTRASTS Obtain Willie's Seventeen and begin contrasting. We feel it's one of his better short stories from a writing standpoint, but enthusiasm lags after that. The odd part of it is—don't ask what "it" refers to—that Willie is a nice, respectable looking fellow.

THE GIRL OF THE GOLDEN WEST is going to stay in moth-balls this opera season if the expensive throat of Lawrence Tibbett has anything to say about it. The thing that the inhaling of something else is supposed to ease has laid Mr. Tibbett lower than the death scene of Aida. All of which means that that lusty drama of the days when the West was golden in a literal sort of way will not be tossed to the Diamond Circle. They will also be denied the privilege of hearing, if the balcony doesn't throw its support on peanuts, that rugged American, Three-fingered Jack, warble in his best Italian accents.

One or two operas have been written in English, but we hear they're for foreign consumption only; it seems an English opera might force our prima donnas to articulate in a reasonable fashion.

Council Blamed For No Cuts; Bad Road Ruins Ford

• Take Notice, Ex-Council!

Editor, The Guardsman:

I noticed in last Tuesday's issue two letters complaining about the lack of "cuts" or illustration in The Guardsman. I would like to add my three cents worth to the complaints.

Those of us who remember The Guardsman in the past, know that it published plenty of pictures when issued only once a week. Even last semester it managed to publish pictures when issued twice a week.

One look at the budget allotments for this semester (as contrasted to last) will explain why. Last semester The Guardsman published a four page paper on Fridays, and only a two page issue on Tuesdays. They were allotted over $3300 dollars against $2750 for this semester.

The figures speak for themselves. It costs more to print two four page issues a week, than one and a half.

The trouble lies in the executive council and finance committee. The gentlemen controlling the money this semester must have decided that they really didn't want a good paper. They must have received more money through the sale of student body cards, yet cut the allowance for the paper.

When the gentlemen (I won't mention any names) of the Ex Council finally wake up to the facts of the case, they might reconsider, and allow The Guardsman enough money to keep from having to use pictures that were taken three or four years ago. At least we hope so.

Sincerely yours,
Philip Kline

• The Road To Ruin

Editor, The Guardsman:

I recently read an editorial in the college paper which stated that the parking facilities of the college are pretty bad.

Pretty bad doesn't describe the condition of my rear axel which was darn near broken going over the dirt road. I park my car there so I don't have to walk a half mile to get to class.

Why doesn't the college have these roads paved?

Yours truly,

NEEDED, vehicles of any size, shape, or form. Must be able to make steep hill in high. Comfortable seats desired, but not essential.

Somethin' must be done about this jaunt to the gym. Why? Have you heard of the terrible things that happen to sufferers of this climb and descent? If not, listen my children and you shall hear of the effect it has on we students who are unaccustomed to such strenuous exercise and yours truly means strenuous. Results: weak knees, lack of breath, total exhaustion and so many stiff, sore joints that, by glory, if they don't do something about that hill!—Ah, well, guess we'll just have to partake of some of that well publicized energy giving food of the green, leafy variety. Won't someone hear our plea and start some sort of contraption moving regularly up and down that thar hill? V. B.

IN recent issues of The Guardsman, you may have seen the column, "Without Benefit . . ." by our associate editor, Lou Goldstone. In his features, Louie is not attempting to discourage sport fans from reading this page. In those words that only he could use, Louie is telling you, and us, that he has found a character (not unlike our Oscar, who was not unlike Yehudi, the guy who makes the wooden nickels people shouldn't take) whom he has named Schuyler Goop, the gooph. With the aid of Goop's prowesses as a magician, a thing that possesses supernatural powers (like Eugene, the Jeep), Louie is going to outguess the rational system of statistical knowledge and predict Ram scores. Only Louie has to write 12 inches of what some call slop to tell you this. And so what? Does he guess the score? Does Goop turn out to be a gooph? Ha! You tell US!!

WAA Barbecue Tomorrow Afternoon At Sigmund Stern

Tomorrow afternoon, members of the Women's Athletic Association and their friends will take over Sigmund Stern Grove from the hours of 4:30 to 9 p.m., when the WAA spread under the chairmanship of Betty Teter, will be held.

Main purpose of the spread, which replaces the traditional splash party this semester, will be that of familiarizing new and prospective members with the aims and activities of the WAA.

"Everyone who attends this affair will be assured of having a good time," Miss Teter said. "This will be the last time we will be able to remind women students, as tomorrow is the big night. Don't forget that the barbecue is in honor of the new students of the college and we hope to see a large group of women representing the Freshman class. Old students are also urged to come out and get acquainted with some of the newer members of the college."

Tickets for the affair have been placed on sale at the college bank and may be purchased for the price of 40 cents.

Bertha Mae Keller, physical education instructor, and Barbara Smith, president of the WAA, will present short talks on WAA aims to those women present at the spread.

Another feature of the evening will be the introduction of those songs judged winners in the Frosh-Sophomore Contest which closes tomorrow at noon, according to Jeanne Arnold, general chairman of the contest.

Entries in the song contest, which calls for original lyrics to old folk tunes or original music and words, commemorating WAA, as well as songs for introducing people, and songs dedicated to specific sports, are still being accepted. A list of old folk tunes suitable for the contest may still be obtained by late entrants in the checkroom on the second floor of the gymnasium.

Members of the WAA comprising the Spread committee include: Betty Teter, general chairman, June Schunick and Irene Schunick, entertainment, Dorothy Nelson, hostess, invitations, Alleen Watt, publicity, Bernice Strube, sports, Rita Weiman, arrangements, Rita McDonald, rearrangements.

Plans are now being tentatively set by members of the WAA, for a "kid" party to be held either the first or second week of November in celebration of the sixth anniversary of the WAA in this college, according to Miss Keller.

Featured in the "kid" party will be "kid" games and contests, such as kiddy car races. Women who attend the affair are to dress in six-year-old "kiddy" garb. Not only WAA members, but all women of the college will be invited to this affair when a definite date has been set.

In the way of every-day events, members of the WAA have been holding elections for team managers of the various WAA sports clubs. Recently elected were Jane McKinnon, swimming manager, Verna Cullen, badminton manager, and Betty Teter, rifle manager.

Predicting proficient badminton teams this semester, Miss Keller said, "Badminton has seen a sign-up of many women who have played a lot of badminton in high school."

Also commented upon was the fact that the new white "gym clothes" worn by the women both in regular, and WAA classes is much more becoming than that formerly used.

Since the opening of the ice skating facilities to the public, many more students have signed for the sport, officials announced. Familiar sights such as skates being draped around books and binders are re-viewed by the college students. Also increasing in popularity is the novice ice skater's equipment of single rods which instructs the student's ankles weakened by high heeled pumps to properly support the weight the feet should be carrying.

Intramural

Teams Promised Awards, Cups

Captain Fred McFarland, director of the intramural sports program, has released the list of awards which will be given to the winners of the various events. The list totals 129. Forty-three first, 43 second, and 43 third place awards will be given.

Softball winners take the lion's share of the awards with a total of 30. Basketball and volleyball are a close second with 24. Horseshoes, golf, rifle, cross country and free throwing are the individual awards. The rest, basketball, volleyball and softball will be team awards.

The organization which grabs the most honors will have its name engraved upon a permanent trophy which, if plans go through, will be donated by the company from which the medals will be purchased.

Competition will begin in October if things go according to schedule. Softball, tennis and golf competition will take place that month. November finds basketball, cross country, horseshoes, and rifle on the docket. December has volleyball, swimming, boxing and free throwing, a new sport.

The medals are being procured through Melvin Chicazola. Chicazola claims he will try to get the permanent trophy free of charge.

"If the students react to the idea of medals as well as Captain McFarland has, this will be the most extensive and most successful intramural programe in the history of the college, and will be an auspicious beginning for the new building as well," Chicazola said.

Snow, Ice Lack Fails To Stop Ski Club

Lack of ice and snow will not deter the Ski Club according to Bob Ogg, club president. To traverse the sand dunes which will be used as runs, floor wax will be rubbed on the bottom surface of the skis.

Falk Falkenberg, a Norwegian boy is expected to lead the team. Falkenberg competed in the New England winter carnival and is the most experienced man on the team.

Students interested in joining the Ski Club should contact Bob Ogg, phone AShberry 9611, address 670 Creston Road, Berkeley, he said. The meeting will be held some time next week.

The five man team will be chosen after the inter-club tryouts which have not been scheduled as yet. Outside competition is expected to be stronger this year as a result of the formation of several new clubs.

Falkenberg registered in the college last semester from an eastern college for which he had been winning many laurels. Upon his entrance to the college, he was introduced to Bob Ogg who immediately took advantage of having such a distinguished athelete in the college and in his team. From the time of Falkenbergs entrance, the college ski teams score has zoomed from the lower brackets and is now resting with the coast's best. Despite his ability, Falkenberg remains quietly in the background while the club rests comfortably upon his laurels.

Basketball Starts With Fall Practice Sessions

Of the 35 athletes who turned out for fall basketball, Coach Tom Wilson is fashioning a team which will star for the Rams on the hardwood courts later this fall and next spring.

Practice for the casaba lads is just starting, Wilson announced, since the gym floor has just been painted. The hoopsters will make up for lost time, however, with strenuous practices scheduled for the near future.

Wilson has not announced the names of those signed up, but promises to name the most promising ones within a very short space of time.

Basketball, this fall, will be confined to practice games with local high school and non-conference college fives. League competition gets under way early in January, when a round-robin type of play will be inaugurated.

State Game

Ram Machine Aims To Beat Gator Again

Having tasted the nectar of victory last year by defeating the traditional college foe in a drubbing to the tune of 19 to 0, the 1940 Ram machine looks to another chance at the wonder cup next Friday, when the Gator once again meets the Rams.

Last year, the Rams peppered the skies with aerial bombs that had the great Chad Reade all over the field, and so much so that he had to be taken out of the game at the end of the third quarter. Reade has felt the sting of defeat.

He will be back this year with red in his eyes, a grit of his teeth and a scowl on his face. If Reade can be stopped, which is not impossible, the game should go to the Rams. With the removal of Reade will go the chances of the Gator.

The Golden Tide, according to reports, have tremendous power in the flanks, inside of which most of the plays will be run. Razzle-dazzle plays, and many reverses were being practiced, according to reports.

The Rams, on the other hand, have been concentrating on power plays. This game, therefore, should be of straight power.

With the showing the Rams gave in the Placer game, State may change its system of double wingback, and may depend upon flat passes, the same system the Rams used so effectively in the encounter last year.

State's backfield is almost the same as last year's. Reade and Frank Verducci, former student here and now a State ball packer will be back in the line-up. Reports say the line is experienced and heavy, the backfield fast and tricky.

Last year's game did not see much action until the beginning of the third period. The first 15 minutes of play were used mostly in the exchanging of punts, both teams looking for chances. Midway in the second quarter, State, and Reade, started a series of hammerings at the Ram line, and found themselves just ten yards from promised land, with seconds to play. In a desperate attempt for a touchdown, Reade faded back and threw a pass, only to have it batted down by Jim Molich, all conference end of the college.

Probable starting line-ups will be released by the end of the week. Coach Lee Eisan's first team will probably be the same as that of the Placer game, Manager John Baries said.

Wilson Ponders Class Net Play, Considers Prizes

Still in the formulative state, plans for the intramural tennis ladder will be released by Tom Wilson, head tennis instructor, within a week or two.

Wilson indicated that there would be prizes for the top players in both singles and doubles competition. Though no tennis team is planned for this fall, winners in the class matches will be considered for berths on next season's tennis squad, Wilson said.

"Person's desiring to compete in the tennis matches do not necessarily have to be members of the tennis classes," Wilson added. "The intramural matches are open to all members of the college student body."

Further details concerning dates of the matches, and sign-up location, will be announced in The Guardsman on a future date.

No letterman, unofficially announced the intramural heads, will compete in the sport in which they received their blocks. This makes the games more evenly matched and gives each contestant a better chance for winning his laurels on the basis of ability. In this way, more students stand an even chance, more students will enter into the sport, and competition will be greater and more interesting for spectators as well as contestants, Wilson said.

Mountaineers Take Home Ramchop In Fumblefest

Tasting bitter defeat for the first time in two years by the hands of Placer, the Mountaineers shoved a rough-edged seven down the gullet of the Ram varsity last Friday in Seals Stadium.

Harrassed throughout the game with a tricky ball that blobbed out of the ball carrier's hand just within scoring distance, the college Ram team took to the air in a last minute attempt to at least even the score, only to have the elusive porkhide eke out of the waiting end's fingertip each time. Sorely missed in the line-up was George Meyers and Clark Johnson tackle and guard respectively on the strong side of the line and Luke Lowell in the backfield. Had these veterans been in their positions, the score would have undoubtedly been different.

Breaks Are Bad

From the beginning the breaks were for the Mountaineers. All through the first and second quarters, fumbles prevailed and had the Rams kicking and defending, punting and holding. On the second play for the Rams for the season of 1940, Al Nauman, stellar Ram tailback took a quick off tackle rush and drilled into a mass of brawn. In the melee, the pellet came out alone and uncovered, only to have itself smothered again under the red jersey of Brennan, behemothic Mountaineer. From then, the Rams were playing a defensive game.

The lone score came late in the third quarter when a flat pass from Jim Honnert to Dave Cunningham was intercepted by Ostrom, Placer fullback. The ball bounded from the chest of another Placer player and plopped into Ostrom's hands. With three unsuccesfull attempts at the line, Brennan of Placer booted a looping punt that bounced crazily from Nauman's reach and lolled over the seven yard line. In a quick play, Nauman tossed an easy pass to Herb Taylor, who had been playing dead man near the sidelines, and bolted 24 yards before being brought down by Chidester, Placer's safety man.

This would have been the beginning of a long drive that might have eventually seen the Rams the winner. However, the play was called back and the Rams penalized five yards for a backfield in motion rule broken during the quick play.

Beginning Of End

Blakemore's punt went for 32 yards and returned by Chidester to the 17. Ostrom swung wide toward the strong side and suddenly cut in through the weakened tackle spot and was finally stopped two yards from paydirt by Nauman and Jack Medrano. The first play netted a yard, and on the succeding play, Chidester whammed the forward wall, leaned over the final white mark and was thrown back to the two. But the whistle blew and the striped arms of Leonard "Pop" Elder, Referee, shot up in the air. With it rose a groan from the college rooting section and a gleeful squeek from somewhere. Ostrom's placement kick divided the uprights and floated clear out of the ball park; Placer 7, Rams 0.

Placer, seeing the weakened center spot, concentrated most of their man power through their strong side guard or inside tackle. Blakemore knifed through the interference time and again to bring down the packer, but he alone could not bring down a man behind a moving wall of three.

Fumble Field Day

Three times, the Ram machine began rolling, and each time the ball eluded the crook of the white-jerseyed arm just within scoring distance. Once in the second quarter, Cunningham, on a daring third down fake punt deep in his own territory, blasted eight yards and passed the midfield stripe, the first time the ball went beyond the red side of the field. Nauman's pass to Ross was good bringing the ball to rest on the 35. Honnert picked off three, and then a shovel pass from Nauman to Cunningham was intercepted by the ever-present Bromberg. Again in the third period and again in the fourth, the Ram machine began to roll, only to have the ball batted out of the Ram's hands.

There were no outstanding players for the college. The interference was slow in forming and at times the ball carrier had to shove his way through his own men.

Soccer

Rams Oppose Bulldogs Soon

Little more than a week remains before the official opening of the league schedule, when the Rams oppose San Mateo a week from Saturday, at San Mateo, Joe Lantagne, soccer coach, announced this week.

Lantagne did admit that the going would be tough this season. Since most of the colleges in the league are four year institutions, it is possible for them to retain men for at least three years. Men at a two year college can compete for only two years, and the coaches are faced with the task of building up a team out of new material every season.

Meanwhile Lantagne is busy teaching his newcomers to the shin-kicking art the rules and art of soccer. Gradually the boys are getting into shape, Lantagne added. At first they were bothered with their wind after a long summer of "soft relaxation."

Being new to the college himself, it has been hard for Lantagne to take over the coaching of men he didn't know for competition in a new league, where competition will be stiffer than before. Within a week it is expected that Lantagne will be able to comment on the possibilities of the boys—that is, as soon as they get a few practice games under their belts.

Soccer was formerly under the coachings of Tom Wilson, present adviser of the AMS. Lantagneand Wilson have been interviewing prospects and former players who are not on this year's team. A tentative line-up will soon be released with a schedule of the coming games, Lantagne said.

Hurley Expecting Good Swimming Performances

Busying himself with the teaching of swimming strokes, John Hurley, local swimming instructor and coach, is keeping a watchful eye on mermen who show promise of exceptional swimming ability.

Since he has no swimming team to worry about, at the present time at least, Hurley can concentrate on the correct swimming styles. Several promising mermen are enrolled in the two classes, but Hurley hopes that others, with ability, will come to his aid next spring, when he undertakes to build up a team worthy of representing the Rams in collegiate competition.

Both swimming classes are large, Hurley commented, and out of them he hopes to get enough good swimmers to place in their respective swimming events.

All interested in the team are urged to see Hurley near the end of this semester, or the beginning of next, to sign up for the team. Actual team practice will begin next March in the Jefferson High pool, Hurley announced.

CAB Publication

Wong To Head Cabby Staff In Club Board Appointments

Cabby, official bulletin of the Club Advisory Board, will be issued at every meeting of the group this semester as long as funds are available, Bob Ogg, CAB president, announced this week.

Deadline for the next issue, which is to appear at the October 1 meeting, has been set for this afternoon at 2 o'clock. Clubs desiring notice of their activities in Cabby should submit copy in Room 142 at that time, Ogg indicated.

Wong Appointed Editor

Appointed, temporarily, to the editorship of the club board publication was Theodora Wong, secretary-treasurer of the group, while given the post of staff artist was Marion MacKillop, formerly on The Guardsman staff. Other appointments will be made when a more complete list of authorized club representatives is available, Ogg said, commenting that those wishing to help with the publication should see him or Miss Wong.

It is planned to include in future bulletins the minutes of the meeting previous to issue. These had formerly been mimeographed separately and distributed to club representatives through the mails. For this reason, part of the money which had been set aside for CAB correspondence may be diverged to cover the cost of Cabby.

Board Aims At Service

Activities of the Club Advisory Board will be concentrated on service to the organizations represented, James S. Hughes, faculty adviser declared. "While the board will have no great power in college affairs, we can nevertheless be of service to both the clubs and the student body in general. Through our different clubs we can gain support for college functions, and working together the groups in the CAB might be able to put over some project that an individual club could not accomplish," he told the delegation which met last Tuesday for the first time this semester.

At this meeting was distributed the first issue of Cabby, which had been rushed through the mimeographing process to give club representatives specific information on the filing of petitions for removal of charter, last day for which is October 15. "Clubs which fail to file one of these forms together with complete constitution and by-laws, will be put on the suspended list," Ogg warned.

Model Constitution Included

To aid clubs in fulfilling petition requirements, a model constitution was reprinted from a textbook used by the college parliamentary law class. Contents of Cabby also included pep talks by Lyle Shultz, Associated Students president, and Ogg, and a cartooned reminder for clubs to file charter petitions early. On this last point, Ogg remarked: "The sooner we know which clubs remain in good standing and who their representatives are, the quicker we can get on to other business, since we will know which persons are eligible for committee work and for the Cabby staff."

Cabby was published for the first time last semester under the editorship of Robert Schlesinger. "Instead of issuing a ten or sixteen page bulletin twice a semester as was done previously, the staff now intends to prepare but three or four pages, to be issued twice a month," the present editor commented. "Thus the material will be more timely, and clubs will be given more opportunity to see news of their activities published."

Past President

Bob Fex Writes From Montana

From the wilds of Montana, by way of Uncle Sam's mail, came word from Bob Fex, former Associated Students president, last week.

His letter reached the college publications office to tell a touching story of his exile and to ask that The Guardsman be sent to him so that he may keep in touch with "the old school."

Fex was head of the Associated Students at the time work was started on the foundation of this college. Of the new campus he remarked:

"It really must be a great place from some of the reports I receive from the old gang . . . I guess I came about four years too soon."

Bob Fex

Of his pioneering experience among the Montana natives, Fex revealed that his chief efforts were only in the field of agriculture.

No, he is not a farmer or a coon hunter, but by virtue of his junior college education and uncommon talents, he has been appointed auditor in charge of the Helena District audit office, Surplus Marketing Administration, of the Department of Agriculture.

"My best regards to all the members of the faculty and to any of the old guard that are still around who might remember me," Fex wrote.

Hurley, Lantagne New Adds As Amori, Dearborn Leave

Two new instructors have been added to the physical education and hygiene staff to take the place of Terry Dearborn who has been transferred to Santa Barbara State, and Joseph Amori, who is now completing graduate study at Stanford.

John Hurley who replaces Dearborn is a graduate of Washington State and comes here from a position at Taft Junior College. Joseph Lantagne, substituting for Amori, comes here from Stanford to teach hygiene and coach soccer.

Student Performance Of Aida At Opera House

A performance of the opera Aida will be presented exclusively for students, Friday, November 1, at 2 p.m. in the Opera House, according to Flossita Badger, music instructor.

This latest presentation was made possible by the enthusiastic reception of last year's Madame Butterfuly before a filled house of students.

Heading the cast will be Elizabeth Rethberg in the role of Aida, assisted by Suzanne Sten, George Stinson, and Robert Weede.

Seats are available for $1.50 and 75 cents. Students desiring tickets should

Professor Says:

Democracy Needs Good Propaganda

LOS ANGELES, Sept. 22.—Propaganda, when used solely for the purpose of giving effect to the law, is entirely consistent with sound democratic public policy, Dr. Harwood L. Childs, associate professor of politics at Princeton University, told 200 business executives gathered on the Los Angeles campus of the University of California at a recently concluded short course in public relations.

"Much legislation requires for its successful administration and execution the active cooperation of large publics, in some cases the voters and citizens of the country as a whole. This is especially true of criminal laws, traffic rules, and such legislation as the N.I.R.A., the A.A.A., the Social Security Act, and many others. Efforts by the Federal Bureau of Investigation to discourage and combat crime by using modern techniques and media of mass appeal do not, in my opinion, go beyond the limits of sound public policy.

"Once public opinion reflected in acts of Congress has given definite expression to policy it is the function of the administrative branch to give effect to it. This point is illustrated by the situation a country faces in wartime. Before a decision on the question of war has been decided by the legally responsible authorities, freedom to advocate varied, even conflicting policies is the recognized privilege of unofficial groups and individuals. But after a state has once decided on a policy, has definitely declared war, the use of administrative publicity and propaganda may be absolutely necessary for its successful conduct. Acting on this principle the federal government has already blueprinted the machinery for setting up at short notice a nation-wide propaganda machine to be used in case the United States should adopt war as an instrument of national policy," Childs pointed out. The public relations group which he addressed met for a fortnight of conferences through arrangements made by the American Council on Public Relations and the University of California Extension Division.

Behind Scenes With The Staff

EDITOR'S NOTE: The following literary effort was turned in by one of The Guardsman reporters when he found himself unable to cover his assignment. It is a standing rule of the editorial staff that when a reporter does not cover his "beat" he turn in his reasons for not doing so. In this way the editorial staff knows he has not just forgotten the job.

As a general rule, we don't print communications from the staff to the editor, but in this case perhaps the students will find it amusing to peer behind the scenes of the publication, and get a slight glimpse of one of the many headaches that give the editors grey hair and a haggard look.

No story Aeronautics propter hoc:

1) Being new, and being addicted to procrastination, I delayed gathering the goods until this morning, Friday, September 13, 1940.

2) Classes made it impossible to meet Capt. Richards at termination of his classes.

3) In vain I attempted entrance to his office:

a) It was locked.

b) By logical induction a posteriori I assumed that he was not in aforesaid office.

4) In vain I attempted to meet him in the course of his wandervogeling:

a) I did not see him.

b) I wouldn't know him if I did.

Ergo: I failed to get a story on Aeronautics. It won't happen again.

Parent Group

College Council Meets Oct. 21

The Junior College Council will hold its first meeting of the semester on Monday, October 21, announced Claude A. Shull, president of the organization, after the assembly of the Board of Directors last Thursday.

The council, a parent-teacher organization, has been extended to include all friends of the college as well as parents of the students.

To insure full co-operation with school officials in forwarding college plans, a campaign to enlist all parents in the council has been begun by Mrs. C. H. Schnacke, membership chairman.

To develop further the plans for this semester, a second meeting of the board will be held at four o'clock next Thursday afternoon.

The Board of Directors, headed by Dr. Shull, includes Dr. Percy Dolman, vice president; Helen Reveal, secretary, and Mrs. J. B. Mitchell, treasurer. Archibald J. Cloud, college head, was named honorary president of the council, and Deans Edwin C. Browne and Margaret Dougherty were also appointed to the board.

Business Department Places Another Student

Announcement of another full-time student placement was made today by F. Grant Marsh, business department head.

The employment of Bill Basich at the Fireman's Fund Insurance Company brings the total number of students placed by the department this semester to four. Margaret Sommerset, Edward Porter, and John Riordan were placed during the first weeks of college.

Through the insurance and other business classes the college conducts an employment service for qualified students of these courses.

Students desiring employment in the commercial field should see him at his office, Room 222, immediately, Marsh advised.

The committee is scheduled to meet again tonight at Miss Arnold's home. when the regular time for meeting will be set.

At the suggestion of Alfred P. Agosti, one of the faculty advisers for the group, the committee will aim to function in a more businesslike manner than in previous semesters.

At weekly meetings, college social affairs will be discussed with sponsor groups to avoid conflicting dates, Miss Arnold added, and after dances given by the Associated Students, a budget will be made out promptly and sub[illegible] to the Executive Council.

Distinguished Guest

Edith Pence, Former Dean Visits College Campus

Former Assistant Dean of Women here, Edith E. Pence, now director of curriculum of public schools, was visitor and guest of the college last week at a luncheon, President Archibald J. Cloud announced.

Speaking in the highest terms on the accommodations now provided to the college, Miss Pence remarked how very much improved were the conditions over the time when she was here. She was high in her praise of the conduct of the students, Cloud remarked.

Miss Pence presented to the college two interesting and well illustrated volumes dealing with the economic, financial, labor and social conditions in Brazil.

The books, one of which is in English and the other in Spanish, came to Miss Pence with the compliments of the Commissioner of Brazil to the Golden Gate International Exposition.

The college library will be enriched by two books, since the two valuable volumes will be placed there for student use, Cloud commented.

She was a delegate to the International Convention held in Lima, Peru, last year. Also, on the invitation of Secretary of State Hull, Miss Pence attended the Pan American Conference recently held in Washington, D.C.

• Commendable Suggestion
Editor, The Guardsman:

I would like to comment on the question of students who did not have student body cards getting the paper. Why couldn't we create a box in the library where the students who have cards, and are through with their papers, could leave them for those who don't have cards?

It is hard for some students to get through college. If they can't afford a card they shouldn't be deprived of the privilege of a paper. I, for one, would willingly put my paper there when I had completed the reading of it. I am sure that there are others who would be willing to cooperate.

If the above plan is not feasible, why not have the library keep a number of copies in a form where they could be issued to the students to read—then be returned to the desk—somewhat the system as public libraries use on the daily papers.

For the aid of those who can't afford student cards, let's work out something.

Charles C. Smith

Editor's Note: Your idea is an excellent one and you are to be commended for your interest in the college and the students who attend it. We suggest you take the matter to the librarian and help work out some system.

Student Art Work At Open House October 3-6

An art exhibit of student landscapes in water color, commercial art designs, and posters of various sorts will play a prominent part in the coming Open House Week, October 3 to 6, according to the college art department.

The exhibit, being prepared by Richard Allman and Evans Ecke, college art instructors, will, on the whole, be composed of material not used in last semester's display, they declared.

Newspapers Will Hold Open House All Next Week

The importance of news today is no secret.

The daily newspaper gives us grist for the mills of the nation's thought and opinions. It is vital to our education. It is a governor for a world machinery that is screaming in high gear.

The men and women who are writing the pages of the daily newspaper today are writing history, and every edition is another installment in tomorrow's history books.

Those pages do not fall independently into place, nor print themselves. They represent organization, judgment, hard work, certain and skilled knowledge of an exacting trade.

Getting out a newspaper on time, every edition, every day, is no picnic. And today, as never before, getting out a newspaper is important.

The San Francisco Chronicle is going to observe National Newspaper Week from September 30 to October 6, inclusive.

During those seven days, visitors will be conducted on free tours of The Chronicle's great plant at Fifth and Mission Streets.

Trained guides will tell them the story behind The Chronicle. The visitors will see the city room where reporters and editors race deadlines 24 hours a day, pound out the news of the city, sift and edit the news of the world.

In the composing room, they will listen to the song of the linotype banks as the machine converts the typewritten word into metal, and in the pressroom they will watch the spinning cylinders and rollers of the presses grind out the editions, 20,000 copies an hour.

Dedication

may see here on the campus Art in Action.

To get the college in presentable shape for the great day, student leaders are now organizing a committee on grounds and buildings. Heading the group are Lyle Shultz, Associated Students president, and Alden Thorogood, high sophomore president, who are putting forth a call for volunteers for this task.

Preceding the dedication ceremony and open house on Sunday will be a dinner in the college cafeteria on Thursday, October 3, at which the Faculty Association will honor President Cloud, according to Luckmann.

Leading Artists Invited

Invited to attend as guests are the artists whose works will soon adorn the building: Diego Rivera, Fred Olmstead, Herman Volz, and Dudley Carter. An attempt has been made by the faculty association to secure Dr. Monroe E. Deutsch, vice president and provost of the University of California, as speaker.

Highlight of this dinner will be the unveiling of a permanent addition to the cafeteria, a ram's head carved of redwood, the work of Carter, who is also creating another figure at the Exposition, demonstrating Art in Action there.

To sidetrack rumors that the witnessing of the dedication will be restricted to a fortunate few, Luckmann emphasized: "Students and parents are specifically invited. It won't be a success without them!"

Gross While Thinking

COLLEGE

THE student-faculty panel discussion held last Monday in the student government class was an excellent one.

The subject was How Student Government Plays a Part In National Defense.

Some panel discussions are boring to the average person. This one however, was not. The students and faculty who participated gave live, interesting, and enlightening talks.

The unfortunate part of the affair was that only students enrolled in the student government course had an opportunity to hear and participate in the discussion.

The discussion was on a timely and important subject and should be repeated at a future date before a larger audience. Perhaps one of the big lecture halls would be a suitable spot.

LOOKS like the college is suffering from an influx of pink traffic tags.

The city police are scattering these pretty colored missives very profusely among the cars parked on and around the campus.

Is it possible that a great many automobile owners cannot read the signs that say "No Trespassing—For Commercial Vehicles Only, — No Parking" etc?

Reports from official sources indicate that these tags will continue to be given until the college students and faculty learn to respect the signs posted conspicuously about the campus.

Dear Theodore

LAST Tuesday, in the Meet the Students column, The Guardsman and editor came in for a bit of acid poured from the lips of one Theodore Penland.

Theodore (We might as well be formal, since we've never been introduced) was of the opinion that The Guardsman was bubbling over with conceit concerning its recent All-American conquest.

Mr. Penland gave as the reason for his dislike the fact that his high school paper (Great Falls, Montana) won third place in its division but didn't mention the fact as much as The Guardsman does.

Tch, tch, Mr. Penland such modesty. Well, we'll mention the fact for you—"The prep school paper at Great Falls, Montana, (longitude 111 degrees, latitude 47.5 degrees) won a third place in its division."

Theodore was associate editor and sports editor on the Montana Masterpice, and claims that the editor of The Guardsman should not rest on the laurels of the former editor.

We don't like to disappoint the gentleman from Montana but we are the former editor.

Speaking of editors, and stuff, why don't you, Mr. Penland, with your wealth of journalistic experience behind you, drop into Room 134 some afternoon and give us some pointers on how to keep out of the rut you so obligingly put us in?

CITY

ONE of the saddest sights to our eyes will be the closing of the Golden Gate International Exposition next Sunday.

The Fair has seemed to be a permanent playground, and one gets the feeling that it has always been there.

Before the final curtain is rung down, a last trip to the Island and a last look around should be the goal of every San Franciscan.

NATIONAL

WE WERE under the impression that there was an embargo on the sale of scrap iron to Japan. As a matter of fact a great many Americans are still under this same impression and are wholeheartedly in accord with it.

It was therefore, with some surprise and annoyance that the fact that the City of San Francisco is selling scrap iron directly to Japan was revealed last week.

Perhaps there are some who remember the City industriously tearing up street car tracks that were no longer needed?

Those tracks are now aboard a Japanese steamer bound for Tokyo.

It seems to us that this is a hell of a way to express the spirit of peace that is so predominant in America today. Even the most childish of us must realize that this scrap iron will not be used for peaceful methods.

It would serve us right if the scrap iron sold to Japan were someday used against the American people themselves. If this should ever come to pass, we have no one to blame but ourselves.

Palace Night

White, Gillin, Mac Killops Win In Singing Contest

Winners in the singing contest for Junior College Night at the Palace Hotel were chosen last Tuesday afternoon by a committee including Len Gross, Aspasia Vasilatos, and Edmund Wunsch, sophomore students, Mary Frances Malone, campus representative, announced recently.

Those chosen were: Don White, high sophomore student; Jeanne Gillin, low sophomore; and Marion and Betty MacKillop, sophomore and freshman students, respectively.

Selection was on a basis of general suitability for singing at the Palace, Miss Malone said, remarking that the contestants were exceptionally good this semester.

Those who also tried out before an audience of over a hundred spectators included Dick Naftale, Bill Schaeffer, Vivienne McKnew, Peggy Buchanan, Joe Wiss, Jack Radonich, Fred Faber, Don Fields, Mary Hansen, Tony Pimental, Patty Atkinson, and Zenia Esacovich.

Winners To Sing At Palace

"The winners are to receive complimentary cover charges for dancing in the Rose Room Bowl of the Palace tonight," Miss Malone declared. "They are also to sing in the Rose Room, as is the custom on Junior College Night."

Commenting on the affair which is to follow the football game with State at Seals Stadium, Miss Malone remarked "We have been more than satisfied with the number of reservations whic[illegible]ave been placed through the representatives. Of course, the special price of $2.07 per couple has been an added attraction to students who want to hear Artie Shaw and his famous orchestra."

Secure Reservations

Reservations may still be placed with representatives this afternoon, she added, explaining that those who do not have reservations may also be able to receive accomodations for the affair. The other two representatives for the hotel are Lyle Shultz, Associated Students president, and Len Gross, Guardsman editor.

"We expect a large number of college students, if the present number of reservations are any indication," she said. "Moreover, past experience has shown such affairs to be exceptionally popular with the students at the college, partly because of the hotel's cooperation and partly because of the top-notch orchestras featured by the Palace."

AWS Tea Honoring High School Seniors Deferred

Postponement of the Associated Women Student's teas honoring high school seniors was announced by Margaret Dougherty, adviser of the AWS. Postponement of the college dedication ceremonies was given as the cause.

"We feel that it would not be right to hold these teas and to conduct our guests through the building until it has been officially dedicated," said Miss Dougherty.

New Dates Not Set

New dates for the event have not as yet been set but they will probably be in the week following the dedication.

"Because of the large attendance expected, 20 girls from each San Francisco high school, we have decided to hold the traditional event on two consecutive days," Miss Dougherty declared. "By doing this we expect to be able to give the visitors more complete attention and also to carry on small tours of the campus without too much disturbance to classes in session."

Final plans for the affair and appointment of various, committees to take part in the teas will be accomplished in the next AWS meeting, she said, Miss Virginia Hubbard, president of the AWS, will appoint committees for reception, entertain and refreshment.

College Tours Feature

"This semester we shall not provide singing and dancing as in past semesters, but we shall feature instead tours of the college buildings and grounds," Miss Hubbard commented.

Future plans for the AWS are still tentative, of course, Miss Hubbard said, but it is believed that the traditional tea for the parents of college women will be held later in the semester.

Sacramento Game

Football Trip Plans Made

Train accomodations and a dancing car are to be at the disposal of the college students who accompany the football team to Sacramento, October 18, announced Bernardo Ferrari, chairman of the accomodations committee.

As a fitting climax to what should prove to be a very memorable day, Sacramento Junior College has announced that a dance will be held after the game on Friday evening, according to Yell Leader Pete Aydelotte.

This gesture of hospitality will be in honor of the Associated Students and there will be no admission charge. The dance will start immediately after the final gun sounds to end the game, and is open to all the men and women of this college who make the excursion to Sacramento.

Tickets On Sale

The fare for the trip will be $1.80 instead of $1.75, the previous price. Tickets will be available at the bank or may be purchased from members of the committee. Members of the committee are: Ferrari, Pete Aydelotte, Merrill Steele, Joseph Bryan, William Menary, and Lyle Shultz.

The Southern Pacific, through its agent, B. C. Harvey, demands that a guarantee of two hundred be fulfilled by the 16th of October. The committee

Ex Council Scores Short Class Interval

By a unanimous vote Wednesday, the Executive Council went officially on record as disapproving the present five minute interval between classes, and passed a motion requesting administration action to extend the time to 10 minutes.

Believing that the present five minute interval is not long enough for students or faculty, the Executive Council as a body plans to meet with J. Paul Mohr, registrar, some time today to discuss the possibility of having the time extended.

Not until this semester has the time between classes been shortened to five minutes. Heretofore the interval has been of ten minutes in according with practice at other colleges and universities.

Reason for the change has not been formally stated. Attention was brought to the subject mainly through student letters submitted to the Rams Horn columns of The Guardsman, and led to a recent editorial plea to the administration for return to the former schedule.

The council will also send an official letter to Fred Waring's Pennsylvanians Pleasure Time, a radio program, to investigate the opportunity of having the Pennsylvanians write a fight song for the college.

"I should like to request members of the Associated Students who are interested in having such a song written for this college as has been written for other colleges to send letters to Waring and his orchestra as soon as possible," Lyle Shultz, Associated Student president, commented. "The address is Fred Waring's Pennsylvanians, 1697 Broadway, New York City, New York."

Shultz added that he thought that the situation was well worth investigating.

Mystery

Bells And More Bells But Why?

By EVE BURKEY

If there's a strange ringing in your ears these days don't send for the little white men yet. Even if Uncle Joe, now in residence at Napa, did start by hearing bells you have no cause for alarm. Yours isn't the only jangle crammed cranium.

Those thousands of bewildered students and instructors may brush the gloom from their thousands of brows. Bells really are ringing at the college.

Now that the great fear has been expelled, many right thinking students may pause and reflect on the phenomena of the bells. If they are really clever, those scholars would also reflect in this wise: "Why are the bells ringing?"

Why? Well, to be quite devastatingly frank and above board with you readers, we don't know.

Someone has ventured to suggest that, the bells being bought, paid for, and installed, they have to be rung. They further suggest that the bells' clamour is just the janitor giving them their daily dozen. Weilll——maybe.

Then again, reliable authorities (not like the first two sources) have stated positively that the bells are ringing to call the janitor. Maybe so, but who's ringing them? Surely not the janitor!

To clear up the mystery, someone else, believing in the enlightenment of the registrar's office, asked that office's Miss Learnard just why the bells were ringing. After being assured by that someone that the entire college was hearing them, Miss Learnard released the following statement:

"I don't know."

Shaw At Recent Palace Interview

Maestro Reveals Future Plans; Tells Of Views On Swing Versus Good Music

By MARY FRANCES MALONE

"We will be giving concerts in Carnegie Hall and the Hollywood Bowl within a year," the quiet young man in the gray suit said as he looked lazily around the Rose Room Bowl of the Palace Hotel.

Surprising as it seems, it was no long-haired student of the three B's speaking—it was not the composer of the most intricate symphonic music—it was Artie Shaw, brilliant clarinetist and leader of one of the most widely and heatedly discussed dance bands in the country.

"Yes," Shaw continued, "we'll be in Carnegie Hall playing good, modern music, not swing and not classical. You see, I consider my organization equal to any symphonic orchestra in the country, with certain considerations, of course."

"We Don't Play Swing"

In an effort to clarify his somewhat startling statement, he became very earnest.

Grinning a little sheepishly, he said, "whatever else you may hear, we do not play 'swing' music. I wish someone would find a concrete definition of 'swing,' so we could be sure not to play it.

"As far as I'm concerned, just to confuse you, there is no sharp line to be drawn between the classics and swing—ouch! there's that word again. There are only two types of music that I recognize—good music and bad. We just try to play good music, that's all. Our aim is perfection. We're not going to stop until we achieve it or know the reason why," he declared.

"There are always questions concerning the difference between the old band and this one," he admitted. "Of course there are the obvious differences in the enlarged string section and the increased number of musicians."

Actually, he explained, there is a more significant difference between the two organizations and the type of music which they play.

Success Explained

"It's kind of hard to understand just what happened," he commented. "You see, the old band was made popular overnight by its recordings. The first thing we knew the country had snatched it up before we were ready. And, before we knew it, we were typed."

The bitter blow was that they were typed as—you guessed it—the country's leading swing band!

"From there on, matters were out of our hands," he shrugged. "You know what happened.

"Well, when I started organizing this band, I tried to find a group who would play good modern music, not jazz, although that is certainly its foundation. The result is our music called 'newer than swing,' but for heaven's sak, don't ask me to define it," he begged.

As an almost perfect song to introduce his new music to the American public, Shaw came upon Frenesi.

"We heard the number down in Mexico where it is a great favorite of the natives," he declared. "Realizing the potentialities of the song, we wasted no time getting the music and making our own arrangement of it. The result was a hit, I think." Yes sir, we think so, too.

College Audience Favored

Speaking about college students as audiences, Shaw remarked that he enjoys playing for them more than for any other type of audience.

"College students are up to the minute on records and new ideas in music. They keep you on your toes, and besides, they really enjoy good dance music; they come to a hotel featuring an orchestra to dance, not to sit around and talk."

In days such as these, it's hard to predict what sort of future is facing young musicians, Shaw believes.

"Those aspiring to a place in the musical world always have a difficult time, at best," he said, "and with the complications both at home and abroad, it's almost impossible to say what is going to happen in the entertainment world tomorrow. However, I guess that anyone who has a contribution and who really wants to play will be able to get ahead."

By that time the autograph fiends were organizing into platoons and the intermission was drawing dangerously near an end. So we left Artie Shaw, the man who does not play swing, and listened to the rest of his program.

He may not call it swing, so we do not call it swing. It was good music, granted, and our word for most of it is "jive."

Dedication

College Building Ceremony Postponed Until November

Postponement of the dedication of the college building to November 10 has been announced by Lloyd Luckmann, faculty association president and chairman of the dedication committee.

The dedication ceremony was originally scheduled for next Sunday, October 6.

Postponement was recommended by the administration after a meeting held earlier this week, because of unforseen delay in finishing class rooms, storerooms, and the surrounding grounds, Luckmann revealed.

The time gained by the postponement will enable workmen and maintenance men to beautify the building and its surroundings. "A great deal of work needs to be done before the building is ready for the eyes of the public," Luckmann said. It is estimated that it will take a month to get things in top shape.

The faculty association dinner in honor of President Cloud has been changed to November 7, so as to precede the dedication.

Another reason for the postponement is that November 10 is during National Education Week, sponsored by the National Education Association.

It was felt by the dedication committee that this would be a very appropriate and suitable time to hold open house and dedication.

At the present time there have been no changes made in the program which will remain as previously announced.

College Radio Program Cancelled Indefinitely

The college broadcasting program scheduled to be heard in the cafeteria every Wednesday morning, has been cancelled for an undetermined length of time, Marie Weller, instructor of radio broadcasting announced.

The program was cancelled because of mechanical defects in the loud speaking system and also because there is too much noise and confusion during lunch hours.

"The first program was broadcast last week to test the advisability of future programs but it was discovered that it was almost impossible to hear anything because of noise in the cafeteria", Miss Weller commented.

The program was to consist of students interviews, songs from the hit parade and last minute college news. The idea was conceived by two broadcasting students, Bentley Schoenfeld and Len Gross.

"It is to be hoped that in the future a program of this type may be worked out, but this cannot be accomplished at the present time", Miss Weller said.

Silva To Handle New NYA Applications

"At the present time, most applications for NYA employment are being handled by Claude T. Silva," Edward H. Redford, college NYA director declared today.

Silva, who is working in conjunction with Redford, is available in the NYA office, Room 148, and applications will be received until funds are exhausted.

NYA Requests Increase

"Naturally with a larger enrollment in the college," Redford said, "requests for NYA work have increased, and Silva, who joined the faculty this semester, is supervising these requests."

Silva reiterated Rerford's statement and added that, as most of the old applications have been attended to, more attention may now be given to providing for recent petitions.

"We will consider all requests as soon as possible," Silva added.

New Rules To Be Obeyed

NYA workers and supervisors were cautioned by both Redford and Silva to abide closely to the recently established regulations regarding time slips.

Time schedules must be in on October 6, and must be kept by the supervisors.

Any oversight or error on the part of either the worker or the supervisor will result in the worker losing his NYA job and will prevent the superyisor from having any future NYA help, the central NYA office has ruled.

Photography

Yearbook Staff Opens Contest

Latest contest now being sponsored by the Yearbook editorial staff is one calling for action pictures of football, basketball, and other sports, according to Dan McHugh, publicity chairman of the group.

Prize offered to the winning contestant is that of a complimentary copy of the year book, as well as a by-line within its pages.

Rules for the contest are that photographs must be 8 inches by 10 inches glossy. They must be action shots taken at college games this season. Posed pictures of practice sessions will not be accepted, McHugh said. Photographs are acceptable for the contest from now until the end of the college football season.

All photographs may be turned in to the student body office, Room 169, and all pictures submitted will become the property of the Yearbook committee.

Faculty members will constitute the judging committee, with Ken Pasquaietti, of the college faculty, heading the group.

In addition to the newly inaugurated photograph contest a yearbook naming contest, which will close on October 1, is also underway, with yearbook editor Dorothy Trood, at its head.

As in the photograph contest, the prize in the yearbook-naming contest, will be a complimentary copy of the college publication, but in addition the contest-winner will have the honor of having the name he submitted, chosen as the permanent name of any future yearbook publications of the college, according to Miss Trood.

"To get an outstanding name for the annual, is our present problem," McHugh commented," and we have already had a gratifying response from the students in the number of names submitted."

Last meeting of the yearbook editorial staff was held last Friday. Future meetings, according to McHugh, will be announced on the bulletin board of the main entrance, and all students who are interested in the work being done on the yearbook, are urged to attend.

Dances Must Be Held Off Campus; Gym Inadequate

Because of lack of adequate facilities in the gymnasiums, all Associated Students dances for this semester will have to be held off campus, Jean Arnold, student vice-president and chairman of the social committee today announced.

"It was originally intended to hold all college dances in the women's gym but a close inspection proved that such a procedure would not be practical," Miss Arnold commented.

A committee to investigate the possible locations for future dances both in San Francisco and in the east bay has been appointed.

The social committee was given sufficient funds for holding all dances off campus last Wednesday at the regular meeting of the Executive Council.

"The second dance of the semester honoring the High Freshman class has definitely been set for October 11," Miss Arnold said.

The affair will be informal, according to present plans.

"We have not decided on the place of the dance nor the orchestra we will use, but the committee is working on these points and expects to have a decision ready very shortly," Miss Arnold declared.

Student Plea Still Ignored By Administration

RECENTLY an editorial concerning the shortness of the period between classes made its appearance in The Guardsman.

The editorial, in an attempt to see an unnecessary and obviously impractical idea corrected, mentioned several sound, logical reasons why five minutes was too short a time to get from one class to another.

Since that editorial was published, there has been no change whatsoever in the status quo, except that many expressions of similar views from students and faculty have been received.

We are still forced to rush wildly from one class to another or accept the alternative of being late for class.

Although some members of the administration have expressed themselves in favor of returning to the old system of ten minutes between classes, others prefer the new. The result has been no action, nor has any explanation ever been given to the students.

This seems hardly compatible with the best ways of educating youth, for if youth cannot be confident that their superiors have their welfare at heart, the educative process is defeated before it is begun.

This issue was not brought up merely for the purpose of creating discontent among the students, nor is it the attempt of a student editor to display the power he may hold.

This is rather an attempt to create a better understanding between the students and the administration to replace the misunderstanding that now exists.

Perhaps it would be well to review briefly the points previously discussed.

The extra five minutes of class instruction, nine times out of ten will not particularly benefit the students. The extra five minutes will hardly teach a person anything more than he learned the preceding 50 minutes.

To go from one room to another anywhere in the main building takes fully five minutes (from the library to cafeteria excepted) walking very quickly, an impossibility in our crowded halls. Nor does it allow consideration of the fact that a student may want to discuss something with the instructor about his work. If he does so, he makes both himself and his instructor late for the next class.

Occasionally a student may meet a friend in the hall and wish to stop a moment and chat. If this is done, it is impossible to reach class on time.

The same things are true as far as instructors are concerned.

The ordinary person when confronted with a problem that directly concerns him will usually attempt to weigh the situation carefully and attempt to be fair in judgement. The student of the college appear to be unanimous in objecting to this curtailment of time.

There is the saying "There are two sides to every story". This is undoubtedly true, yet the administration has never deigned to present its side to the students.

Since the previous mention of this subject in The Guardsman, additional reason for objection has appeared. It seems that some instructors impose a penalty on students who are late for class. Having them write an essay of several thousand words is one example.

Such a situation should not be tolerated by the students for one minute. Penalties for legitimate infractions of particular rules as set down by instructors is of course understandable. But the penalizing of a student for something he cannot help, is intolerable and reminiscent of grammar school. If anyone should be punished it is the persons who originated the five minute class-interval system.

The requests of the students are not unreasonable but are polite, courteous expressions of disapproval, with the feeling that certainly the administration will realize the mistake made and rectify it.

The feeling that the administration will, as in the past, attempt to right any wrongs unintentionally committed is prevalent among the students today. How long this feeling of confidence will last depends entirely upon maintenance of mutual cooperation between students and administration.

Meet The Students

By EVE BURKEY

FEELING that Meet The Students should at least attempt a serious or at least vital question now and then, today we decided to quizz our subject on the question of the hour. To wit: Roosevelt or Willkie—which?

Unfortunately, the subject firmly declined to commit himself. "I've too many friends who take both sides," he declared, and inasmuch as we never argue with football players, that will have to be that.

Determined on a vital question though, we broached the theme of a recent Guardsman editorial "Are 5 minutes enough time between classes?" That struck the jackpot. Low Frosh president Honnert was emphatic. "NO! That leaves too short a space to get from class to class, especially when you have to walk up the hill from the gym." Encouraged by our sympathetic nods he expressed his fervent opinion that "you can get more exercise walking back up that path than you can get playing football!"

In case we forgot, Jim Honnert is one of the prides of the Ram football team. He is a low frosh from Lowell High where he made the All City team last year.

Eighteen years old and six feet tall, Honnert has brown eyes and brown hair. (No pictures will be furnished upon request.)

Miss Wong would doubtless want to know where he was born. (She's just like a reporter in that way.) "I was born in San Francisco, and the farthest away I've ever been was the time Lowell played a football game in Arizona." Mr. Honnert is probably the only native San Franciscan in the college. Correct us if we're wrong, please.

Honnert plans to go to either Santa Clara or Stanford after he leaves the college. Right now, he's making up credits.

Football practice leaves him no time for outside hobbies, Honnert said, but athletics is his prime passion. However, he does take time out occasionally, for in addition to being elected this semester's low frosh president, he was Student Body treasurer at Lowell.

Today's column was written by Borrie Hyman.

NOTHING BUT PRAISE

do we have for the Theatre Arts Colony's production of William Saroyan's latest scribbling, Something About A Soldier. But for Mr. Saroyan's little thing, well perhaps it's just as well we don't chastise the apparent shining light of the Pulitzer Prize committee.

Willie has nothing really new to say. Through the person of Oscar Penrock, who carries the ostensible mental and physical characteristics of Ireland's own George Bernard Shaw, he attempts to ridicule war into a nonentity. Unfortunately, this thesis on the absurdity of war is trite. Everyone knows what Saroyan takes three acts to say. All that he says is true—war is silly. But show us the man that can ridicule an invading force away from his country's borders, and we'll say that Saroyan is the literary genius of the 20th century. In short, Something About A Soldier is the apparent work of a young man, who, despite a previous philosophy of defeatism of his short stories, is beginning to wax idealistic in a medium that we believe he will succeed in some day.

Yes, the play has bright spots, plenty of them. It's enjoyable even though it doesn't say much. His lines were appreciated by the audience, though his action descended to sheer slapstick at times. Oscar Penrock brought the house down, after a brief pause for cerebral reaction, with, "Yep, you never can tell when—(Mr. Hyman, please!)

young writers, takes a few cracks at classic literary gods. Modernist Walt Whitman even takes the lash. Don't think we'll trouble to defend Walt. His wraith is probably rising now preparatory to heckling Willie in an ectoplasmic, yet robust sort of way. As usual, in remarks like those mentioned, the intelligensia of the audience guffawed profusely to inform their neighbors and the rest of the house that their intellect was more than sufficient to comprehend the abstruse wit cleverly concealed in Mr. Saroyan's immature wisecracks.

AS FOR THE ACTING

it is quite commendable, as we already noted. The parts of Oscar Penrock and Moses Flannagan Penrock were really outstanding. The sets were surprising in their excellence. Incidentally the scenic problem is aided and abetted by a revolving stage that actually works, in a more or less silent manner. While we're on the subject of personnel, we must commend the choice of ushers, at least in one instance. But then, red taffeta is always becoming. (Technical data furnished by the fashion expert in the adjoining column).

LITTLE THEATER

movements in San Francisco have usually been as vicissitudinous as a stock-broker's profits' chart. Their existence in any city is a good token of that city's culture. Pasadena has long been noted for its surpassing amateur theater group. It is to be hoped that either this theater group or some other will some day bring San Francisco to a similar position.

Palace Dance Tonight

By MacKillop

Malone

On The Feminine Side

LAST Friday's game with Placer brought out the feminine students of the college in great numbers and smart clothes, if we may be permitted to jumble our grammar somewhat.

One of the smartest women there was wearing a pale, natural camel's hair coat trimmed with huge opalescent pearl buttons. With her outfit she wore a soft, nutria brown pork pie felt with an almost impossible long green quill. Combined with her trim alligator shoes and bag, her ensemble looked ne plus ultra, but ultra.

Speaking of camel's hair, as everyone seems to be these days, there was another woman at the game who sponsored the warm, soft material for chilly evenings at the stadium. She was smartly dressed in a long torso suit also in the natural shade, but her accessories were in that autumnal favorite, hunter's green.

Tonight's game will probably feature slightly more dressy clothes than did last week's, because of Junior College Night at the Palace afterwards.

Night games followed by dancing dates are always more harrowing problems that tax feminine ingenuity to and often beyond the breaking point. To go to a night football game, at which almost anyone will give you odds on the fog swooping in before the fourth quarter, requires a bit of doing if a woman expects to come out of the stadium looking human. However, women at the college have gotten the process down to a fine art, it seems.

If last year's experience stands women in good stead, there will probably be a predominence of warm fur or woolen coats over dancing dresses at the stadium. Personally, we can think of nothing more completely desirable than one of those tricky new fur muff-purse gadgets for keeping hands from turning purple and for general style possibilities. A neatly tailored black coat in simple but perfect design plus one of those muffs in beaver or leopard equals a practical, fashionable outfit in any man's language, to say nothing of any woman's language.

Jersey, either of the wool or silken variety, strikes us as being really knock-out for dates like tonight's. Wool jersey for light warmth and silk jersey for its heavenly non-bulkiness would be perfect for both the game and the dance afterwards. Because of its total inability to wrinkle or muss easily as some of the heavier crepes do, jersey is going to be one of the top fabrics for more active affairs.

The old school girls favorite, velveteen, is another material that would be ideal for tonight. This years velveteens seem to come in more of the glowing jewel tones formerly relegated to more expensive and more perishable velvets. Those soft blues, greens, and wines are flattering to women of practically any coloring, and besides, think of the wonderful, soft warmth of the fabric. As an afterthought, a two piece velveteen dress in a simple style is really a double-bargain, because of its adaptability to campus and street wear with more informal accessories. A bright plaid skirt and a velveteen jacket are always in high style around the college, for example.

One more suggestion concerning comfort tonight is this general matter of gloves. If we may delve into our own past, we can recall two separate occasions when we ruined our best gloves at Seals Stadium while the teams marched up and down the field. Last week's popcorn plus the result of this year's accumulation of general articles are not conducive to better looking gloves, that's all. Just be careful, unless you don't mind dashing downtown to buy new suedes and doeskins after every game. Which is something else again.

Above all, as we've been trying to put over subtly, dress warmly and practically. School spirit's pretty hard to conjure up when your hands and feet have imaginary icicles forming on them.

Shots At RAMdom . . .

Shots At Ramdom is being written by Hugh McDonald this edition.

OVER the patchwork of American Literature (?) there has loomed in the last decade a literary interpretation of our way of life which is, to understate, revolutionary.

The pattern of expression which Mr. William Saroyan has chosen seems to arise from some mismating of a James Joyce grammarless paragraph and a Skid-Row form sheet. One might term it the "stream of the unconscious." The crypticism and get-to-the-point sentence structure of Saroyanistic belles-lettres has had a tremendous effect on the nation's literary output.

From the classroom to the neophyte writer's atelier every semblence of classic expression has been undermined by the verbless sentence. No more will the proletariat be painted in the fullness of a Gorki's pen! Never again will the peasant be pictured as the noble gleaned of the field! For the farmer has left the farm and stands in a Third-street soup kitchen, rationalizing his misfortunes and omitting his verbs.

True, the public is made aware, acutely so, of a vast army of forgotten men, epitomized for posterity in two-word clauses. One must not condemn Mr. Saroyan for his subjects, for the rough, uncouth figure is perhaps easier to grasp with the pen than the polished protagonists of the higher income.

But, a solid, sturdy BUT, it is a fitting tribute to our native letters that homage was paid to sensationalism rather than true literary accomplishment. In the absence of a Shakespeare, Saroyan is a god. No god, though, has had such an income!

In an optimistic light: from the grapevine of the SATURDAY REVIEW OF LITERATURE comes a startling innuendo: the University of Virginia demands a rejection-slip from some publishing house as a prerequisite for its short-story classes. On such a microcosm of scholastic legislation may well hinge the Renaissance of American Letters.

The density of diary-writers and would-be John Gunthers smothers in numbers alone the sometimes promising writer. How many expressions of the artist in his undergraduate years are ignored, in deference to whinnying coeds with a flair for vocabularly and mascu-

Pleas For Gratitude And Enthusiasm

• A Little Gratitude

Editor, The Guardsman:

San Francisco Junior College at completion will be one of the most modern and well equipped colleges on the Pacific Coast. With almost perfect setting, with colorful landscape and picturesque background it will be given the praise of all architectural critics. San Franciscans should be truly thankful for seeing their sons and daughters given the opportunity of a college education, and at such a modern institution.

However, to hear its loyal students voice their comments one would think it—well, just an ordinary college. In the morning the student must climb up a long tiresome hill through thick mist to reach the building. When he goes to gym for physical ed' he stumbles down a steep path.

"Why aren't there escalators?" they yell.

In the gym the are sadly disappointed to find no ping pong tables to satisfy their sport-like fancies.

"And where is the putting green?" they ask.

Looking around the spacious tract of land they immediately leap to conclusions. "After all, with this much space why should we be satisfied with a mere three buildings? Where's the new tennis courts? Where's the football stadium?"

All these things would be nice, but think of the time and monetary problem involved in getting what we have. Let's show a little gratitude.

• Sense Of Enthusiasm

Editor, The Guardsman:

Although many of the inconsistencies of our college can be blamed to its newness and lack of thorough organization, the lack of enthusiasm at the football game cannot be placed in their catagory. Any high school could show us up and make us look silly. If our yell leaders had a little more pep, maybe the student body would follow suit.

Five students in the rooting section had more pep than the whole of the rest of the student body. One boy had a monkey-faced mask and got more response than the football game. Maybe if we put masks on the yell leaders we would get somewhere.

Our team lost, but only after a hard fight! Even though we did lose, and fairly, we can at least put our support behind the team. If we have no sense of enthusiasm we cannot expect our team to have any.

If we had a better organized rally it would also help. There is quite a lapse of time between 11 a.m. on Thursday and 8 p.m. on Friday.

Editor, The Guardsman:

For every book a San Francisco Junior College student is forced to buy from the monopoly controlled Junior College Student Bookshop he throws away at least a $1.00. That much can safely be termed extortionate. Why do the Junior College officials and the students permit this outrageous monopoly!

Most students here are sacrificing, or their parents are sacrificing, to send them to college. We have no money to pay monopolists.

Changes In Line-Up May Keep Team Out Of Hole

UNLESS some drastic changes are made in our line-up soon (we hear it is now going on), the college football team will find itself in a deep, deep hole in the ground. With the rumor going around that George Meyers, would-be co-captain of the Ram eleven, is ineligible because of a mix-up in shortages of units (rumor still unconfirmed), the forward wall looks as though it will have to go through a new job of renovation. Meyers, at present is carrying so many units that he cannot go out for football and also get good grades. You can't have your hot dog and eat it too, you know.

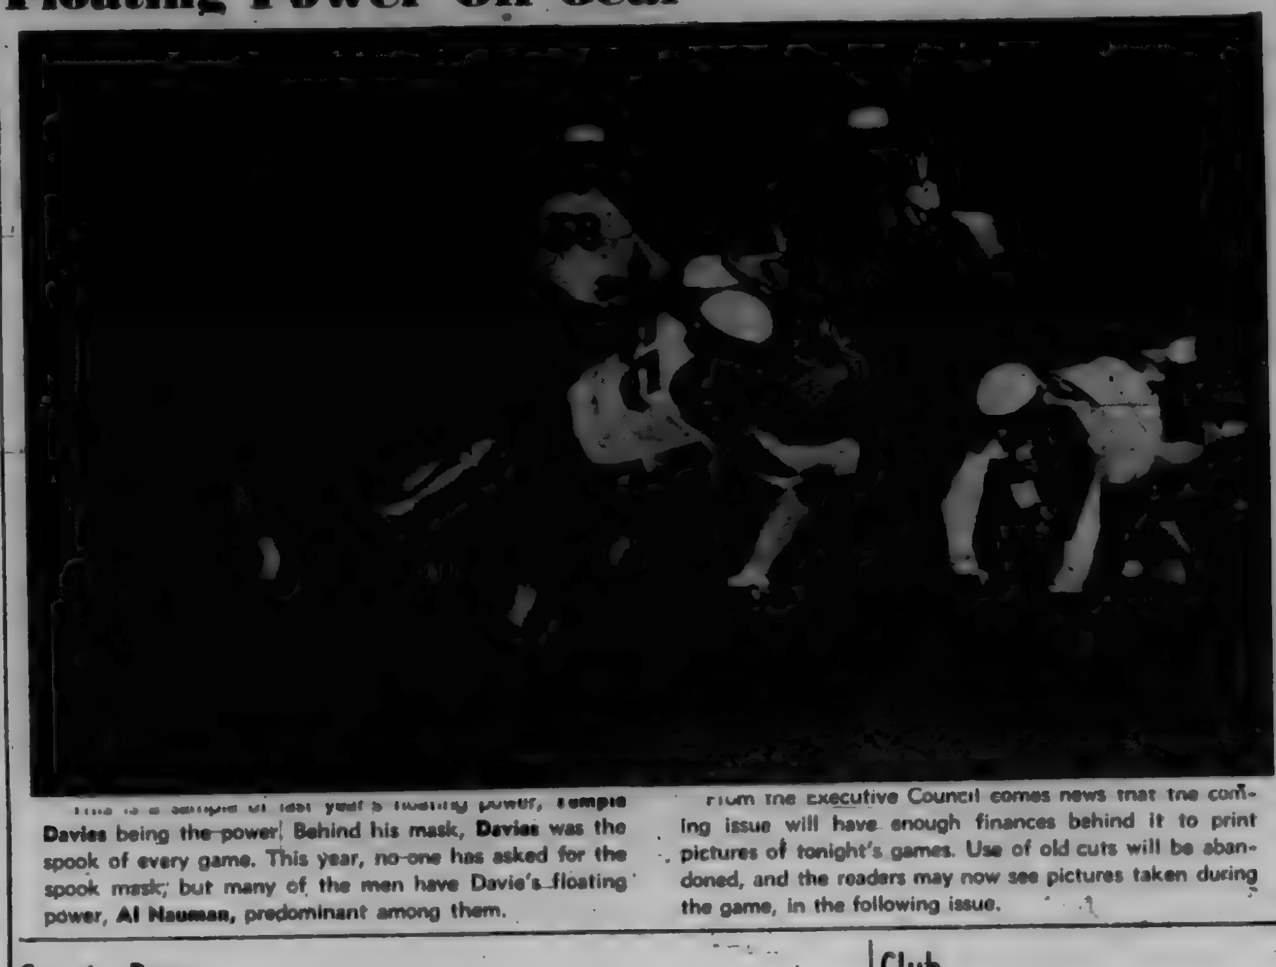
Women! Watch The Line

It is too bad that there aren't many people watching the scrum games going on every day at the athletic field. It is here the regular team is being picked, and one can learn just how good each man is by just watching. And to those women who say they don't understan' football, we suggest they go down to the practice field about once a week and soak in some first hand information about real football. They can learn the plays and watch the line sometimes instead of the ball carrier. After all, it doesn't cost a cent and it is well worth the time.

In Small Packages . . .

Little guys always seem to make great big guys look ridiculous. Last Monday, a little Japanese fellow came out for the first time for team football. Jack Gaddy, line coach, put in this little guy named Nick Nishi, into the second string and let him run some plays. For a while, he didn't get started, but about the fourth play, he called for an off-tackle play, and behind the whole line, little Nicky tore through first stringers Dick Wilson, Bill Windeler, Jim Honnert and even Coach Lee Eisan himself—all the way for a touchdown. He will see plenty of action against the State Goofs tonight, we bet. His southpaw passing certainly had the halves blanked.

Floating Power Off Gear



This is a sample of last year's floating power, Tempie Davies being the power. Behind his mask, Davies was the spook of every game. This year, no-one has asked for the spook mask; but many of the men have Davie's floating power, Al Nauman, predominant among them.

From the Executive Council comes news that the coming issue will have enough finances behind it to print pictures of tonight's games. Use of old cuts will be abandoned, and the readers may now see pictures taken during the game, in the following issue.

Basketball Prospects High As Players Map Practice

Recognizing the biggest turnout in the history of basketball at the college, Coach Tom Wilson is at present anticipating the possibility of upsetting many of his competitors when next hoop ringing season arrives.

Because of the holidays and the painting of the lines on the gymnasium floor, starting practice for the 68 prospects has been delayed. But, on a future date, the hours will be lengthened to enable elimination of excess players.

Working first on the fundamentals of basketball, the course will develop the sport through the offensive and defensive playing down to the modern way of scientific ball handling.

Classified as the varsity, next year's hoopsters will be divided into divisions. The first will represent the varsity, and the second the lightweights, or jayvees. Each team will have its own schedule. When both teams meet the same opponents, the junior varsity will play the preliminaries.

Eligibility for the teams will be determined by natural talent.

Tennis Intramurals Open Soon On College Courts

Swinging into the limelight as the first sport to be played on the campus under competitive conditions, the tennis intramural will start on the college courts as soon as the present sign-up is completed, Tom Wilson, tennis coach announced this week.

Open for both singles and doubles tournaments, the elimination will be worked off by the customary manner of a ladder. A perpetual trophy will be awarded to the winner of each division, who in turn, will have his name engraved on it and have it displayed in the trophy case.

To become eligible for the trophy, Wilson said that a contestant must win two out of three sets in the semifinals, and three out of five in the finals.

Rifle Practice Begins Next Tuesday Afternoon

The initial practice for the rifle club members is Tuesday, October 1, according to Captain Fred C. McFarland, club adviser. Practice will be held every Tuesday and Thursday afternoon thereafter from two until five. Students who are not members of the rifle club or of McFarland's rifle classes are invited to participate in practice, McFarland said.

Instruction Sections In Golf Discontinued

Instruction sections in elementary golf have been discontinued because of a school department ruling, announced Louis G. Conlan, Coordinator of Education.

Lack of facilities was given as the reason for the ruling. The college had expected to acquire nets for the golfers to use, but lack of funds prevented this.

Conlan said that the golf program was one of the better features of the Men's Physical Education program and will probably be renewed next semester.

This change will not affect the college golf team, however, he revealed. A team will be put in the field next semester, since the ruling affects the instruction classes only, he emphasized.

The golf sections will be turned into General Activity sections for the present, Conlan said. This move is the only possibility in sight.

Track Roster Shows Pre-Season Talent

Displaying a roster of experienced material and anticipating a prosperous season, the pre-season candidates for next year's track team are now in full practice.

In reviewing the prospects, Coach Russ Sweet expressed much hope for the cindermen when they are entered in competition next season. He also mentioned the fact that nearly all of the material has had competitive experience either in high school or in college.

Those who found it impossible to sign up in the 3 o'clock class, and who wish to apply for a berth next semester, Sweet advised to try to practice for the tryouts early next spring.

Men's Athletic Council Holds First Meeting

Under the leadership of Mel Chicazola, the Men's Athletic Council held its first meeting of the semester in the men's gymnasium last Tuesday at 2 o'clock.

The meeting had been scheduled for Tuesday, September 17, but through unavoidable circumstances it was postponed a week.

The main topic of discussion was the revision of the present Block System. Plans for a large scale intramural program under the direction of Coach McFarland were also discussed.

Sports Days

WAA Sports Schedule Complete As Medley Set At San Mateo

Formation of the Women's Athletic Association schedule of sports days was accomplished at a meeting of North Bay district colleges held last Friday in the St. Francis Hotel, according to Bertha Mae Keller, WAA adviser.

Date set for the general playday, which constitutes a medley of all activities, is April 26, at San Mateo Junior College.

Marin Junior College will be the scene of the badminton playday which is to be held on October 26.

Next playday, in chronological order, will be tennis, and will be held at San Mateo Junior College.

Scheduled for December 7, is the horse show which will be presented by the college. The basketball playday will also be held here on March 1.

Archery At Santa Rosa

Santa Rosa wil play hostess to the six colleges in the district on March 29, when the archery playday will be held there.

Last playday on the schedule is that of softball which will be held on April 5, at San Francisco State College.

"The above schedule," Miss Keller said, "does not include the playdays to be held by the college in the coeducational sports, such as riding, fencing, archery, badminton, and tennis. The men enrolled in those sports will be invited for a playday on a Friday, set aside for that purpose."

Badminton Playday Near

Women who have signed up for badminton are warned by Miss Keller that the date set for the badminton playday is not far off.

For the basketball playday, which is to be held here on March 1, Miss Keller expressed the hope that both gymnasiums would be available for the intercollegiate guests of the college. This would make possible the use of four basketball courts, she said.

Colleges Well Represented

"Most of the colleges in the district which consists of junior colleges from San Mateo, Salinas, Marin, Santa Rosa, San Francisco State and San Jose State Colleges, and this college, were present at the meeting," Miss Keller said.

Barbara Smith, WAA president also represented the college at the meeting.

In announcing future plans of the college WAA, Miss Smith said that future meetings of the WAA council will be on Mondays at 4:30 p.m.

Also announced was the admission of four new honorary members into the WAA, which was accomplished at the WAA Spread in Sigmund Stern Grove last Wednesday. New honorary members include, Dr. Alice Potter, college physician; Aileen Kinkel, physical education instructor; Joseph Williams, college faculty member, and Captain Fred McFarland, also a college instructor. Honorary members of the WAA now number eight.

Skaters Elect Officers Today

Election of officers for the college ice-skaters will take place this afternoon at Winterland, announced Joseph E. Williams, college ice skating instructor.

The ice skaters' election was slated for last Friday but was postponed until today to give the skaters a better chance to get acquainted with the prospective officers, he said.

Williams expressed pleasure at the turnout of talent that put in an appearance at last week's ice-breaker. The talent includes a few solo figure skaters who are really good, he revealed.

The figure skaters consist of three women, Ingeborg Lubahn, Peggy Egan, and Viola Miles, and two men, William Hart and Ed Bodell, Williams said.

He stressed the fact that these skaters are soloists. As far as collegiate skaters go, that means that they are very good.

The skaters meet every Friday from two to five in the afternoon at Winterland, Post and Steiner streets. The rink is open to all students of the college, as well as those enrolled in the class, he revealed. The admission is 25 cents with skates or 40 cents without.

This semester the skaters will hold an ice carnival sometime in January, Williams said. He hopes to uncover all of the latent talent in the college to make the presentation a success.

Both Teams Seek Revenge In Traditional Classic

Traditional rivals. Gridiron enemies of long standing. Fighting for the honors both teams had had badly battered in their last games, the San Francisco Ram will meet the San Francisco Gator this evening in Roberts Stadium at 8 p.m.

Statistically, the Golden Tide outweighs, outexperiences and towers over the Rams. The line averages 193 pounds, the average height is 5 feet 11½ inches. The Rams barely reach the 175 mark in weight while the height average of the players is one of the lowest in the history of the college.

Many Veterans

State's line is composed of five two-year lettermen. Guido deGhetaldi, George Thayer, Bob Cummings, Bill Stein and Jack Freeman will play the Rams for the third time. The rest are either one-year lettermen or transfers from other colleges. Their backfield has more luminaries than the line. Johnnie Verducci, former college gridder calls the signals, Reno Cordoni is at blocking half while Chad Reade, two-year letterman and State's triple threat is at left half. Jim Lowrie, another two-year man, plunges his 200 pound frame for the Gator.

Line Is Renovated

For the college team, the line-up is having a renovation. With the loss of some of the college's best men, Coach Lee Eisan has made a complete change. At scrimmage earlier in the week, Howard Council had been moved from end to tackle, John Blakemore had been shifted from full to guard and G. Jensen was placed at full. Bill Windeler was at his usual tackle position, Ken Hagen and Bill Ross at ends, Clark Johnson was at running guard and Dick Wilson at center.

Al Nauman called signals, Luke Lowell and Dave Cunningham held the halves while Jim Honnert alternated at quarter and full. Although this present set-up stands during the practice, Coach Eisan may likely make more changes to suit.

Still Slow; Fumbling

The Rams, at scrum, still appeared slow in forming interference and weak on defense. Even against the second and third strings, the varsity allowed chances for touchdowns slip by because of defective blocking or slow forming interference. As yet, the team has not gotten over fumble-itis.

Standouts in the scrimmage was Ken Hagen and Bill Ross, ends, Luke Lowell, back in the line up after a registration probe, and the limping Bill Windeler. Outstanding, however, was the diminutive Nick Nishi, 5 feet 4 inch Nipponese tailback, who twice broke away for a touchdown against the first string, and amazed the players with his fortitude. Although he has had no experience in team football, a possibility of his advancing to the varsity from the Ramblers has been rumored.

A preliminary game between the Ramblers and the Baby Gators will be played from 6 p.m.

The stadium is located on 15th and Valencia Streets. Take cars 9 or 22, or 10 bus.

Soccer

League Opens With Cal Aggies

Opening its league schedule this afternoon, when they meet the Cal Aggies, the Ram soccer aggregation is ready to try to annex its first victory. The tilt is scheduled for 3 o'clock this afternoon on the Crocker Amazon Playground on Geneva Avenue, according to Joe Lantagne, soccer coach.

The Aggie game was originally scheduled for November 30, but was moved up to today by agreement of the two coaches.

Opening Against Tough Foe

"We are opening this afternoon against a tough opponent," Lantagne said. "Though the Aggies are new to the league, I have heard that they have a tough team. They have played soccer for several years, and, according to the coaches at California, were the toughest team they met last year."

Lantagne seemed a little pessimistic when asked about his own team. After four practice games against high school competition, the locals only gained an even break. They have shown improvement, however, he added.

Lantagne Won't Predict Outcome

"Since this is the first time I have ever met the boys on the squad," Lantagne said, "it would be foolish for me to blindly predict victories that I didn't really hope for myself. The boys have shown marked improvement during this last week, and I feel that they will try their hardest to chalk up a Ram victory."

Up to press time no starting lineup had been mentioned by Lantagne. The loss of several key men by ineligibility during the last week has seriously upset his plans.

Tough Sledding Ahead

Playing in the same league with four year colleges, has made it tough on the junior colleges, Lantagne revealed. Once a coach manages to build up a good soccer team, graduation comes along and takes away most of his team. Every four year college has the advantage of keeping experienced men for three years, against two at the most for junior college teams, Lantagne said.

Intramural Entries Due Oct. 2

Those interested in the opening intramural round robin must have their entries in by next Wednesday, October 2, according to Captain Fred McFarland. The following Tuesday, schedules for softball competition and play will begin. Entries will be accepted every day except today by McFarland in the rifle range in Room 30.

Managers of club or independent teams should fill out the application printed below, McFarland said.

Please enter the following team in the softball round robin that is to be conducted as part of the intramural program of sport activity. I have read the intramural program of sports as it appeared in The Guardsman, September 20, with special attention to the rules and regulations, awards, and point system.

Hotel Division

College To Be Represented In Western Hotel Show

The college will have four representatives at the Western Hotel Show, to be held in Los Angeles from October 7 to 10, according to Eugene anquary, one of the four students to attend the meeting, first of its kind to be held in this state.

"There is a possibility that this event may become an annual Eugene Lanquary, one of the four students to attend the meeting, booth in the name of the hotel division of the college.

According to Lanquary the underlying thought is to publicize the college and its Hotel Division.

Hotel men from the entire nation are to convene in Los Angeles to consider pertinent questions, Lanquary added.

Of the four students from this college two will handle a booth while the other two attend meetings of the California State Association of Hotels.

Members of the group from this college will stay at the Commodore Hotel and include John Kay, Bill Lewis, Lloyd Tilton and Eugene Lanquary.

New Chairmen

Publicity Group Reorganized

To increase efficiency in publicizing events within the college, the publicity committee members have been organized into sub-committees according to Hugh Waite, committee chairman.

Hank Suerstedt heads the season schedule committee which will undertake the printing of 100 season schedules of the college football games. These schedules will then be circulated by members of the group and placed in the shop windows of merchants throughout the city. Some of these schedules will also be displayed in the city high schools.

Appointed to head the poster committee are Marian MacKillop and Barbara Brown. With their committee, they will provide the posters which will be displayed in the college halls, publicizing the Ram football games. In the capacity of photographer, Bill Quandt will also assist with the publicity.

Barbara Randall and Jeanne Kelly are in charge of circulating game tickets to city high schools. They will see to it that the students there have full opporunity to purchase tickets to the college games.

Taking over the bulletin board committee, which keeps students posted on school activities, is Aspasia Vasilatos, Waite said.

"You cannot dream yourself into a character, you must forge one."

New Equipment Arrives For Library; More Expected

During the past two weeks the library has acquired two new atlas cases, two dictionary cases, and two bulletin boards. This equipment was late in arriving, but now that it is here it will add greatly to the library facilities, Marcus Skarstedt, librarian, announced recently.

According to Skarstedt, the library proposes to add to its stock of reference books from time to time, suitable atlas and guide books which will be placed in these cases. Twelve copies of Webster's dictionary will be added to the library's collection so that the students will be well supplied with that reference book.

Such encyclopedias as Britannica and Americanica are shelved on the west wall of the library, along with the other reference books, and may be consulted, he added.

urges that students interested in making the trip purchase their tickets as quickly as possible so as to facilitate the fulfillment of the guarantee.

The ferry leaves San Francisco at 3:45 p.m., and those making the trip arrive at the 16th Street Oakland station at 4:15 p.m. Five minutes later the train will make its last stop before reaching Sacramento, at the Berkeley station. The game starts at 8 o'clock and the elapse in time is to enable the students making the trip to eat dinner, where and as they please, said Ferrari.

Trip To Take Two and Half Hours

The train leaves Sacramento at 12 midnight and arrives in Berkeley at 1:30 a.m. It pulls into Oakland five minutes later. Harvey, the Southern Pacific agent, says there may be a slight time variation in schedule, but not over 10 minutes, and that the trip should not take more than two hours and a half, Ferrari disclosed.

Tickets and posters are in preparation and will de delivered today. The committee announced that these have been furnished gratis by the Southern Pacific. Actual Ticket sale begins Monday, September 20, according to tentative plans.

Two More Days To Go!

The Fair

Exposition Closes Sunday; Future To Be Decided Soon

Only two days to go, then finis for the Golden Gate International Exposition.

Contrary to rumor, the Exposition will not be extended another month but will definitely close its doors and turn off the lights Sunday night, September 29.

Fair officials expect the attendance mark for the second year to go well over the six million mark. The attendance record for the first year reached approximately ten and one-half million. The 1939 Fair ran 254 days as compared with the 128 days this year.

Bids are being accepted for demolition of the island buildings and work is expected to begin soon after the closing date. It is estimated that it will take approximately six months to clear the island completely.

At the present time there has been no decision made concerning the disposal of plants, shrubbery, and other articles after the Exposition closes.

Plans for making the island into a San Francisco municipal airport have made no headway, since the city is lacking the necessary funds for such a venture.

Pan American Airways still plans to use part of the island for a seaplane base and airport.

Denman School Faculty To Tour College Buildings

Instructors of Denman Junior High School will tour the campus as guests of the Faculty Association on Tuesday, October 1, from 3:30 to 5:30 p.m., announced Lloyd D. Luckmann, president of the association.

"The Denman faculty will be entertained at a tea following the conducted tour of the building, as were the faculty members of Balboa High School when they were our guests on last Tuesday," declared Luckmann.

"The Balboa High School faculty tour of last Tuesday was pronounced a thorough success by all. We are proud of our new building and we hope to be able to show it to the faculties of the rest of the high schools and junior high schools of the city," he added.

Paint Students Hear Address By Technician

L. A. Thompson, general superintendent of the National Lead Company of San Francisco, spoke before students of the paint technology courses last week.

Thompson, a leader in the bay area painting industry discussed the subject of lead in its relation to paint.

A comparatively new course within the college, the paint course embraces the study of paint formulation, enamels and varnishes, synthetics, lacquers, and color and decoration.

One of the features of the course is to obtain outside speakers from the paint industry.

Jobs With Steamship Company Open To Men

Announcement of opportunities for full time jobs for men of the college was made today by F. Grant Marsh, business department head.

Marsh said the jobs were with a San Francisco steamship company. "There are positions open for three or four men who are about nineteen years old. They must have experience in typing, filing, and general business subjects," Marsh said, adding that any student with the proper qualifications, whether or not he is a business major, should see him this week. The work is to start immediately, he said.

He advised candidates to register with him as soon as possible at his office, Room 222.

Applicants would be paid the prevailing wage scale, Marsh indicated.

Low and High Frosh To Join Dance Plans

Tentative plans for a joint low and high frosh dance have been laid before the social committee for its approval, Jim Honnert, low frosh president, announced today.

The theme of the dance, the acquaintance of the new and old students of the freshman class, has already been approved by the committee, according to Honnert.

Expressing his opinion that, "It will be up to the frosh class as a whole, rather than the sophs, to build up the spirit and traditions of the college," Honnert said the dance should definitely bring the two frosh sections together.

Definite plans for the affair are hazy at the moment, Honnert said, but it will in all probability be given within the next few weeks. Low and high freshman officers are working in conjunction on plans for the affair.

To foster better acquaintance among the frosh, those attending will be tagged, Honnert said, each man and woman sporting a card with his or her name on it.

Because of the flattened condition of the dance fund, he indicated that the dance would necessarily have to be held in one of the gyms.

Completed plans for the affair will probably be released by next week, he said.

Lost Blackboards Wreak Confusion

Into the registrar's office, last Wednesday, rushed an excited carpenter demanding that another mystery of the present semester be solved.

Confronting Mary Jane Learnard, assistant registrar, the excited worker told his story.

"We were getting ready to put up some blackboards in Room 138," he said, "and we had just finished dusting them when all of a sudden somebody walked off with the things!"

Amazed, Miss Learnard rushed the perplexed carpenter into the private office of J. Paul Mohr, registrar.

Following reiteration of the mystery a search party, under the leadership of Miss Learnard, was organized. Out into the halls they went, peering into the student body office, the NYA office and into various classrooms on the first floor. But their efforts were unrewarded. Nowhere could the missing blackboards be found.

And so for the moment both the registrar's office and the carpenters are frustrated. Their only hope is that the guilty party will return the borrowed property.

Number Of Students In Each Class Counted By Registrar

Tabulation of all men and women students enrolled in the low and high freshman and low and high sophomore classes is now being undertaken by the registrar's office, Mary Jane Learnard, assistant registrar announced this week.

Final results of this tabulation will appear in an issue of The Guardsman in the near future, Miss Learnard promised.

"This should prove interesting to most students," she said, "in knowing how their classes rank in enrolled students with the rest of the college."

State Gym Dance After Tonight's Football Game

Scheduled tonight is a dance in the State College gymnasium, sponsored by Sigma Pi Sigma, a State College organization, at an admission price of 35 cents per person.

The music of Larry Cannon and his orchestra will be featured at the affair which will last from 10 p.m. until 1 o'clock, members of Sigma Pi Sigma said.

The state motto for California is "Eureka" meaning "I have found it."

Civilian Pilot Training

Flying Instructions To Start For Aeronautics Division

The Civilian Pilot Training program, embodied in the aeronautics division of the college, under the leadership of Capt. George Richards, will start actual flying instruction next Tuesday, October 1.

Results of the physical examinations taken recently by students registered in aviation classes will be announced shortly, and the first group will begin flight training immediately afterward.

At present, students are being interviewed by representatives of the Civilian Flying School and the Lion Air Service, located at the San Francisco Airport. Hours for flight and theory will be arranged for all students by October 1, said Richards, and on that date the program will be operating on both the ground-school and dual flight training basis.

There is still room in the aviation courses for students who are between the ages of 19 and 26, and who have reached sophomore standing, reiterated Richards, and applicants are being interviewed in Room 257 between the hours of 8 and 10 a.m. throughout the week.

But, now the home of Kay Kyser (or is it?) bids for the Nobel. Thirty billions of American youth will no longer flood the writing courses each Fall. Instead, only those who have had the initiative to put a postage stamp on the least disconcerting of their creations may bid for training.

The future bids fair. If this precedent can take hold in all centers of booglarnin', the budding genii may well flower in the free air of true, competitive, inspirational association.

Lamentably, though, the only immediate result, aside from the ninety-percent decline in English class registrations, was a plethora of English teachers in the Virginia State Unemployment Office.

Special Municipal Tickets Available At Bank Now

Special Municipal Railway car tickets are now on sale at the bank which will be honored by conductors from 5 to 6 p.m., Michael M. Zarchin, faculty treasurer, announced this week.

These tickets will enable students leaving the building at five p.m. to ride on the street-cars for half price instead of the usual full fare, Zarchin said.

There are no Market Street Railway tickets as yet, he added, but plans concerning the sale of these tickets are expected soon.

Conference

Pres. Cloud Is Representative

In answer to the specific invitation of the National Commission on Junior College Terminal Education, President Archibald J. Cloud left San Francisco last night to represent this college at the commission's selective meeting to be held in Chicago this week end.

President Cloud was asked to attend the convention, at which nine other colleges will be represented, because of the work of this college on the "problem of surveying the community to determine needs for semi-professional courses." Specifically mentioned in the letter of invitation was the hotel and restaurant management division here.

Other colleges selected to meet in Chicago are Bakersfield Junior College, Los Angeles City College, Pasadena Junior College, Meridian Junior College, Mississippi; Rochester Athenaeum and Mechanics Institute, Rochester, New York; Scranton-Keystone Junior College, Pennsylvania; Weber Junior College, Utah; and Wright Junior College, Chicago.

Intention of the meeting is to lay the groundwork for work and study by each of the ten institutions on a "selected problem and bring this work to the attention of other institutions."

Each of the colleges named was selected, the letter said, "because it is in a position to show other colleges how a particular problem may be attacked.

All Organizations Must Obtain Purchase Orders

All organizations or clubs supported by budgets must secure purchase orders for any expenditures, Ward M. Nichols, comptroller, pointed out.

These purchase orders may be secured at Nichol's office, Room 188, or from Dean Edwin C. Browne, or from Miss Colton in the Student Body office, Nichols said.

For bills of more than two dollars payment must be made by check, Nichols added. For those less than two dollars, organizations advance the money and get a tag approved by the sponsor which will be reimbursed at the bank upon presentation.

COLLEGE

THE following article is from Associated Collegiate Press. Echoing anew at scores of colleges as the 1940 football season gets under way is the white hot pro and con argument about football: Is the University of Chicago on the right track in sharply deemphasizing the sport, or should football as a big business be given further impetus?

Scores of college editors have spoken out on the subject last term and this. Many are convinced Chicago's President Robert M. Hutchins has courageously struck out against a national evil. Many, but not all.

At the University of Illinois, the Daily Illini expressed the opinion that "When President Hutchins told the world that subsidization of athletics was a prerequisite to gridiron glory, he crawled far out on a limb. The Illinois boys still win football games in the toughest league in the nation, and they seem to do it without the aid of the subsidies which President Hutchins implied they received."

The Purdue Exponent, while "admitting some faults and commercialization in football', declared it has no desire that Purdue ever follow Chicago. "Football contributes a certain something to college life which we would not want thrown into discard."

Likewise it is the opinion of the Washington Red and Black, that collegiate football is of definite benefit to the colleges, to students, and to numerous other interests alike. If, as Dr. Hutchins alleges, football is a major handicap to education, the Red and Black feels that the American system of higher learning needs more such handicaps."

Contrasted with these opinions are those of several college publications that believe steps must be taken to curb commercialization. Massachusetts Institute of Technology's Tech declares "the situation is so flagrantly non-amateur in both spirit and practice that the only logical thing to do is abandon amateur intercollegiate football and declare it frankly as the profesional occupation it is".

The Richmond Collegian poses for its readers the question, "Can we take the spotlight from football and put it on scholarship, where it belongs? Chicago had the courage."

The Rice Thresher agrees that in "subsidization we are defeating the purpose for the existence of football on our campus, a game of recreation for the students."

The Michigan Daily feels that it is just as well that Chicago saw fit to retire."

WE are slightly surprised at the lack of initiative displayed by the class officers of the college.

In past years, class presidents and their assistants were making plans for boat excursions, picnics, hay rides, and skate parties before the semester was two weeks old.

Here we are in the fifth week of classes and thus far not a whisper of a class activity has been heard.

Maybe the class officers ought to get off the dime and start booming the activities of their class.

Class Interval

Ex Council To Hear Report Of Committee

Most important matter to be discussed by the college Executive Council tomorrow is the subject of the five minute interval between classes, Lyle Shultz, Associated Student president, announced today.

A report from the committee appointed last week to see Registrar J. Paul Mohr is expected. The committee, consisting of prominent student leaders discussed with Mohr the reasons for changing to the five minute period and the advisability of returning to the system of past semesters.

Last week the Executive Council went on record as unanimously opposed to the present schedule and in favor of returning to ten minutes between classes.

The controversy, which has been raging since almost the first of the semester has drawn comment from faculty and students alike.

Letters have been written to the Rams Horn, the letters to the editor column, and two editorials on the subject have attempted to present the student side of the issue.

When interviewed, both students and members of the faculty expressed the feeling that five minutes between classes was too short a period.

Thus far, the administration has not made public its reasons for beginning or continuing the present schedule.

The report of the student committee is expected to clarify this matter.

Rally Committee Inactive For Three-Week Period

Because the three coming football games will be played on the opponents' home fields, the rally committee will not conduct any pre-game rallies for the next three weeks announced Pete Adyelotte, head of the rally committee.

The next rally will probably be held just before the game with the USF Frosh, Adylotte disclosed.

"I hope that this action will not decrease student interest in the present campaign," Adylotte said.

Tickets for the train excursion trip to Sacramento are now available for $1.80 at the bank or they may be obtained from any member of the committee. Committee members are: Bernardo Ferrari, Pete Adyelotte, Merrill Steele, Joseph Bryan, William Menary, and Lyle Schultz.

Two hundred reservations must be in by October 16 before the special train will be guaranteed said B. C. Harvey, Southern Pacific agent.

Students making the trip will meet at the ferry building at 3:45 and they shall be in San Francisco by 2:00 o'clock Saturday morning.

Leakage Of Formalin Ravages Specimen Room In Recent Ghastly Experience

By HUGH McDONALD

All of the horrors of chemical warfare descended on the laboratory section of Zoology 21B last Thursday, it was learned from survivors late this afternoon. From the pitiful remnant of one of Instructor Noble's most promising classes, only incoherent details could be gathered; but all converged on a common theme of noxious atmospheres and reptile-strewn fields.

When tanks designed to hold Carcharodon carcharias (or some lesser breed of the man-eating shark) developed leaks in the course of the afternoon's experiments, formalin, more familiar to the layman as an aqueous solution of HCHO, dripped profusely over the specimen room floor.

In a few moments, with its decks awash and its lee rail under, the entire specimen room was cleared of human habitation. It was rumored that the exodus was hastened by dint of an acrid pungency and anti-olfactory quality in the air.

Re-enforcements in the person of Jerry Angstrom, building superintendent, arrived on the scene shortly afterward, and efforts toward stemming of the lethal flood commenced.

In the dim, evil-smelling haze of the specimen room, mute evidence of the grim conflict lay on all sides. A husky male specimen of Rana catesbianna, known techically as the American bullfrog, lay on the dissecting table with his hands (?) clutching his throat and the suffering of his species etched in his dull, staring eyes.

On all sdes the fetid odor of formalin-felled reptiles greeted the rescuers, but failed to prevent repairs. In a few days time the tanks were restored of lumbrici terrestres, pisastored to normalcy and the last traces of lumbrici terrestres, pisastres puttridissimes, and sundry forms of what appeared to be crayfish were relegated to a common burial ground, a large, duraluminum garbage can.

Numerous specimens of Mytibi delices, the garden variety of clam, were used as provender, it was said, and the grim note of the episode was epitomized in a clambake, closed to the public.

Phelan Avenue

Widening Plans Now Abandoned

Plans to widen Phelan Avenue to permit diagonal parking and a two lane roadway have temporarily been abandoned, President Archibald J. Cloud declared today.

According to President Cloud figures have been secured regarding the cost of widening the street, and these figures approximate $60,000. At the present time the necessary funds are not available.

President Cloud said, "There is a heavy cost involved in putting high powered wires and cables under ground, in paving and in purchasing the necessary land.

Utilities Commission Owns Land

"The land belongs to the Public Utilities Commission," he added, "and it was originally intended to use it as a sight for a resevoir. There is a bond issue covering the ground, necessitating an outlay of $10,000 for the mere purchase of the strip required."

Dean Edwin C. Brown declared that several other plans are under consideration.

"We hoped some time ago," Dean Brown revealed, " to use the property at the north end of the main building as a permanent parking area. However the land now belongs to the Park Commission and not to the School Department."

"Parking in this location would provide easy access to all parts of the campus at the present time," the Dean continued, "and would serve equally well in the future when the college has more buildings."

According to Registrar J. Paul Mohr a plan to utilize the ground on the corner of Ocean and Phelan Avenues has been tendered and is being considered.

Temporary Plan For Parking Area

"Until the construction on new buildings is ready to start," the registrar stated," we would be able to level off a portion and pave it for use as a parking area. Naturally the plan would be only temporary and we could not be certain as to the length of time that the space would be available."

Students have pointed out the need at the college for a convenient parking area, and according to members of the faculty connected with the question everything is being done to alleviate the situation.

Frosh Mixer Sanctioned By Social Committee

Having received the social committee's sanction of its proposed frosh mixer dance, the freshman class, under the leadership of low frosh president, Jim Honnert, is starting work immediately on plans for the affair, it was announced this week.

It was revealed that Honnert has been appointed chairman of the affair by the social committee. Honnert said he would begin at once forming his own committee to assist him.

Idea of a frosh mixer was suggested to the committee last week by Honnert, who declared that the class would be better able to build up college tradition and spirit in the future if the freshmen, high and low, were better acquainted.

High frosh President, John Mowbray, when asked his opinion of the mixer, said he had been told nothing about it. However he added that "It is a good idea, and I think the high frosh class would be perfectly agreeable."

The dance will probably be held in one of the gyms, Honnert said.

Hotel Division Places Four Former Students

Hilda Watson, chairman of the Hotel and Restaurant Management Division, has announced the following placements of former college students in private industry:

Tom Caswell, cashier of the Hotel Leamington in Oakland; Allan Floyd, auditor for the Harvey M. Toy Hotel Clunie in Sacramento; Lee Scarlet, assistant manager of the Valley Inn at Buellton, Calif.; Tom Duffey, manager of the student cooperative at Fresno State College in Fresno.

All of these placements are graduates of the Hotel and Restaurant division of the college, Mrs. Watson declared.

Dean Edwin C. Browne:

Current Parking Practices Hazardous; Obey New College Traffic Regulations

DEAN EDWIN C. BROWNE

"As a whole, students and faculty of the college have cooperated in the matter of safe parking on the college property," Dean Edwin C. Browne said last week following an opening drive toward that end.

"I am aware of the difficulties confronting drivers and as anxious as they are to devise some way in which cars can be accommodated safely, yet sufficiently close to the college buildings that when the rains come drivers will not have too far to walk.

"On the other hand," he warned, "cars violating the regulations now in effect will continue to receive the pink ticket decoration on their windshields."

Students and faculty members who drive cars to the college were warned this week by Dean Edwin C. Browne to observe college parking regulations to the letter.

Lack of adequate parking facilities on or near college property has given rise to a hazardous parking situation, he said, and a concerted drive is under way to safeguard and regulate parking of cars here.

Most recent problem that might lead to serious consequences, Dean Browne emphasized, is the hillside parking north and south of the main college building. If brakes fail to hold or the ground is wet, the danger of such parking is increased, and college administrators therefore warned drivers of cars parked there to remove them and park only on level ground hereafter.

Three-Point Rules Listed

Dean Browne outlined three specific rules for parking, effective immediately. They are as follows:

1. There will be no parking allowed at any time on the center driveway in front of the building.

2. There will be no parking allowed on the upper level, directly behind the building.

3. There will no parking allowed on the hillsides to the north and south of the building.

Drivers of cars may park on the level ground north and south of the building, Dean Browne pointed out, but at their own risk. "Such parking would not constitute any danger to other cars or persons, although there is some glass and quantities of large rocks in that territory. Danger is instead," he added, "to the car itself."

Violators Get Tags

Parking violation tickets will be placed on all cars whose drivers disregard the rules, Dean Browne warned, and students and faculty members who fail to observe regulations will be requested to remove their cars.

Plans were under way before the college moved to its permanent location to set aside a parking area. A survey of parking needs was conducted by The Guardsman in the spring semester of 1940 following inquiry into the matter by school authorities.

Budget limitations delayed construction, and it is Dean Browne's aim at present to devise some satisfactory plan for parking as soon as possible.

"In the meantime," he said, "we must take every step to avoid the possibility of serious consequences resulting from thoughtlessness on the part of drivers."

Scholastic Council

Malone to Head New Committee

Activities for a scholastic council to operate for the first time this semester are being planned, according to Mary Frances Malone, chairman of that group.

"Since this is the first semester that the council has been in existence, we are quite without precedent in forming our plans," Miss Malone declared.

At present the committee consists only of Lyle Shultz, Associated Students president, and Miss Malone. Alden Smith, college instructor, is acting as temporary adviser for the group, she said.

"A definite announcement concerning the appointment of other students to the council and its program for the semester is forthcoming," Miss Malone promised.

The Scholastic Council resulted from one of the few constitutional changes voted last semester when former Associated Students' President Al Williams made an abortive attempt to streamline the constitution.

Yearbook Committee Lays Tentative Future Plans

At a meeting last Wednesday the yearbook committee formulated tentative plans for the future Ram journal. Under the direction of Dorothy Trood, the group appointed several students to the editorial staff of the publication.

Robert Nossen is to act as managing editor of the yearbook, and Muriel Grenelle will serve as art editor. Appointed to the position of publicity representative was Lillian Hoyle. Serving in the capacity of staff photographer will be Ken Pasqualetti, according to Miss Trood.

Francis J. Colligan, English instructor, is the adviser of the group and will counsel the editorial staff, while Richard M. Allman, art instructor, will act as art adviser. Students with art ability are greatly needed and there are also some vacancies on the yearbook editorial staff o be filled. Those interested are urged to attend the meeting today at 3 o'clock in Room 250.

Meanwhile, entries for the contest to name the yearbook are still coming in, and the date for the last entry has been extended for a few days. This extension enables those who have not yet attempted to conjure up a title to try their skill. A prize will be awarded for the best name.

Debate Class Prepares For Semester's Schedule

College debaters are preparing for their forthcoming schedule this semester, Lloyd D. Luckmann, debating coach, announced.

Slated as opponents are University of San Francisco, San Francisco State College, and Salinas, Modesto, and Sacramento Junior Colleges. Only debate subjects as yet announced are national preparation and war, Luckmann said.

Though it is not definitely known, it is expected that "short of war" tactics, isolationism, debatable defense measures, new foreign crises, and other important current topics would be meat for polemics.

Luckmann declared that all members of the debating class will participate in group discussion. The membership of the class is entirely new, but the students have all had former experience in speaking, he added.

Reilly To Address Newman Club Members October 7

A member of the State Board of Equalization, George R. Reilly, has been invited as a speaker and guest of the Newman Club, Monday evening, October 7, at 8 p.m. in St. Mary's Cathedral, Thomas O'Neill, faculty adviser, announced.

Discussing the duties and responsibilities of the State Board of Equalization, Reilly promised gladly to answer any questions within the scope of his subject, O'Neill said.

"All students of the college are invited and in particular political science students for this speaker should prove both interesting and enlightening," O'Neill commented.

O'Neill also noted that refreshments would be served for this meeting.

Assemblies

Advisory Group Appointed

To work in conjunction with the student rally committee, a four-man faculty group, composed of Chairman Alden W. Smith, Marie Weller, Claude Shull and Louis G. Conlan, was organized at the request of President Archibald J. Cloud.

Though no definite official action has been taken, according to Smith, the faculty committee is expected to act in an advisory capacity to the student rally committee.

Prominent Speakers Proposed

Smith also disclosed tentative plans for the introduction of outside speakers of unusual interest to the student body at assemblies. That assembles at regular intervals, possibly once a week during the noon hour, for all students and faculty members, might be held in one of the open courts was remarked upon by Smith.

The powers of the student committee will not be infringed upon by the faculty group. It will enforce the general policies for rallies as drawn up last semester by the rally committee and will clearly define the purpose of each student gathering.

Greater Efficiency Expected

Rallies will be given a more or less official status, according to Smith, and more efficient schedules and rallies themselves are expected to evolve from the new administrative move, though Smith emphasized that the committee and its plans could not be construed as official until President Cloud stamps his approval upon the group.

For purpose of simplification and efficiency, all meetings have been divided into three classes: 1. Business meetings of the Associated Students. 2. General college assemblies. 3. Athletic rallies.

Valuable Book Collection Received By Library

A complete set of twenty bound volumes of Messages and Papers of the Presidents was received as a gift, recently, by the college library, Dr. Marcus Skarstedt, college librarian revealed.

Numerous other books have also been received from friends of the college who are interested in helping to further the library's collection of valuable volumes, according to him.

"In a number of communities of the United States there are organizations established, called Friends of the Library. The aim of these groups is to secure valuable and needed gifts for libraries," Dr. Skarstedt said.

Many books of real value to the college cannot be had unless they are received as gifts, he disclosed.

NYA Applications In 148; Time Slips Due October 6

That NYA time slips are due no later than October 6 in Room 148 was revealed by Edward H. Redford, college NYA director, last week.

"I should like to inform students who desire NYA work to apply either to Claude T. Silva or to me in Room 148 as soon as possible," Redford said.

Until funds are exhausted an attempt will be made to care for all NYA applications, he declared.

No word has been received from NYA head officers regarding the request of the college for additional funds, Redford announced, but he added that he believed that the college might receive an extra allotment because of its increased enrollment this semester.

Students were warned that regulations regarding the time slips must be followed to the letter. Supervisors were also requested to follow instructions carefully.

Frosh President

Mowbray Objects To Control Of Social Affairs

Charging that the Associated Students' office exercises too stringent a control over class activities, High Frosh President John Mowbray revealed his difficulties with that body in planning the October 11 high frosh dance.

Mowbray in approaching the committee with plans for the dance was struck, it appears, by the fact that "the idea of a class officer proposing to plan a dance was astounding to the social committee."

Until now at the college the precedent has been for the social committee to superintend the events held by the classes," he said. This custom is at wide variance with that of other colleges the former S. F. State student, who was low frosh president there, pointed out.

"Over there the class officers run class affairs with no interference."

Mowbray said he believed that in the future the class officers of the college should have a louder voice and share more prominently in class events.

Asked if the dance would be held inside the college, Mowbray said, "I hope we are going to be allowed to put on the kind of dance we want. If I have any say at all it won't be held inside. We would like to have it at the California Country Club."

The question of locale, however, will have to be settled by the state of health of the Associated Students fund, he reminded.

Apparently still wary of the social committee, Mowbray added, "All I can say is that a semiformal dance, sponsored by the high freshman class will be held October 11."

Rifle And Pistol Club Plans Hayride October 4

Opening event of the Rifle and Pistol Club's social season will be a combination hayride, bonfire, barbeque, and barn dance, October 4 announced Marion Schrick, vice president of the group.

Beginning with a hay ride followed by a five-hour bonfire and barbeque. This will be followed by a barn dance which will last until after midnight, Miss Schrick said.

Music for the dancing will be furnished by Ken Pasqualetti and his boys.

The site of this barn dance will be the Happy Hollow Ranch near Pedro Point and just south of Sharps Park.

For those who wish to go down in a body there will be cars waiting in front of the school at 7:15 p.m. The cars will leave at 7:45 so please be there on time Miss Schrick urges.

The cost per couple will be $1.00. For reservations see Josephine Bowler, Philip De Groot, Myron Pierce, and Miss Schrick. Reservations must be made in advance.

For those who are going to go down alone Miss Schrick has given these directions. Drive down State Highway No. 1, at Pedro Point turn left and follow the white line. Watch for posters and guides from then on.

Those having cars and who would have room for others going to the hayride should get in touch wth some officer of the rifle club as soon as possible, Miss Schrick said.

WSS Book Exchange Closes Tomorrow Afternoon

That the Women's Service book exchange will be definitely closed after tomorrow afternoon was announced by Mildred Bartosiewski, WSS president.

"Tomorrow will be positively the last day on which students may receive either money or texts from the exchange," Miss Bartosiewski said.

It was previously announced that the exchange would close on an earlier date, but because of student requests, the time was extended, she explained.

Miss Bartosiewski commented on the fine student cooperation her society received in the operation of the book exchange.

The WSS is now concerned, Miss Bartosiewski added, primarily with its service on the day on which the college building is to be formally dedicated.

Student Body Card Offenders Still Active

DESPITE repeated warnings from the administration and Associated Student officers, some of the more foolhardy members of the student body are still lending their student cards to persons not attending the college.

In addition to cards being confiscated at the recent dance, several were also picked up at the football games.

The persons who insist upon acting in this manner cannot seem to get it through their heads that by so doing they are seriously crippling any future good times they may wish to have at the expense of the college.

If a student lends his card to an outsider and has his card confiscated, he is automatically deprived of the right to attend future dances, athletic games, and cannot vote at student elections.

Some students have resented this ruling concerning Associated Student cards. Perhaps they do not fully understand the underlying reasons for such a regulation.

Those persons who have attended college functions, especially dances, must have noticed the crowds of students these affairs attract.

If persons not attending the college who naturally have not contributed to the support of the Associated Students by buying a student card, are admitted to our functions it makes the affairs just so much more crowded.

This in turn deprives students who hold cards and have a right to enjoy college functions from fully receiving such privileges.

Our dance floors are well crowded as it is, but if outsiders are allowed to attend, the situation becomes intolerable and it is practically impossible to have room to breathe, let alone dance.

This student card ruling isn't just an attempt to show authority or hamper the freedom of the students. It is rather the only method by which the interests of members of the Associated Students can be safeguarded.

U.C. Honor Society Aids Students For Future

SUBSTANTIAL proof that University of California honor students know how to avoid studying themselves into a rut exists in the form of a really commendable organization, the Honor Students Association.

Brushing aside the old contentions that good grades and extra-curricular activities simply do not mix, the Honor Students Association, back in 1929, with the help of Phi Beta Kappa, was inaugurated by undergraduates who believed that scholarship should mean more than the possession of a gold key or membership in an organization that just "existed." Too often had honor students left college finding that they had neglected to make the friendships that count for a more full life or that their personalities were cramped by a self-inflicted narrow social life.

The present program which the honor association has adhered to for some 15 years could well be applied to any college or junior college, this one being no exception.

Regular, strictly informal, meetings are held either in some portion of the university or at a student's or instructor's home. There, upon a multitude of subjects, is found a stimulating cross-fire of ideas, beneficial to students and faculty members alike. The closer union brought about by these conferences between student and instructor is patently valuable.

Under the heading of "service activities" is the Student Advisory Bureau. Instead of merely trying to cram the applicant for scholastic aid, with information on his specific course, the bureau endeavors to assist him in a workable plan for study and to orient him generally in the rather complicated business of education. Then too, obtaining aid from someone with the student's outlook is very often quite profitable. Incidentally the bureau has no trouble securing volunteers for its work.

This group also renders considerable assistance to entertaining freshmen and to junior college transfers.

On the social side, activities of the honor students run the gamut from dances and theater parties to ski meets and ping pong tournaments.

These students are anything but typical of the often caricatured bespectacled and book-laden scholar. They are succeeding in the purpose for which their university was created and, at the same time, in their full extra-curricular activities, are developing the qualities that must be thoroughly mixed with theoretical knowledge if they are to find a desirable place in the sun.

Meet The Students

By DOROTHY PIERCE

FROM now on no questions will be asked! That was the motto under which this interview labored and is now presented to you, dear readers (if there are such things).

Who ever said women never stop talking? Here is one person who staunchly disagrees. You will too after you read this interview.

The interviewee this time was Lorraine Von Krakau, brown-eyed brunette. "Just tell me something about yourself, Miss Von Krakau," suggested this mouse-like reporter. (No harm meant to any rat). Five minutes passed.

No questions—no answers! No answers—no column! No column—!!! (censored).

Such thoughts began fleeting across this interviewer's brain (no comments).

I say there, are you still here?—Don't answer that, Lorraine. I promise no questions.

Finally a little conversational breeze began to blow. "I'm a business major, hoping some day to become a civil service secretary," said Lorraine interrupting the ticking of a noisy Ingersoll watch.

"How exciting. Tell me more," egged on this scoundrel.

"Well," ventured Miss Von Krakau—One minute (la de da de da). Two minutes. "Well," Lorraine began again, "you might be interested in my idea of an ideal man. He'd be tall, about six feet two inches (start stretching, men), have blue eyes, and black curley hair. (No permanents, please)."

"Oh, yes, he must also have broad shoulders." (All right, men, take off those padded-jackets (?) and let's see what you look like.)

Hesitantly "More facts, Miss Von Krakau."

Just a noisy heart and asthma disturbed a beautiful silence.

Deciding to end this chummy little chat, we bid "adieu."

In summarizing the facts obtained, the sentence reads "———." Miss Von Krakau hates nothing or no one in particular. Nor to the other extreme has she any great love for anything—or any man.

From now on questions WILL DEFINITELY be asked. So get ready for some answers, men. You're next!

WENDELL WILLKIE

America's man of the people who slurs "Hyar fellas," to the Oakies and declares "Gentlemen, are you with me in the struggle to save our bank accounts?" to his Wall Street side-kicks, has apparently found what every politician—oh, excuse us, Mr. Willkie is a business man who is learning only now how to kiss babies—would give one dozen of his best campaign cigars to find. What is Mr. Willkie's philter? He knows where to feel the hectic pulse of us, the people.

SHALL WE LET

Mr. Willkie tell it, though? We quote from Liberty Magazine: "I'm a great reader of the want ads. I always read the local newspapers in whatever town I happen to be . . . There is no better index to a community." He goes on to say that in his classified conning he gleans invaluable information on who's swapping what, how many salesmen the "You Watch, We Demonstrate Vacuum Company" is trying to hook, etc.

Now, we were impressed by Mr. W's apocalyptic statements; we thought that we too would put the finger on a community's pulse.

After perusing the classified advertisements we have arrived at enough conclusions for a Ph. D. thesis.

AN AMAZING NUMBER of male San Franciscans, we learn, are boasting in 6 point type that they are not responsible for their wives, their debts, we mean.

We learn that this citys oases are still apparently too far and few between, because Mom is opening up a Shanty in the next few days. (And we didn't receive any checks for a short—censored).

San Franciscans need never be lonely according to the want ads. The "You Mail Us, We Mate You Marriage Bureau" has the situations well in hand. (The real name of the aforementioned organization is omitted for entirely irrelevant reasons). Incidentally, the draft should be zooming its business.

Business opportunities abound. The Far Eastern tussle has lifted the already profitable junk business up by its second-handed boot straps, especially with this city removing car tracks right and slightly to the left. College students with a horse and wagon, take heed.

San Francisco offers enlightenment to its populace, for we observed an invitation to a free lecture on the cause of the depression. Unfortunately, we don't approve of this little act. Briefly, it's demoralizing. People don't like to have the mistakes of the people they elected thrown in their faces. It makes the common man feel like a sucker.

Feminine plumpness should be on the down grade if the "We Shake You Down to a Colbert Silhouette if you can be Shook" weight control company has anything to say about it.

IF MR. WILLKIE

applied his formula to San Francisco's want ad sections, how mangled must have been his emotions when he cried "I want your votes" to a people he must have known to be maritally irresponsible, inordinately thirsty, not very lonely; to a city which scorns embargoes, demoralizes its people, and finally, a city whose feminine corpulence has necessitated the establishment of a company, whose guarantees are niggardly qualified.

But by gleaning information from San Francisco's want ads, Mr. Willkie knew the sort of people to whom he was speaking. He knew more about the city than if he went to the Chamber of Commerce, according to his statement in Liberty Magazine. (No, McFadden didn't give us a free scholarship in his physical culture school).

Thus it is that we must pay homage to Wendell Willkie, the parvenue politician, who first learned how to feel the pulse of a nation's communities. Long mey he read the want ads.

Quotable Quotes

Two Dartmouth College kitchen workers recently did what man has been trying to do since the inception of the pay telephone—fool a slot machine—when they jarred the mechanism of the dining hall nickelodeon while moving it. The machine started to play of its own accord and reeled off 150 selections without benefit of nickels. A distributing firm in Fairlee, Vt. was called to repair it. Meanwhile an ironic note was attached to the machine: Out of Order."

On The Feminine Side

THE final blow to our vanity came last Wednesday when a woman dashed up to us the other day, looked us up and down but thoroughly, and then, with an expression of extreme disgust, snorted, "Well where are all the fashions you're always writing about???"

So, at this time, we want to announce for the first and absolutely the last time that we write only about the clothes that other people wear and not our own wardrobe, darn it!

Some of the smartest jewelry seen around the campus lately has been Hawaiian or tropical in theme. Aspasia Vasilatos is sporting a two lei necklace of red and brown wood which came all the way from Honolulu, or so "Spakie" claims. We saw a well dressed freshman wearing a brown and white window pane checked skirt with a neatly tailored long sleeved white silk shirt. Her only jewelry was a lush necklace fashioned of Hawaiian flowers in a plastic material, really exotic.

Sweaters and skirts have certainly come into their own this semester. Plaid skirt in the red, brown, and navy predominating tartans can be worn with vivid sweaters and long sleeved flannel shirts on cooler days, and they're especially good wth sharkskin and cotton shirts on warmer days. The matching monotone flannel or tweed skirt-and-sweater combination is always in excellent taste for college wear, and those matching bows and ankle socks add an extra bit of spice to the outfit.

Because of the locker situation and the dread of beng caught out at Balboa Park on a hot day with a heavy woolen coat, women are adopting the suit or skirt plus jacket style. June Holmes' beautifully cut brown and white herringbone jacket which she wears with a sharply pleated brown and white sweater is an example of impeccable, quiet taste. Loretta Egan's vivid red plaid suit which she also wears with a white sweater or shirt is also smart, to say nothing of practical. Incidentally, both of these women are devotees of the sweater and pearl fad, one which seems to have become a college traditon, along with saddle shoes, pushed up sleeves, and camel's hair coats.

Sweaters have reached an all-high in our opinion for color and originality. We remember the days when one wore ether a cardigan or slip-on sweater and that was all there was to it. Now, there is a chance for individual's to express their own conception of style in their sweaters.

Those short-sleeved cardigans with two or three contrasting initials blazoned upon them are reaching favor wth fashion-conscious women, as are also plain cardigans or slip-ons worn with monogramed shirts. We saw one really luscious baby blue angora short-sleeved cardigan worn wth a pastel pink skirt the other day; it was so soft and fuzzy that hay-fever victims sneezed as the woman passed by and jealous women turned green.

Speaking of colors, black is assuming a new prominence in campus clothes. Although most women reserve black for their date dresses and formals, it is really amazingly smart in a well made flannel skirt when coupled with a soft black sweater and some vivid color accent, such as red or bright green.

The Spectator

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer press reports claimed that Strike Up The Band would exceed Babes In Arms in entertainment values. This was quite an ambitious statement for Babes In Arms was a brilliant musical that received the acclamations of the critics and the more encouraging support of the nation's box-offices during its engagements last fall. It's our pleasant duty to report that Metro has not exaggerated in the slightest in her publicity blurbs. Strike Up The Band is a much better musical than the former Mickey Rooney-Judy Garland co-starrer. In fact, Strike Up The Band is one of the most enjoyable films witnessed in the past few years which certainly is a broad statement.

Strike Up The Band attains its high rating even in the face of a number of faults, notably the obvious similiarity in plot to Babes In Arms. In the latter film, you'll recall Rooney headed a group of youngsters, children of vaudeville troupers. Though faced with many obstacles, the group finally put on a musical show and gained recognition. Judy was the silent, adoring girl-friend, always standing by to aid Rooney in his moments of woe. June Preisser was the cute, tricky little blonde 'menace' who presented Rooney with a severe case of jitters.

The same plot has been utilized again with a few twists to bring some measure of freshness. Here, Rooney is the leader of Riverwood High School's dance band, anxious to find his place in the musical world. Learning that Paul Whiteman is featuring a contest for high school dance bands, Rooney attempts to collect enough money to reach Chicago in order to compete. The group presents a musical show, takes in enough cash for transportation purposes, and by devious and sundry methods, finally reaches Chicago and success. Again Miss Garland is the silent, adoring girl-friend and Miss Preisser the flirtatious, blonde vamp. Need we say more.

Despite this identical story trouble, the picture strangely rates the highest praise. Perhaps it's the grand musical score that gives it that extra "lift or the bright, scintillating performances of the two stars. Mickey and Judy have never been better, and Rooney abandons on the whole his tiresome mugging to present a grand characterization. The film has zip, verve, pep and speed that rolls along at a swift pace. Busby Berkeley, who served his apprenticeship at Warner Bros. in the filming of lavish musicals, here demonstrates his sure hand by keeping things moving with never a dull moment.

Songs are plentiful and all excellent. Judy Garland puts over I Ain't Got Nobody with a magnificent presentation. This young lady improves with each picture and if her upward climb is not halted she should soon be at the top of the Hollywood ladder. Another song, Our Love Affair should hit the musical Hall of Fame. There's a tingling Conga, a swingy arrangement "Drummer Boy" and for an exciting climax, George Gershwin's great Strike Up The Band. And there's a grand burlesque of all the old-time melodramas rolled into one that should rock you with laughter. Its a hilarious traversty that alone is worth the price of admission.

For a real tonic in these gloomy times, sip some of Strike Up The Band. It's a certain joy reviver.

College Spirit, Game Attendance Not Synonymous

Forum States Case

Editor, The Guardsman:

When the Forum Club announced that it would hold its meeting on the same night at the college football game, you found it necessary to advise us in your editorial to change the date. One of the members sent you a letter explaining the reason for holding the meeting on Friday. You answered in your Tuesday column, deploring the school spirit among members. Your argument is that football being of greater interest to the majority of students "Dear Forum" should have gone to the football game instead of doing what they liked to do.

No one of course will contest that football occupies a greater place in the college. But all those members of the Forum who were more interested in football than in the activities of the club were welcome to go to the game. We do not force our members to do what they don't like. And as many of us work on Saturday, and have to do some work on our assignments on Sunday we chose not to postpone the meeting any more.

An almost similar explanation was given to you a week ago. You were not satisfied then, and on more mature thinking it seems that hardly any explanation of the kind was necessary.

Your point of view—you have expressed it in every column recently—is that college spirit and the attendance at a football game is one and the same thing. For many of us, school spirit is something more than mere exercise of the vocal cords. For you the word football and "college athletic endeavors" are apparently synonymous. We think that football is only a part of college athletics. It is not a better physical activity than tennis; it is not more this country's sport than

Sports Editor "Demoted," Turns Postman

AN open letter from the sports Ed—to " . . . the Feminine Side."

Dear Miss Malone:

Knee length sox and corduroy jumpers to match . . . those may be very nice, but don't you think the fashions—and we do mean Fashions—are seen at the places where a person has chance to dress. 'Twould help, we thinks, to go to the football games even if it is for the sole purpose of looking at what the other women are wearing. By the way, Hank Suerstedt had the cutest tweed jacket at the last game!!!

(Editor Demoted)

We usually do not run a post office, but letters have been harping in and out of the sports section—for instance, comes one from Barbara Smith, WAA Biggie: (Quote) We have heard that the Women's Phys. Ed. instructor A. K. is your favorite women gym instructor period New paragraph, We overheard that you're her favorite reporter period Watizzis? signed B. S. Oh, Miss Kinkel!!! (Demoted to a reporter by you is a pleasure!)

How News Is Made

According to reports from the middle of the road, the "Sannerich Spread" was considered a hyooge success, no end. Sunny was the day, sunnier was the people's disposition. Skits and skirts mingled like sauerkraut and frankfurters, which there were plenty of. We hear—only hear, mind you—that that certain gym instructor had four—yes, four hot dogs, plus the potato salad, two cups of coffee and dessert. In a 5 ft. 4 in. frame, not bad, not bad.

Intramural Crier

Hear ye, hear ye, hyar y'all. Comes the intramural, things gonna be different 'round hyar 'bouts. 'Thin these walls will be the deadly rivalry, so deadly in fact, that the Stanford axe "thing" of which President A. J. Cloud knows the whole story, will look like a maypole dance in November. 'Tis a good thing President Cloud is in Chicago.

Elimination Of Golf Instruction Leads To Change In Programs; Golf Team Competition Not Affected

Far reaching effects have been brought about by the recent school department ruling eliminating golf instruction this semester, announced Louis G. Conlan, coordinator of education.

Students who have signed up for golf will be enrolled in general activities sections, Conlan revealed. This will be done to eliminate the necessity of forcing students to change their programs.

"The reason for the ruling was the lack of funds to purchase equipment that the college needed for the instruction," Conlan said. Among this equipment was to have been nets and other items for practice. The college had also hoped to get a putting green.

This move, however, will not affect the college golf team, the coordinator announced. The locals will put a team into league competition next semester.

Conlan also noted that there will probably be golf instruction next semester. "The golf program is one of the better features of the general physical education program and we wish to continue with it if possible," he said.

At the present there is no chance of the course being renewed this semester, but the funds will be available by next semester, unless some unforeseen thing happens, and the course will be included in the physical education program for the spring semester, Conlan said.

Basketball Team Will Be Doubled Barreled Barrage

Making literally a double barreled barrage of casabamen, the varsity basketball team to represent San Francisco Junior College next season will be divided into two groups, Coach Tom Wilson revealed.

The first set of prospective hoopsters will be composed of men, who, by their superior playing ability and outstanding talent, have proved themselves capable of guarding the red and white goal from the even numbers next semester.

Rest Classed As '45's

Classed as '45's, or as jayvees, the rest of the candidates for the hardwood floor game will be considered as a junior varsity. The first string will be equivalent to the second or third string on the big Ram machine or any other college five, Wilson said.

Recognized as two different teams, the men from either quintet may be promoted or demoted as their playing on the courts or at practice warrants.

Schedules To Be Separate

Each team will have its own separate schedule, although many of the games will coincide. In this case, it was pointed out, when the Ramlets meet the same team on the same night as their big brothers, the former will play a preliminary game to the main contest.

Because of the work that has been going on in the gymnasium, the cagers have not been given an opportunity to demonstrate their respective abilities to mentor Wilson. This condition prevents the prediction of any accurate report on next year's prospects.

McFarland Wants Managers For Intramural Teams

Captain Fred McFarland, director of the intramural program, issued a call for managers of the program. Those interested should report to Russ Sweet for golf and cross country, to Tom Wilson for tennis and basketball, to John Hurley for swimming and to McFarland for horseshoes, softball and volleyball.

Instructors will recommend the most efficient applicants for the position of assistant managers and the best of these will be appointed head manager and receive a major block award. The first assistant will receive a circle block award. Those interested should apply immediately as the program begins next week, McFarland said.

Two Hundred Fifty Jam West Slope For AMS Rally

Eight P.M., Thursday, September 26, tradition begins. The result of an all night vigil by the hardier students of the college is rewarded by students 250 strong who flocked the west slope of the grounds above the gymnasiums for the AMS bonfire.

A charred mass of charcoal grimly stands, mute evidence of a tradition begun, to remain as long as there is a college bearing the title of San Francisco Junior College.

Festivities began exactly on the stroke of 8. A rousing cheer arose concurrently with thbhetlxae vbgl concurrently with the blaze licking the sky, illuminating the whole field, a blaze that at its height reached into the heavens some 50 feet from the bottom of the 14 feet square of boxes, crates and railroad ties, neatly piled some 20 feet high.

The voice of Ted Theodus boomed across the announcing system and the bonfire was under way. First a few yells by Pete Aydellote and his assistants, then introductions to the members of the faculty and administration were completed. Dean of Men Edwin C. Brown's address to the new students brought laughs and praise for the new institution that 3000 students proudly call their own.

Newly appointed to the position of Coordinator of Education, Louis G. Conlan, assistant to President A. J. Cloud addressed the students—invited them to call him "Dutch", a name dubbed him back in his college days. Thomas Wilson was just plain "Tom", Leland Eisan just "Lee", John Gaddy just "Jack" and Doctor Franklin P. Sewell just plain ol' "Doc" for the evening.

"The first address shall be the last, and the last first" quoted Dean Brown in his address. "So will it be, for when the old San Francisco Norman School, the first institution of San Francisco, now wearing long pants and hiding under the monicker of S. F. State, meets the new and latest institution of this city, the San Francisco Junior College stepping out of longer and bigger pants to lick the pants off State, how that adage will yell out the truth!"

Rising to the point of frenzy as the first railroad tie caved into the center of the piling, the affair was kept at a steady and rapid pace by various and sundry quips and quacks by "Doc" Sewell with his Sewell System and Jimmie Honnert, fullback of the squad, and by "Milt" Polissar, chemistry instructor of the college.

As the ties caved in, and voices of the mob became hoarse with yelling, came the Hotel and Restaurant division to the rescue with ice cream and sinkers. Through the public address system came the College Fight Song, and the 250 voices soon swung in.

A few moments for digestion, then the climax of the evening. Led by the whole varsity Ram Squad, the howling mob joined in a serpentine around the fire like a flock of Indians on the warpath. Gathered around the embers, the traditional fight song rung the air. Two hundred-fifty voices, clear and strong, echoing down the sleeping Ingleside district, told a million San Franciscans the Rams were out to fight State—State, a four year institution—down to the last ounce of man-power a college has reserved.

Thus the tradition began—and terminated for the Fall of 1940.

Women's Athletics

Association Introduces Sports Programs For Friday Afternoons

Introduced at Monday's Women's Athletic Association Council meeting by Barbara Smith, WAA president, was a tentative program of college WAA sports days for Friday afternoons of the months of October and November.

If plans are not changed, on October 11 from the hours of 2 to 4 p.m., there will be badminton club practice in the women's gymnasium, under the direction of Bertha Mae Keller, organization adviser.

October 18, from the hours of 3:30 to 5 p.m., will be the time set aside for a sports medley in which Galileo High School students and members of the various WAA sports clubs will participate.

"It is not yet certain," Miss Keller said, "what students of Galileo will be invited to the playday. We think however, that the upper division students will be asked to come because they were the ones who had to give up their intramural sports because students of this college occupied their gymnasiums in the afternoons."

By way of showing gratitude for the five years that Galileo has endured students of the college, a special afternoon of sports has been set aside for the students of that high school, she said.

Friday Dates

On October 25, from 2 until 4 p.m. another practice for members of the WAA badminton club will be held. The date of November 1, has been held open and arrangements for a playday of some sort will be made in the future. Men and women of the college will hold a ping-pong tourney on November 8, from 2 until 4 p.m. Coeducational dancing under the direction of Laurine Bergin, physical education instructor, for WAA members and their guests will be held on November 15. Faculty members and WAA badminton club members will engage in a badminton contest on November 29.

New Managers

New club managers present at the council meeting, were informed of their various duties and responsibilities by Miss Smith.

Those newly elected for the office of club manager include, Anita Fridley, archery; Versa Cullen, badminton; Eleanor Haliber, dancing, Wanda Simpson, fencing; Jane Visalli, hockey; Eleanor Leitner, riding; Betty Teter, rifle; Jane McKinnon, swimming; Marie Richardson, ice skating, and Elma Oddsted, volleyball.

"More recruits for the fall sport of hockey are needed," Jane Visalli, club manager said. WAA hockey clubs meet on Fridays at 11 o'clock on the hockey field, according to Miss Keller. "Women who are really active in the sport will have an opportunity of playing at the University of California at Berkeley, sometime in November, when the California Hockey Association entertains representatives of junior colleges at a hockey sports day," she said.

Another important sport, that of badminton, is also in need of more participants, according to Miss Keller. "However," she said, "the WAA badminton team this semester, will offer better competition than usual. Women who come out for this sport will have the opportunity of competing against male members of the faculty in a badminton game, of participating in coeducational sports days with colleges of this aren, and of competing in the San Mateo badminton playday in October," Miss Keller revealed.

New Stuff

Equipment for the sport has already been purchased and may be used by those who are WAA badminton club members on Tuesdays and Thursdays from 4 to 5 p.m. Selection of team members from the badminton club for the playday at San Mateo will be based on the attendance and regular practice of those women who are participating in the sport. Within a short time tournaments between members of the badminton club, as well as tournaments for members of the WAA tennis club, will be held, Miss Keller announced.

Possibility that fencing bouts may be arranged with the women of San Francisco State College in the near future was also revealed by Miss Keller.

In line with the men's program of intramural sports, interest is also developing for participating in coeducational round robin sports for WAA members, she said. All women who are interested in this, the women's angle of intramural sports, are urged to consult their WAA sports club managers. "The Women's Athletic Association stands ready to organize and set up rules for intramural sports for all women of the college," Miss Smith said.

WAA In The Intra's

"Intramural activities in the college field are just as popular with women as with men. In many of our institutions it is not uncommon to find as many as 20 teams participating in round-robin sports. The women of this college have never shown much interest in intramurals up to the present time," Miss Keller commented.

Also discussed at the council meeting were plans for the celebration of the sixth anniversary of the WAA in the college, by means of a "six-year-old kiddy party," to be held either the first or second week in November, on a date not as yet set.

Featured at the "kiddy" party, to which not only only WAA members, but all women of the college are invited, will be jumping rope contests, playing jacks, singing games, folk dances, and a six-year-old version of the big apple.

Prizes for the most original six-year-old costume, and for the woman who keeps in six-year-old character best, will be awarded. All women members of the college faculty will also be invited to the affair. Interest centers around what form of dress for a six-year-old women faculty members will effect for the big celebration, Miss Smith revealed.

Nauman Scores Thrice, Duels Reade For Honors; To Meet Cal Frosh Oct. 5

Cal Cubs versus Ram. In Edwards Stadium in Berkeley, an estimated 10,000 or more will view the classic planned as a preliminary to the California-St. Mary's pigskin parade, scheduled for Saturdayafternoon, October 5.

Reviewing the football thrill of 1939, in which the Rams received the short end of a 14 to 0 deal, the showing given by the Rams, according to students who went early enough to see it, was almost as thrilling as the Gael-Bear tussle.

Outstanding in that game was Leo Leggett, the diminutive demon, who found his stride early in the game and broke away for long gains only to be marked in the second half, and consequently slowed down. Al Nauman, acting captain for the Rams of '40, also was "discovered" during this game.

In the line-up for the Cal Ramblers were potential greats of prepdom, Ernie Gentner, Jack Sloan, Al Beals, all All-City luminaries from the bay region.

Game Marks Stride

Usually, the college does not get in stride until the Cal Frosh game. Last year, the college went on a winning streak only after the rude awakening resulted from the 14 to 0 stimulant. Coach Lee Eisan, former quarterback for the university, hopes to have a strong team which he can lead from the bench of the same field in which he gained glory less than a decade ago.

No release from the university has been received as yet, putting the game still in the air. According to former Cal Frosh games, however, this year's encounter will be not unlike the last, in which straight lunging power will be used by the university, while the college will rely mostly upon the air and quick trick plays.

Line Improved

Improvement in the line was seen when Eisan shifted the Ram team for the State game. Howard Council's change to tackle, Johnny Blakemore's new position of guard and George Jensen's filling of the fullback position found a new Ram eleven that looked a potential threat for future games. Possibility of another renovation by Eisan is more than probable, however.

After the 7 to 0 received by Placer and the tussle with State for honors, the Rams have begun to roll with steamroller-like consistency. With Nauman in the tailback spot and with Clark Johnson leading the interference, Edwards Stadium may see a preliminary game even greater than the main event.

Starting lineups for this game will be published in the following issue if possible, while a roster may also be available. Starting time for the game has not been definitely set as yet, and will also be released in the following issue.

By Kei Hori

Displaying a tremendous increase in offensive power, the college Rams plowed its way through an older and more experienced San Francisco Gator emerging victorious by a 19 to 13 score. 10,000 rabid followers of football filed into Roberts Stadium and saw the Rams defeat State two consecutive times, and winning four games out of six played.

Taking every advantage of breaks coming their way, both teams ran and passed precariously and fought to the very atom of energy. Both teams played an offensive game, both teams played with fate on defense.

Rams First To Score

Early in the first quarter, Jim Lowrie of State started an off tackle play, was hit hard and fumbled. Upon the bouncing ball pounced Ken Hagen, Ram end, beginning a march that resulted in the first college touchdown. Nauman scoring through guard. Honnert's conversion was wide.

State rallied immediately, but a fast charging line kept the Gator safely in its own territory. Upon exchanges of punts, the Rams lost to their own 27, was forced to kick again. Luke Lowell's punt was good to Chad Reade on his 43, returning to the 48, downed by John Blakemore of the college. In that play, a slugging penalty was called against the college and the ball brought to the 26 yard line—half the distance to the goal.

State Scores Twice

On the succeeding play, Reade ran wide to his right side, reversed his field and scored standing up. The try for point was muffed when State bobbled an attempted conversion, leaving the score at 6 all.

State began passing early in the third quarter. Set back to their own 30 by a holding penalty, Reade dropped back and heaved a pass to Lowrie on the 40. Lowrie scooted around a beautiful display of down-field blocking to the Ram 7, where Jim Honnert pounced on him from behind. Lowrie made 1, Reade lost 5, gained 5. On the last down, Reade again dropped back and completed a short pass to Fred Hinze to score. Tande of State converted.

Just seven plays later, State found itself faced with a grave problem of finding the "glorified prep school" mow down its defenses and come up with a spectacular offensive drive that resulted in the second Ram score. Forced to kick, Lowell booted 40 yards to the State 19. On third down, Reade booted a high kick that netted them 1 yard. A reverse from Nauman to Honnert was stopped at scrimmage, but Nauman on the following play, cross bucked to his right, to score vertically.

Into the bedlam came a break for the college, with five minutes of play remaining in the game, a slugging penalty was called on State, bringing back a touchdown run by Reade to the 33 yard line, also losing possession of the ball. Playing desperately, State held the charge and Lowell kicked to State's 19. Reade was dumped by Taylor on the 7, Reade's pass intended for Lowrie was intercepted on the 10 by Dick Wilson. Two plays later, the whole Ram team penetrated a dazed State squad and Nauman breezed through to score. Honnert's conversion was low, but it no longer mattered.

San Mateo Next Shinkicker Foe

With league play definitely under way, Joseph Lantagne's soccer team is readying itself for a tilt against San Mateo Junior College at San Mateo next Saturday morning, Lantagne announced.

The Rams opened their league play last Friday against a strong Cal Aggies team. Results of the contest weren't available at press time, but Lantagne didn't seem too optimistc about his team's chances when interviewed last week.

Lantagne feels more hopeful for success against San Mateo, however. He will be meeting a junior college team for the first time, and his men will stand a better chance of victory against "two-year college competition," he said.

"It would be foolish for me to predict that we will win the league honors this season," Lantagne added. "We meet not only junior colleges like ourselves, but big four year colleges like California and Stanford."

A definite starting lineup for future soccer tilts will be released next Friday, Lantagne promised. He said that it would be hard for him to name a starting line-up until after he had seen the men in action, and seen how they worked together.

Being new to both the college and the league, Lantagne has had to find out many things about his own boys and other league teams before he can feel safe to make predictions about his, or other league teams, he said.

Ogg To Sponsor First Ski Club Meeting Thursday

Meeting for the first time this semester, the ski club will hold its confab at Bob Ogg's home in Berkeley next Thursday. At that time members of the team will be chosen and a captain elected, announced Alden Smith, faculty adviser to the group.

The Ski Club is a member of the Pacific Coast Inter-Collegiate Ski Union and will participate in all of its meets. Among the other colleges participating in these meets will be California, Stanford, Washington, Oregon, Nevada University, Placer Junior College and Sacramento Junior College. These last two colleges give the members of the team block letters, stated Ogg.

"We would like to have letters for our team too. We will try to make this possible," Ogg said.

Ogg also announced that a set of regulations for the team will be worked out soon.

Falk Falkenberg, the Norwegian boy is expected to lead the team. Falkenberg competed in the New England winter carnival and is the most experienced man on the team.

Accomplished Skaters Sign With Williams

Several excellent skaters have been discovered in the college ice-skating class, announced Joseph Williams, local ice-skating instructor.

Among the better skaters are Ingeborg Lubahn and Peggy Evans, and Williams expects these two women to be heard from during the semester.

Although the loss of the Galbraith brothers has handicapped the college skaters, Williams has his eye on a few men in the group that show talent.

Williams announced that while he is in search of accomplished skaters, he would welcome any student into the class.

The skaters meet at Winterland, Post and Steiner streets, in the city, from 2 to 5 on Friday afternoon. All students are welcome to attend.

The admission is 25 cents with skates, or 40 cents without skates. These are the rates that are available with a student body card, Williams said.

"Since the ice-skaters intend to put on an ice carnival toward the end of the semester, I would be pleased to interview any student who is interested in performing," he emphasized.

Williams commented that in the class at the present are five solo figure skaters, an unusual thing for a college skating group.

Intramural Entries Due Oct. 3

Please enter the following team in the basketball round robin that is to be conducted as part of the intramural program of sport activity. But Your Honor, The L. A. Game Is Oct. 11!

By EVE BURKEY

His Honor, the mayor's office was in something of a huff.

Mary Jane Learnard of the registrar's office was in a mild dither herself.

It seems His Honor's office had telephoned the college, casually inquiring the date of the college's game with Los Angeles. Being connected succesively with six authorities who should have known the date but didn't, hadn't improved His Honor's office's temper.

"When is the game?" Miss Learnard asked her conferees in the office.

They weren't much help. In fact they weren't any.

One bright soul suggested looking in The Guardsman. (The editor didn't know any better.)

Naturally, the paper had no trace of the missing game.

Telephoning The Guardsman was the obvious course, and after a while, Miss Learnard did so.

Bystanders, who by this time had imbibed the spirit of the hunt—there even being a few feeble cries of "Yoicks!"—listened absordedly to the following:

Guardsman voice: Schadedk tosoth the alllevamn and the tktkt!

Miss L: But when's the game?

Guardsman V: Butuuuieuw cmdjty theyyy. See?

Miss L: I see . . . What you mean is you don't know.

Guardsman V: Whhhhoooooo! Whhdidididiii!!!

When we left the game was still tied 0-0 in favor of Miss Learnard.

Student Housing

Haunted House Solves Problem

COLLEGE STATION, TEXAS.—(ACP)—Twelve young men happened upon a "haunted" house and a friend and the result is that 1,000 young men are attending college here on 82 cents a day. Everything is included—even tuition and clothing.

The 1,000 students attend Agricultural and Mechanical College of Texas and are members of a student co-operative housing project, largest organization of its kind in the U. S.

This housing project was begun during the depression years when many boys were not able to finance their educations either by themselves or with their parent's aid.

Today, the room and board of the average student of Texas A. and M. school costs him $29.75 a month, or about one dollar a day.

Twelve youths and Daniel Russell, professor of rural sociology, had been working on the student's financial problems. They found their answer in a haunted house, a large two-story building near the college's experiment farm. It was a dilapidated and isolated place, but the rent was very low.

The house was furnished with articles from the boys' own homes. They engaged no paid help, except the house mother who is given a salary by the boys. They do all such work as cleaning rooms, setting table, and washing dishes themselves.

The number of houses increased. By 1936, 700 men were living under this plan, and every available house near the school had been rented. The Rotary club became interested and built a house for its own sons and friends to accommodate 20 students.

Six years ago 250 boys were not permitted to attend the school because of insufficient funds. Today, 1,000 with no more money than the 250 had are enrolled.

Part Time Positions Available To Students

Some part-time positions are open to women of the college, Margaret Dougherty, dean of women, announced. The positions open are in the nature of housework during after school hours.

"I have had a large number of calls but as yet not enough women have applied to fill them," she said.

Women interested in these opportunities are requested to file applications with Dean Dougherty in her office, Room 120, as soon as possible.

Tough Job

Working Through College Not Easy

TERRE HAUTE, IND.—(ACP)—Working one's way through college is easier said than done, according to Prof. A. C. Payne of Indiana State Teachers' College.

Nearly one-half of the high school graduates eager to "work their way through" are unable to find employment and, therefore never continue their education, Dr. Payne reported after a five-year study.

Professor Payne, a faculty director of the National Youth administration at Indiana State, sought to learn how many prospective freshmen denied NYA employment fail to attend college anywhere. The study indicates that the percentage of non-attendance in college among those denied employment is increasing. In 1937 it was 46.7 per cent, in 1938 it was 43.1, and last year the figure rose to 55.4 per cent.

These findnigs dispute the belief of the man in the street that freshmen who fail to obtain employment will enter or continue school in spite of the handicap, Professor Payne pointed out.

He said that included among those unable to find work to finance their continued education are some of the best academic possibilities.

Student Book Exchange Refunds At Bank

All students who have book exchange money due them should apply immediately at the bank window for their refund, stressed Michael M. Zarchin.

Now on sale are Municipal Railway car tickets which can be used from five to six p.m. Students in need of such tickets should secure a written statement from their class instructor that they have classes or laboratories until five p.m., Zarchin pointed out.

"These tickets must not be abused," Zarchin said, "so that is why we are requiring such a statement."

The sale of Market Street Railway tickets is still hanging in the balance, with no definite plans as yet, Zarchin apologized.

Survey On College Failures Conducted

(By Associated Collegiate Press)

New light was thrown this week on the problem of college scholastic failures through surveys at two Pennsylvania institutions.

State College learned to its surprise that only a third of its reinstated students win diplomas after their reinstatement. Muhlenberg College at Allentown reported success with an innovation in routine designed to bring up the level of freshman grades.

Penn State's school of liberal arts is considering rigid tightening of restrictions governing reinstatements, as the result of its findings in this respect.

Dean Charles W. Stoddart, reporting the results of 86 readmissions in a three-year period, commented he was "very much surprised" to find that only 32 were later graduated. Of the remainder, 25 failed again and 29 withdrew.

"Apparently," he declared, "we had been so much impressed by the distinctly fine records of some reinstated students that we did not realize how badly the others did."

Muhlenberg's change in study routine was introduced at the opening of the new all-freshman dormitory last fall. Freshman Dean Harry A. Benfer found that the number of first-year students earning passing grades in all courses jumped from 40 per cent to 73 per cent in the first year of the new system.

Despite more rigid academic standards, freshmen this year have earned higher grades than ever before recorded at Muhlenberg.

Campus Poll Reveals Student Peace Feelings

NEW YORK CITY—(ACP)—Campus polls conducted this week as an aftermath to the nation-wide student peace action, reaffirmed youth's demand that America stay at peace.

At Columbia University, 88 per cent of 1,500 students voted opposition to war participation, 6.3 per cent favored entry, and 4.7 per cent were without opinion. Three per cent at Radcliffe College voted for America's participation in the war now and 97 per cent vetoed the suggestion.

An estimated 1,000,000 students in colleges and high schools demonstrated their opposition to American involvement in war in the peace action, called by the United Student Peace committee under the slogan "The Yanks Are Not Coming".

Reports at the USPC office here indicate this year's mobilization, given impetus by the actuality of war and the spread of fighting to the Scandinavian front, was the greatest in numbers and effect in the history of the student peace movement.

Posters On Bulletin Boards Must Be Approved

Hugh Waite, publicity committee chairman, wishes to again stress the fact that all posters which are displayed in the halls of the college must have the official permission of the publicity committee.

Waite said, "I have noticed quite a few posters in the halls which have not been okayed by the committee."

If fraternities and clubs desire to announce meetings and activities by bulletin board posters, they are asked to first see a member of the publicity committee for authorization.

Badger Reports Large Band, Orchestra Turnout

A large turn-out answered the call for students interested in band or orchestral work, reported Flossita Badger.

Although the final decision has not yet been made, there is a possibility of organizing an instrumental group of some type next semester said Miss Badger.

All students interested in solo work in both singing and orchestration, are advised to see Miss Badger in Room 200 as soon as possible.

Powell Streeters Appreciate Building; "Hold Outs" Flayed

baseball. It is our branch of athletics exaggerated out of all proportion to the place it should normally occupy on the campus; exaggerated you are not such a simpleton as not to know it—because of the money it brings.

Ours is not an isolated view. The best educators of this country—Woodrow Wilson 30 years ago, President Hutchins of Chicago now—protested against that kind of football in the university life. That is why of course the University of Chicago dropped out of the intercollegiate competition.

Woodrow Wilson's and Mr. Hutchin's view, which is incidentally ours, is that college is a place to acquire culture. It is a place to acquire greater breadths of view, greater understanding of life and its real problems. The editor will hardly contest that the Forum serves these purposes better than the football game.

I. Abrahams

Editor's note:

We feel that students should not be forced to make a choice but should be free to attend both functions, an obvious impossibility if both are held the same evening.

Our reference of football and athletic endeavors was used because football happens to be the most prominent sport of the semester.

We're sorry to correct you, but football occupies such a prominent spot because it is highly popular and interesting to watch. We would be a simpleton if we believed football was prominent because of the money it brings the college, for contrary to popular belief, the team does not make money but loses it.

Since you don't think supporting the team is an evidence of college spirit and loyalty, suppose you tell us how the Forum Club displays spirit and loyalty to the college?

• Good Old Days That Weren't

Editor, The Guardsman:

It is somewhat amusing to witness the attitudes toward the new campus of incoming students to the college. They appreciate the newness of the building and the modern equipment, but they observe the excitement and obvious enjoyment of the old students with an air of puzzlement. To some new students, coming from large, modern high schools, this naive enjoyment is completely baffling. To them, the Balboa campus is just another building.

These neophytes to college life do not carry the memories of past conditions at Powell Street, which make such a decisive contrast to present circumstances. When enjoying the roomy, well-lighted library, they do not find themselves remembering the tiny cubby-hole in which the librarians previously suffered. When rolling into a parking space, they cannot think back to the many parking tags dealt out by the long-suffering Powell Street traffic officers.

Old students, on the contrary, remember these discomforts only too well. They recollect the crowded state of the stairways at the old campus, a condition which caused endless elbowing and pushing. In their minds, the crowded Sutter Street lunch counters contrast definitely with the comfortable new cafeteria which they now enjoy.

These, in explanation to the new freshmen, are the many reasons why the old students savor with such delight their new situation. They may even be excused for looking a trifle condescendingly upon the jaded and unknowing newcomer. The veteran students relish having what they once went without having.

One Who Knows

• "Space Holding" Criticized

Editor, The Guardsman:

The S.F.J.C. Cafeteria is doing a splendid job in providing tasty, wholesome, well-balanced meals for students. The cafeteria itself is comfortable and attractive.

All of this provides the proper background for hundreds of hungry students during the noon hour. But something more is requisite in this set-up. A student-attitude of fairness and courtesy would not only be helpful, but would add to the comfort of all students in the cafeteria.

The noon hour is a peak hour. Hundreds of students arrive almost simultaneously. The cafeteria management is handling the situation with efficiency.

But some students are adding to the general confusion and discomfort of this rush period by establishing the precedent of holding table space for friends. This idea may not be bad in itself providing the friends are actually being served at the cafeteria counter. Most of the time they apparently aren't even in the cafeteria room, for as much as 15 or 20 minutes elapse, and the friends are still in the uncertain process of arrival.

In the meantime other students carrying trays of food walk around the room looking for table space. They pass by the seemingly open tables. When about to sit down they are quietly informed by the student "guarding" the space, that it is being held for friends, or simply that it is "taken." This happens not once, but many times.

Holding tables for friends not actually in the cafeteria room becomes boorishly discourteous and unfair to fellow students actually ready to sit down and eat. The whole idea of the cafeteria is to provide lunch quickly and comfortably to as many students as possible within the required period of time. It is a convenience for all students. Why handicap this purpose by "holding out" on the other fellow?

The cafeteria should be kept in its functional motion. Students should come and go smoothly and quickly. This is only possible when all students cooperate. Holding table space for "friends" not in the cafeteria room only clogs the running wheels of the service.

Tables should be used by students actually ready to sit down and eat. They should not be held for students due to arrive at an indefinite time.

Dedication

Jean Arnold To Supervise Student Aid

Enlisting student support for the November 10 dedication of the college building, Lloyd D. Luckmann, chairman of the dedication committee, last week appointed Jean Arnold, Associated Students' vice-president, to supervise general student assistance.

Arnold To Assist Luckmann

Miss Arnold will assist Luckmann and act as chairman of the various student committees.

"She will," according to Luckmann, "oversee cleaning up of the college grounds, encourage a feeling of responsibility among the students for the good appearance of the building, and assist in evolving some sort of decorative arrangement for the building in general."

Designation of committees and committee members by Miss Arnold is expected to be finished by the end of this week. There will necessarily be a large number of students appointed to the committees, Luckmann said. He particularly noted that a "stick-and-sack brigade" will be required for the cleaning of the grounds.

"All women's organizations in the college will be asked to appoint special committees to aid in the dedication work," Luckmann pointed out.

Clubs To Assist

The various clubs, fraternities, and societies will also be asked to assist, especially in fostering spirit among the students for the dedication ceremony.

Luckmann reiterated that the support of all the students, the parents, and faculty members at the dedication would be highly desired.

Hygiene Instructors Meet, Discuss Health

Hygiene and physical education instructors met with Doctors Alice Potter, R. Dufficy Friedlander, and Paul S. Barrett recently to discuss problems of health service and instruction, Bertha Keller, physical ed instructor, announced.

The purpose of this meeting was to find ways and means of furthering the health program offered by the college in both service and instruction. The meeting was held in a classroom in the men's gym, and a great deal is expected to be accomplished, Miss Keller said.

Plans for the program for the hygiene classes for this semester were formulated at that time.

Prospective Swimmers Asked To See Hurley

Students interested in swimming for the college next semester are urged to apply to John Hurley, swimming coach, sometime in the near future.

Hurley, though not coaching a team this semester, is planning to start team practice immediately upon occupation of the Jefferson High pool in March of next semester.

"All students desiring a berth on the squad will be welcome," Hurley said. "Since I am new here, and we didn't have a swimming team last semester, I would like to find out how much swimming talent we have here at the college."

STATE COLLEGE, PA.—(ACP)—So-called "intellectuals" who know all the answers oftentimes are "unintelligent," a University of Iowa psychology professor told the American Phychological Association here.

"When carried to extremes, mental stunts such as cross-word puzzles and question-and-answer superficiality have the effect of making a wastebasket of the human mind," said Dr. George D. Stoddard. "Sheer accumulation of information is the antithesis of intelligent activity."

Dr. Stoddard charged that present intelligence tests overlook "originality," and "measure only items which have been overlearned and do not show what new solutions or original patterns a child or an adult can produce.

"Therefore, an I.Q. of 140 or even more can no longer be considered an evidence of genius."

Gross

While Thinking

COLLEGE

SOME of the more thoughtless members of the college are having a lot of fun in the cafeteria.

It seems they think it an ideal joke to inter-change the contents of the sugar and salt containers. They also get a thrill out of other adolescent pranks such as turning a glass full of water upside down on a table, and letting some unsuspecting student pick up the glass.

We were under the impression that this is a two year college but perhaps there are some members of the student body who haven't discovered this fact as yet.

These childish pranks would seem in place in grammar or junior high school, but we can't even recall students in high schools acting in such a juvenile manner.

There is also the point that some consideration for the Hotel Division and the other students who eat in the cafeteria should be shown, but undoubtedly our pranksters have never thought of that.

Speaking of showing consideration of others, there seem to be a great many students who think the cafeteria is operated exclusively for their personal benefit.

These persons, after having finfinished lunch, remain at their tables to study or indulge in a bull session, while other students who have not eaten are forced to remain standing until a table is cleared.

The cafeteria during the noon hour rush time is most certainly not the place to indulge in a bull sesion or study for your next class. There are other places to do these things.

Why not give the other fellow a break and vacate your table after you have finished lunch?

LAST Tuesday, while students were waiting in line to get a copy of The Guardsman, several members of the football squad decided that the bundles weren't being opened fast enough to suit them and that they couldn't be bothered with waiting in line anyway.

They took matters in their own hands, pushed people out of the way, cut open a bundle of papers and grabbed a handful.

Their desire to read The Guardsman is flattering but their method of obtaining the paper is slightly irregular and reminiscent of a mob of gangsters rather than supposedly educated students attending college.

Perhaps the football squad could confine their line plunging tactics to the gridiron and wait in line like anyone else.

POLITICS

WENDELL WILLKIE, the enterprising Republican has been hitting some snags in his current campaign for the presidency.

Most publicized of these was his recent speech at Detroit where several eggs were thrown at Willkie and his wife.

Regardless of one's political beliefs, everyone should have enough common decency and manners to at least treat both candidates with a certain amount of respect. After all, no one has to go to a political meeting. If he does, however, he should at least let the candidate give his side of the story.

Undoubtedly the persons who threw the eggs were ignorant fools who probably do not know the meaning of politeness.

Let us hope that no further incidents of this kind occur.

Yearbook Staff Sets $1.50 Price, Seeks Sport Photos

Business

The junior college yearbook has been definitely approved by the administration and plans are being formulated for its sale, according to Ted Green, business manager of the yearbook.

Probable price of the annual will be $1.50, to be paid in installments, Green said. This method of purchasing the yearbooks was devised to make the book easier for the students to obtain.

An initial cost of 25 cents will be charged for pass books which are to be filled with stamps which will be sold at 25 cents each. These stamps are to be purchased on stamp selling days every two weeks until the book is filled and the individual's annual paid for. The program for the stamp selling days will be announced later, Green revealed.

It has been definitely decided that only a certain number of books will be ordered and there will be no reorders. Students are urged to purchase their stamp books as soon as they are put on sale in order to be sure they will get a book, Green said.

Editorial

Urging students to hasten in submitting their football and other sport photographs to the college yearbook staff, Lillian Hoyle, publicity representative, said that from the looks of the activity shown thus far, there will be many exciting action shots in the coming yearbook. Many photographers were out on the field at the State game, according to Miss Hoyle.

Action shots of other sports beside football will be welcome, Miss Hoyle said. The photographs must be 8 by 10 inches and may be turned in to the student body office, Room 169. Prize for the winning photograph will be a complimentary copy of the book-to-be and also a by-line beneath the photograph.

Entries for the naming of the yearbook are still being accepted by the yearbook staff. Many promising names have been submitted, according to Miss Hoyle, but there is still a chance that the winning one is yet to come.

As in the case of the photography contest, the prize for the winning name will be a free copy of the forthcoming publication. Closing date of the contest will be announced soon.

There is still need for art students on the yearbook editorial staff, according to Muriel Grenelle, art editor, who advised those interested to see her as soon as possible.

Rifle Club Sponsors Hayride, Dance Tonight

Announcement of a combination hayride, bonfire, barbecue, and barn dance scheduled for tonight by the Rifle and Pistol Club came this week from Philip De Groot, president of the group.

For those wishing to attend this social event the cost is $1.00 per couple, De Groot added, and reservations may be made with him or with Josephine Bowler, Myron Pierce or Marion Schrick.

The event will begin with a hayride, starting at 8:30 p.m. from the Happy Hollow Ranch near Pedro Point and south of Sharps Park, it was announced, and those wishing to drive down in a body are asked to meet in front of the college at 7:15, to leave at 7:45 o'clock.

Those who wished to arrive at the ranch independently were directed to follow State Highway No. 1 (Ocean shore highway) through Sharps Park, and turn left at Pedro Point sign, and from there to follow road signs.

De Groot also requested students who can accommodate others in their cars to notify any of the club's members named above.

A five-hour bonfire and barbecue will follow the hayride tonight, after which there will be dancing to the music of Ken Pasqualetti and his boys, it was revealed.

Debate Team To Attend Conference October 12

College debaters will participate in the first Saturday Monthly Debate Conference to be held at the University of California on October 12, announced Lloyd D. Luckmann, debating coach.

"This conference is open only to debating students, and we shall send several representatives from the college debate class," Luckmann declared.

The representatives will be the guests of the University of California debaters at luncheon, following which they will take part in the round table discussion.

Train Excursion Plans To Be Completed Today

Final plans for the Sacramento train excursion, Friday, October 18, will be drawn up at a meeting of the Rally Committee to be held in Room 200 at 12:30 today, announced Pete Aydelotte, rally committee chairman.

The program for a special rally to boost student interest in the ticket sales will also be discussed at the meeting.

"While the ticket sales have been moving along fairly well considering the game is still three weeks away they have not been going quite fast enough," Aydelotte stated.

"We feel that this rally will help get the students in the spirit of the occasion," Aydelotte added.

Because of the importance of this meeting all rally committee members are requested to be in Room 200 promptly at 12:30 o'clock so that the business at hand can be taken care of as quickly as possible.

Aydelotte also announced that all college students who wish to see the California-St. Mary's game may do so for the price of 75 cents upon showing their associated students card.

This special price was granted the college students because San Francisco plays the Cal Frosh in the preliminary game The game between S.F. and Cal Frosh will start at 12:30.

Business Department Places Two More Students

F. Grant Marsh, business department chairman, announced today that two more students of the college were placed in full time positions.

With the employment of Harold Olson at the Isthmian Steamship Company and Herbert Newell at the Hartford Fire Insurance Company, the total number placed through the business department is four in the first month of this semester.

Others who have found positions through Marsh are Margaret Sommerset, Edward Porter, John Riordan, and Bill Basich.

Marsh suggests that all students who are seeking employment in the business field see him in his office, Room 222.

Hotel Division Obtains Panels From Exposition

The hotel division of the college has obtained a set of six panels from Treasure Island depicting the average activities of a college student from entrance to graduation.

These panels will be used to form a booth representing the Hotel and Restaurant Management Division of the college at the Western Hotel Show, to be held in Los Angeles, October 7 to 10.

According to Hilda Watson, chairman of the Hotel Division, two of the panels directly concern activities of the students in hotel operation.

Two Areonautics Students Receive Flight Licences

By DORIS SCHNACKE

Gene Powell and Walt Warner returned to the college this week with the news that they now possess commercial flight licenses which they had received for completing a two month course of instruction in advanced flying this summer at the Oakland Airport.

The two men were the only junior college students in the United States to receive this course sponsored by the Civil Aeronautics Authority. Of 300 applicants from Northern California for the course, only 30 were chosen.

Applicants came from colleges all over the state, among them, California, Stanford, and University of Southern California.

To complete the 50 hour flying course, the students were required to take a final flight test which consisted of numerous acrobatic stunts. The pilots were asked to do such things as snap-rolls, slow-rolls, cartwheels, Immelmans, and various loops and spins.

Those who completed the instruction were offered positions as commercial pilots with the United Air Lines, or if they wished they could enroll either in the Navy Flying School in Pensacola, Florida; or the Army Flying School at Randolph Field, Texas.

Both students who took the beginners flying course in the college said that they were very happy to have been among those chosen to receive the course.

"The instruction was of more value to us than we can express," Powell said, "and we sincerely appreciate the opportunity given us by Civil Aeronautics Authority."

Dedication

Legion Post Will Present Flag To College

Highlighting the dedication program on November 10, will be the presentation of an American flag by the American Legion, post 233, to the Associated Students, Lloyd D. Luckmann, chairman of the dedication committee, revealed this week.

The ceremony in which the flag is to be presented will be conducted from the women's gymnasium directly after the formal dedication of the college is completed there, Luckmann said, and will be under the auspices of the American Legion group.

Music for both portions of the program will be supplied by the legion band of Ralph Murray, which last week completed a two year's engagement at the Golden Gate International Exposition as its oficial band, he added.

Formal Ceremony At 2 o'Clock

According to Luckmann's plans, the flag ceremony will begin at 2 o'clock, when local color guards of the American Legion R.O.T.C., and other patriotic units will form along the path leading from the gymnasium to the flag standard behind the science building.

"Through this avenue of flags will proceed the A Capella choir and officers of the student body," he continued. "The flag will then be presented to the student body, and Mattthew Dooley, prominent legionnaire and local attorney, will speak. Following this, colors will be raised to the playing of The Star Spangled Banner, sung by the A Capella choir."

Open House Follows

The building will not be open to the public until 3 o'clock, Luckmann commented, but from then on open house will be held, and the citizens of San Francisco will receive their first opportunity to view the campus at its best.

Exhibits which are being prepared for that day were pointed out as now being in the process of completion, and evident in the display cases in the halls. The library will also be on display, it was announced, and bulletin boards throughout the building are to hold attractive posters.

College departments which have indicated willingness to cooperate in preparing displays were named by Luckmann as follows: art, aviation, chemistry, floriculture, geology and geography, life science, psychology, visual education, and publications through The Guardsman.

Invitation Again Stressed

Luckmann's invitation to students and their parents to attend the dedication program and the open house, was emphasized by J. Paul Mohr, college registrar, who declared:

"All faculty members and students are urged to participate in the dedication exercises to the fullest extent. We're proud of our college and want to show it to as many people in San Francisco as we possibly can, through the dedication ceremony and the open house which follows. We would like to create in the minds of the people of San Francisco the correct impression concerning the scope and quality of the work offered by the college."

Registration Total Reaches 2971 Students

Total number of students enrolled in the college is 2971, an increase of 360 over last semester's record enrollment, Mary Jane Learnard, assistant registrar, revealed this week.

Final statistics received this week from Miss Learnard concerning the total enrollment in each of the various classes is as follows: low freshman have 1362 students; high freshman, 404; low sophomore, 627; and high sophomore, 468.

Besides the above number of studenst there are 110 part ti[illegible] students bringing up the tota[illegible]nrollment to 2971, Miss Learnard reported.

Differentiating the sexes proved that there were 1945 men and 1026 women students, showing that men students outnumber the women by 919 members, Miss Learnard remarked

Comparison of the number of low freshman women students enrolled in the college in Fall, 1939, with those in Fall, 1940, showed, Miss Learnard said, an increase of about 10 per cent women. Fall, 1939 freshman class had about 30 per cent women; while

CAB

Oct. 15 Last Day To Get Club Charters

College organizations were again warned of the October 15 deadline for charter renewals, as seven clubs were granted this status of approval at a meeting of the Club Advisory Board last Tuesday.

Those seven clubs who thus kept their good standing in the CAB are Beta Tau, Foresters' Fraternity, Peace Society, Phi Alpha Omega, Physical Education & Recreation Majors, Pi Mu Gamma, and Rifle and Pistol Club.

Other organizations which were in good standing last semester should also take steps to keep this status, Bob Ogg, club board president, announced, by filing before October 15 their applications for renewal of charters.

These must include, he added, a form completed, which was sent to all recognized clubs, a list of active members, and a copy of the constitution and by-laws of the club.

Those clubs which fail to follow the required steps will be suspended from the CAB and from recognition in Associated Student activities, he said.

At this meeting was presented the intramural sports program of the college, as drawn up by Captain Fred MacFarland, now in charge of this branch of activity. Although the Club Advisory Board no longer occupies the position it formerly did in supervising interclub sports, Bob Bush, representing Captain MacFarland, urged that all organizations participate in the program which begins this month.

Because of lack of facilities, publication of Cabby, CAB bulletin, was omitted for this meeting. The next issue has been set for October 15, and clubs were advised by Ogg to submit news not later than 2 oclock on next Tuesday, in Room 169.

NYA Time Schedules Due Today—Redford

NYA time schedules must be submitted today since October 6, established date for acceptance comes on a Sunday.

Time slips must contain the supervisor's signature and fractions of hourly time should be figured in tenths of hours, Edward H. Redford, college NYA director warned.

"Errors in schedules submitted will result in supervisors losing all future NYA help and will drop guilty workers from NYA roles," he said.

"Workers must remember," Redford concluded, "that no more than four hours of work may be done on any day when classes are in session and no more than seven hours on days when classes do not meet."

Library Periodicals Prepared For Binding

Library periodicals are being prepared for binding by the library staff, according to Marcus Skarstedt, librarian. These periodicals when bound will equal more than 200 volumes, he added.

Besides the periodicals several books which have grown too worn for use will be rebound. "It seems to be the general belief that the more books you acquire for a library, the larger the library grows," commented Skarstedt. "The truth of the matter is that at the end of each day books must be removed from the library shelves because they are too worn to be used any longer."

Periodicals are placed in the reading room, and if they are carefully used and handled by the students they are sent to be bound into volumes. "If one of the periodicals needed for the volume is removed from the library or badly worn a duplicate of it must be secured," said the librarian, "and this is often very difficult."

Building a reference collection is important in library work and the most valuable information on up to date topics is found in these books, he revealed.

Dean Browne

Parking Situation Improved As Drivers Heed Warnings

Response to requests made by college administrators earlier this week that students and faculty park their cars in safe areas, has helped to eliminate some of the hazards that were present while traffic regulations were being ignored, Dean Edwin C. Browne indicated today.

"I'm very pleased that the drivers of cars have cooperated in endeavoring to park their cars on level ground rather than decorate our campus hillsides, the dean declared. "Not only has the factor of safety been helped, but the appearance of the campus is much more impressive. There are still some drivers who have not absorbed the full significance of the "No Parking" signs set up by the police on the campus pavement facing the west side of the building, and it is hoped that extended cooperation will prevent further traffic tags."

Rules Repeated

The three specific rules as outlined by the dean this week are as follows:

1. There will be no parking allowed at any time on any part of the center driveway in front of the building.

2. There will be no parking allowed on the upper level directly behind the building.

3. There will be no parking allowed on the hillsides to the north and south of the building.

Drivers who disregard these rules will find parking violation tickets placed on their cars, Dean Browne warned earlier.

"There is ample room for parking at the south end of the building in addition to the level to the north of the building, plus Phelan Avenue," he commented.

Parking Area Still Possible

Regarding hopes that the level ground available for parking be paved, though only temporarily, he said he had received no notification in the matter of gravel for parking space, adding:

"It is quite possible that the levels at either end of the building plus Phelan Avenue will have to be considered our best parking possibilities for this semester. As much as all of us would desire ideal parking facilities, it is pleasant to note in The Guardsman of October 1, under Ram's Horn, an article signed by 'One Who Knows' a special reference in the last sentence—'The veteran students relish having what they once went without having.'"

This letter had noted the appreciation of older students for advantages in the new college which they had not found in the former city-wide campus.

Social

Hi Frosh Dance On October 11

Selection of the Terrace Plunge Room of the Fairmont Hotel as the location for the Associated Students' Dance of October 11 was announced today by Jean Arnold, vice-president and social chairman.

The dance will be held in honor of the high freshman class, Miss Arnold added, and music will be furnished by the orchestra of Larry Cannon. "Many students have shown a preference for the sort of music this orchestra is known for," she commented.

Dance Off Campus

Because of inadequate facilities, the college gymnasiums will definitely not be considered as a location for this dance or future dances for this semester, Miss Arnold said.

"We have been trying to find a location large enough to accomodate the crowd of students we know will attend the dance," she continued. "The accomodations offered by the hotels have been found in the past inadequate for the large crowd which usually supports such a social event, but since no other arrangements could be made, we chose the Terrace Plunge from the hotel space available."

Committee Meeting Indefinite

No regular date of meeting has been set for the social committee, of which Miss Arnold is chairman, but the group will be called together whenever there is business to be disposed of, she declared.

Through another source it was learned this week that the Executive Council, having found that more funds were available to it than was estimated earlier in the semester, may grant an additional amount to the social committee, among other groups in the college.

Low Frosh Class Will Hold Mixer Dance

Scheduled to be held sometime in the next few weeks, the frosh mixer dance, has received the social committee's approval, low frosh president, Jim Honnert announced last week.

While Honnert said at that time that the dance would probably have to be held in one of the gymnasiums, a later statement made by Jean Arnold, chairman of the social committee, indicates the dance will be held outside the college.

Miss Arnold, in a statement to The Guardsman last week declared facilities in the gymnasiums were inadequate for dances, and therefore all dances would necessarily have to be held off the campus.

In announcing plans for the mixer, Honnert said that such a dance will enable freshmen to get better acquainted. "Since it is the freshmen, rather than the sophomores, who will really have the job of building the spirit and traditions of the college in the future," he pointed out, "better acquaintance among the members of the class is needed.

Conferences To Supersede Mailing Of Cinch Notices

Replacing the custom of past semesters of mailing cinches to students who merit them, a system of student-adviser conferences will be in effect beginning October 15, when the first of these meetings is scheduled for 12 o'clock, J. Paul Mohr, college registrar, revealed today.

All classes will be dismissed at this time, Mohr said, and students will be expected to consult with their faculty advisers at certain rooms to be designated. Whether grades are good, bad, or medium, students will find out at these conferences, it was announced.

At the close of the first midterm, communications will be mailed to parents and guardians regarding handling of grades and the names of student advisers, Mohr added.

Regarding the installation of blackboards and other features, Mohr declared that these are being completed, and that every classroom will be ready for any required class activity shortly.

Bear With Parking Problem; Restrictions Justifiable

UNTIL the $60,000 approximated as requisite for the widening of Phelan Avenue to permit diagonal parking on both sides of the street is made available, and until additional funds are found for the construction of a parking area within the college grounds, it would appear that certain necessary parking regulations, as voiced by Dean Edwin C. Browne this week, must be observed by students and faculty members driving cars to the college.

As Dean Browne pointed out and as can readily be seen, the present habit of parking on the rugged slopes of the campus is not the safest way to park an automobile. Wet weather will unquestionably increase the possibility of a car slipping on the uncertain soil.

In spite of the Dean's warning that offenders would be tagged, cars were still precariously perched on every accessible slope of the campus at the middle of this week.

Enforcement of the new regulations will necessarily require students to park farther from the campus. It is regrettable that this condition exists, but everyone must bear with it. Every effort is being made by the administration to straighten out the kinks about the college as soon as possible; the parking situation is but one of them.

It would not be amiss to reiterate the three parking rules set down by the Dean. Willful adherence to them will be indicative of real college spirit.

1. There will be no parking allowed at any time on the center driveway in front of the building.

2. There will be no parking allowed on the upper level directly behind the building.

3. There will be no parking allowed on the hillsides to the north and south of the building.

American Journalism Last Frontier Of Unbiased News

THIS is American Newspaper Week in California. It is appropriate to devote some space to this study of contemporary journalism at a time when unbiased, true presentations of the news have almost disappeared from the earth.

Strangely enough, many Americans today have only scorn or disapproval to heap on the shoulders of journalism, claiming that newspapers are prejudiced, packed with lies, and deliberately falsify facts to get a better story.

A few years ago, perhaps these arguments could stand up against close inspection. Today with perhaps a few exceptions they cannot.

It is the aim of every respectable newspaper to serve the public as well as it can. This ideal is carried out in all but a few cases. There is no denying that newspapers have their faults, but there is nothing that is perfect and cannot be improved upon.

What the majority of people who complain about the newspapers do not seem to realize is the service each paper in a community performs. A moment's reflection will suffice to explain this point.

It is indeed unfortunate that one cannot say that journalism throughout the world is always an organ for good, and a servant of the people.

But, as is known, such is not the case in many countries today where newspapers are deliberately used to mislead and misinform the public.

Realizing that such a situation now exists in almost every large nation in the world, the American people, far from being resentful of their press, should be openly thankful that the press of the United States is given such a great amount of freedom.

If there are those who still doubt the freedom of the press, let them ask themselves how much they would be able to learn of world affairs if the American press and radio were controlled as are those in Europe and Asia.

Meet The Students
By THEODORA WONG

THIS week meet—a dark haired, dark eyed coed, definitely on the feminine side, whom we met while wandering around the building at five o'clock.

She is Sue Williamson, a sophomore, and before getting down to serious matters, Sue will have us know she prefers brown haired, blue eyed men—'nuff said? (Personally we know a blonde who——)

Notwithstanding her interest in the above mentioned subject, Sue hopes to conquer in the arts. Though a commercial art major, her ambitions are all for a singing career on the radio, she revealed. She excels in dancing too, we found out, and has been with the San Francisco Opera Ballet while at high school.

Sue likes the new college building "very much," but thinks it lacks collegiate atmosphere. She also likes: tennis, golf, Freddy Martin's music, and brown haired, blue eyed—well, we've mentioned that . . .

At this point, hearing strange noises in the adjoining room, we were inspired to ask whether she'd ever been to a haunted house; she hasn't, it seems, but she sometimes has bad dreams, although she isn't crazy about jitterbugging or spinach.

"But," she continued, "I like Latin music and Hawaiian music."

Though liking the vision of a brown haired, blue eyed serenader softly strumming an ukulele (oo-koo-lay-lay) beneath the palms of Waikiki and perhaps singing patriotically, "Na Lei O Hawaii," we decided to quiz Sue on something closer to the college. So——

"What's your stand on the sorority question?"

Said Sue, member in good standing of Phi Beta Rho:

"Sororities teach girls social grace; in a sorority, a girl learns to get along with others of her own age, as well as to cope with different personalities, though of course a non-sorority girl has just as much of a chance to learn these things if she wants to do so . . . No, I don't think sorority girls are snobbish, but they do have so much in common with each other that probably they do not associate with other girls as they might otherwise."

How many women of the college think likewise? We'll find out more in future interviews—we hope.

The Spectator

BRIGHAM YOUNG, Darryl F. Zanuck's latest production, is one of the most powerful spectacles ever produced. Zanuck has selected a decidedly "touchy" subject as the basis for his latest epic—the story of that profoundly religious group, the Mormons, who staged the great western trek that combined the traits of endurance and courage to carry them through persecutions in Ohio, Missouri, and Illinois until the haven of free religious worship was reached in Utah.

Although the subject of religion must be handled with delicate care on the screen, a dignified, sensitive script by Lama Trotti, adapted from a story by Louis Bromfield, skillfully avoids any offense by presenting a strictly unpartisan account of the Mormon pilgrimage. There is no attempt to justify the value of the Church or to endorse the actuality of the revelations; neither is there any attempt to poke fun slyly at the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints or to ridicule the principles of polygamy on which the Church is largely founded.

No, there is no propaganda in Brigham Young, rather, it's a very stirring account of a group of persecuted individuals, beaten and murdered because their religious beliefs tend to stray from the common. When Joseph Smith (Vincent Price), the Mormon founder, is murdered by a ruthless mob in Nauvoo, Illinois, the Mormons realize how ironic the situation is—being tormented and driven in a country that developed under the protection of the Bill Of Rights and its "freedom of religion." Brigham Young takes over the leadership, and under his powerful control, the Mormons pack their belongings and flee westward. Through the power of the motion picture camera, this long march is superbly re-created. The beautiful photography under the direction of Arthur Miller does much to augment the film's impressiveness.

The plot follows the founding of what is now Salt Lake City and carries the Mormons through the rigors and starvation of their first winter. The chronicled account of the cricket-seagull "miracle" brings the film to a smashing climax.

Dean Jagger, Hollywood's latest recruit from the Broadway stage, is superb as Brigham Young. He walks off with the film, lock, stock and barrel and casts into dismal comparison the efforts of Tyrone Power and Linda Darnell, the romantic leads. Jagger paints an unforgettable portrait of a man, torn within by doubts as to his own worthliness to lead the church. It's a full, rounded, sincere interpretation with underlying depth and power that surely must be recalled when those Academy Awards roll around for 1940.

Power is generally competent in his performance although he is the sleekest frontier scout we've ever seen. Miss Darnell, particularly in her emotional scenes, betrays her lack of experience. This girl is being pushed ahead too fast, in roles that are beyond her capacity. A fine supporting cast backs up the stars with capable jobs. Vincent Price, as Joseph Smith, Marc Lawrence as the merciless prosecuting attorney, and Mary Astor as the inspiring Mormon wife in particular add fine character studies to the film.

Praise should also go to Alfred Newman for a rousing musical score that exemplifies the frontier spirit of the picture. Henry Hathaway handled the directatorial reins with rare imagination.

Quotable Quotes

People and monkeys worry too much, according to Dr. J. P. Fulton, professor of psychology at Yale University, who admits—guardedly—that "folks have to worry some or they'd never learn anything."

Since monkeys demonstrate worrying abilities, Dr. Fulton explained they are used to experiment with the nature and results of worry.

"We had a chimpanzee that was taught something and later did it wrong," the psychologist recalled. "The chimp worried and fretted like a frustrated child. But after we removed its frontal lobe it didn't worry about anything."

Of course, he warned, people who didn't have a frontal lobe would go about touching hot stoves eternally, because that's the part of the brain associated with memory and the trial and error device.

By studying the simians, Dr. Fulton explained, scientists eventually will be able to diagnose worries—and perhaps eliminate them to a great extent in a far-off day.

On The Feminine Side

THE end of midterm period leaves one only slightly less exhausted than does the end of finals.

This is the time when strong men turn pale and the best groomed women look rather bleary-eyed and haggard from too much black coffee and too little sleep. This is the time when erstwhile friendly instructors and students look askance at each other when blue-books change hands, and the less hardy of the student body wince whenever grades are mentioned.

Maybe it would be well to forget the horrors of the past week for a few, brief moments and to dwell on the pleasanter aspects of student life and interests.

This clothes for college wear situation seems to be of ever-growing interest to the feminine members of the college. At last little indications of individuality are beginning to crop out even among the more conservative women.

What's new on the campus? Well, lapel gadgets are new for one thing. Of course, as you are well aware, we've been wearing lapel gadgets for lo these many years, but this year's little novelties are really different. One of the smartest seen lately was a blue leather rooster with a brilliant scarlet comb and an amazing spray of stiff white tail feathers; it was worn with a plain suit and served the purpose of adding a bit of spice to the woman's outfit.

Also amusing is the rust-beige leather horse mounted on a dark brown rocker which one of the smarter college women features with her round-necked sports dresses or sweater plus scarf combinations. If we may give our opinion on the subject, by far the trickiest of all is the pottery peasant girl in outrageously bright colors. The novelty about this particular gadget comes from the fact that it is open at the top to hold a few drops of water and a spray of fresh flowers. On a very plain, tailored suit it is really ultra-something or other.

Another fad for winter which has influenced date dresses is that of wearing pastels with dark coats or fur jackets on even the chilliest days. A muted pink or blue which formerly would be relegated to spring or summer wardrobes is very attractive on cold, wintry nights, and a soft pastel skirt and sweater is just about tops on the campus at present. Pale yellows and violets are also going up on the list of popular colors, but pastels will probably die out gradually for campus wear when the rainy days come. However, if a prediction is in order, they should be watched for date dresses all through this season.

Long tweed jackets almost coat-length are also the rage at present. We're especially fond of them in autumn's old stand-by rusts, greens, and browns, but pinks, blues, and beige shades are also in great favor. They're super when combined with a plain flannel skirt in a harmonizing tone. By the way, it's with such simple, sporty outfits as those that lapel gadgets are of fashion interest, despite the fact that Willkie and Roosevelt buttons are threatening to have a monopoly for at least another month. American and British flags in rhinestone and enamel are also in tremendous favor, although the sudden absence of French pins from the more patriotic lapels is interesting.

All in all, women are daring to exercise their own sense of style, and we're glad of it.

Shots At RAMdom . . .

WILLIAM PERSIFLAGE breezed into our office the other day to invite us to a real Javanese Rijstaffel, or, to you stay-at-homes who haven't crossed the date line yet, a gargantuan lunch which sports as its central motif an enormous bowl of rice ably supported by a culinary roster that would make the HEA wince.

Taking our feet off the editor's desk, we asked Mr. Persiflage to draw up an overturned wastebasket. Our acute senses signaled us that something was troubling our friend, even before he began gnashing his molars on the corner of the editor's desk. "Buck up old man," we said consolingly, "it's probably as bad as all that but what will this get you when you've been leveled under the cool tombs and the fog creeps around on little cat's feet over the mossy turf, your mossy turf."

Persiflage brightened somewhat at our words, and, picking the splinters from his tongue, told his tale.

"You know my boy Saki Bambi, he's not my boy really, you know, I just won him on a punch board at that party of the Queses. I came out pretty lucky on that punch board deal. You know, of course, what old Zimmeltwist drew. Well, he's still trying to get rid of her. She—"

We had to cut Persiflage there.

"Anyway," he continued, "Saki and I almost had a falling-out. We had just finished planning the Rijstaffel when we found that we had provided for only 19 courses. Well, another course had to be stewed up somewhere. You know that a 19-course Rijstaffel just wouldn't make three lines in the Sunday society supplement."

We nodded in very dumb assent.

"Well, ever faithful Saki popped up suddenly with "What about nasi goring."

"What about him, I'm interested now in a 20th course!" I hurled back at him, neglecting to upbraid him for his pronnunciation.

" 'You said you wanted another course, n'est-ce pas?' returned Saki with hardly a trace of his Oxford accent.

"In desperation I told him that much as I'd like to portion that boon for British bomb-shelters builders into skimpy servings, the thing was utterly impossible."

We could see by the dull glint in Persiflage's bleary orbs that he was quite proud of his faulty alliteration.

"We remained at an impasse, as Saki would twang, for several minutes. It finally got to the point that I told Saki that if he mentioned that Nazi once more I'd call the FBI and have its men look under his bed.

"A peaceful modus vivendi, as Saki would term it, came when Saki put forth with a recipe for nasi goring, one of Java's most popular and prequently served dishes, according to Saki and The Family Circle Vol. 17, No. 13.

"Then, highly indignant, and cursing me in Sanskrit for my stupidity, Saki drew his batik sarong about him, put away his scimitar, and stalked out of the room."

"And to think," Persiflage sobbed, "I almost lost Saki, or, rather, Saki almost lost me because of a silly misunderstanding."

Enough was enough. We had a reporter drag the quivering mass outside.

To those of you unfortunate enough to have been invited to Persiflage's little travesty on digestion and who can't possibly evade it, well, HAPPY RIJSTAFFEL!

Editor, The Guardsman:

There are pests and pests and pests. Today though, the library pest should be given particular attention.

She's the girl who clatters into the library and invariably drops her books and other paraphernalia. This causes everyone else to jump at least two feet from his chair.

Then while everyone settles down she picks a victim to sit next to. Then with many exclamations and "cute" remarks she sits down to start her studying.

Quiet reigns. All is still. Then an awful gasp—she can't find her pen. She empties her purse (and that's some job) and finally locates it.

After this little episode she decides she needs a reference book. Up she trots to the desk. This little heroine doesn't know who wrote the book or what it's about, but Professor so-and-so said it was in the library. She doesn't get the book.

When she's gotten everyone on edge she clatters out again and life goes on without her. Mary Gannon

Editor, The Guardsman:

Upon reading your September 27 issue we came upon an article called "Shaw at Recent Palace Interview."

The last sentence was, "It was good music, granted, and our word for it is 'jive'."

We would like the editor of The Gardsman to note that the definition of "jive" is "line," e.g., "to dig me your jive" means "to give me your line."

Credit To Wilson, Dean For Bonfire Success

A GREAT deal of credit should go to Tom Wilson, faculty adviser of the Associated Men Students, for putting over the Bonfire held last Thursday before the State game. Without his help and suggestions, we wonder how the thing would have turned out. And to the Dean—the nine sturdy personalities wish us to publicly thank you for those coffee and sinkers you brought to them during their all night vigil. You too, Tom.

There is a little inside stuff about the all night vigil stuff that went on last Wednesday night and Thursday morn. Not only did the studes miss classes by sleeping through them Thursday, but they have to catch up on their subjects of the day before, they forgetting to study being too excited about the night.

Hughie Just Couldn't Waite

So he crawls into the center of the whole mess of blocks and boxes, finds himself an empty box and crawls in. The next morning, the Fire Chief hears of this and tells him the story of a fellow who actually did that, and was cooked consequently. AWWK! That was Hughie. He just fainted. They kept themselves up by quips and quacks and a family sized bottle of "ginger ale," we hear. By the way, the mighty nine are Waite, Hank Suerstedt, Slim Thorogood, Ed Hardies, Tom Reilly, Clark Johnson, Bob Kletzker, Bill Flint and Ted Theodus. Count 'em. BouKei's to them, b'god!

The Truth Shall Make You Free

During that little incident after the bonfire concerning the walls of Roberts Stadium, it was rumored that a few of the roughies were tossed in the klink—or put before the bar of justice—we forget which. At any rate, the roughies remembered our motto—the one that streams across the front of our building, and followed suit. Imagine a bunch of roughies telling the truth. Anyhow, they were freed. Good motto we got, no?

Splash After All

After all the stuff about not having a Splash Party, the WAA'ers hop up and have one before our very eyes. And then they wonder why an editor's hair becomes gray. Suggested by the Aquacade, the WAA will have "synchronized swimming" (whatever that is) and the party is to be intramural—for women only, of course. We hope it is a big splash, like the sanwich spread was.

Entries Due Today For Team Competition

Deadline for softball, tennis, and basketball entries in the college intramural sports program has been set for today, Captain Fred C. McFarland, faculty sponsor, announced this week. Activities will be under way by Tuesday, October 8.

Last week McFarland appointed Bob Bush to the post of student manager and Paul Postter to assist Bush. These two have been working with the college coaches to get the program under way.

McFarland has moved up the basketball tourney from November to the beginning of October, the reason being that the use of the gym has been denied the intramural teams after the third week of this month.

Six teams have entered the softball league and competition is expected to get under way immediately, Bush remarked. The games are to be played at Balboa Park, San Jose and Ocean Avenues.

Bush urged all teams that has intentions of entering the basketball tourney, to file their entries if they want to be sure to play. He emphasized the fact that the last day is positively today, no entries will accepted later.

"Any man who wants to show off a medal or two should enter the tennis tournament," Bush commented. All the "dubs" in the college are wanted in this tournament, the manager said.

The managers announced that delay may prove a great mistake to any hopefuls. They were of the opinion that the entrants will be average tennisers and that anyone with a slight working knowledge of the game will have a good chance of placing in the upper brackets of the standings.

The Intramural sports program is expected to extend through the semester, the manager explained, but the deadlines for different sports will come later in the semester.

The officials for the games are expected to be students of Lee Eisan's officiating classes. According to Bush and Postter, this will give the men a chance for some concrete knowledge.

Softball, which is expected to get under way by Tuesday, will have all teams playing on the same day. There are three diamonds at Balboa Park and these will all be put to use, Bush indicated.

According to the student managers, the basketball entries are coming in thick and fast and the league may have to be run on an elimination basis instead of a round-robin plan. The reason for this is the lack of time for a long schedule, Bush indicated.

He repeated his announcement to prospective entries to meet the deadline if they want to play. All entries are welcomed, and needed to make the program a success, the manager and his assistant emphasized.

Ski Members Discuss Plans For Norden Trip

Plans were discussed last week, concerning a ski trip to Norden, California, scheduled to take place within a few months, announced Bob Ogg, ski team president.

Thirty members attended the meeting and advance information was given concerning the amount of accessories needed for the trip. An added attraction was skiing pictures taken within Yosemite Valley. A round trip ticket to Norden will cost $3.00 and week end accommodations can be had for $2.50.

Competition To Highlight Association Splash Party

Intramural competition in water sports will be featured at the Women's Athletic Association Splash Party, which is scheduled for the evening of October 24, at the YWCA, according to Barbara Smith, WAA president.

Competitive races in speed and form swimming between teams or between individual representatives of women's organizations will be held, Aileen Kinkel, physical education instructor, said.

"In order to assure the holding of intramural swimming contests at the coming splash party, the women club members of the college are urged to contact Jane McKinnon, swimming club manager, as soon as possible if they wish to enter representatives from their groups, for the various intramural swimming events," Miss Kinkel announced.

"Each club of the college which enters swimmers for the intramural event, should also choose a certain color of bathing cap for its representatives to wear. It will then be easier for the spectators to pick out the various teams if each team member wears a certain colored cap as representative of her organization," Miss Smith said.

All women of the college are invited to attend the affair, which will last from 7:30 to 9 p.m., Bertha Mae Keller, physical education instructor, said. Admission price will be 25 cents per person.

After the intramural swimming contests have ben run off, there will be open swimming for everyone present at the splash party, according to Miss Kinkel.

Synchronized swimming by a selected group will also be presented as a highlight of the evening, Miss Kinkel said.

"So far there have been no definite plans for intramural diving contests, but if the women who are interested in making diving a part of the evening's intramurals, show enough ability in either fancy or elementary diving, we will be glad to make it a part of the splash party program," she explained.

"This is the first time that intramural swimming contests have ever been run off at the WAA Splash Party," Miss Keller added. "Prior to this time, there has been competitive swimming between the Frosh and Sophomores, but never before has the WAA planned a program of intramurals, which will offer an opportunity for club members to engage in competition for swimming honors."

Arrangements chariman for the affair is Eleanor Haliber, while Jane McKinnon is the games chairman.

Sports Practice Resumes When Painted Floor Dries

Activities in badminton, dancing, volleyball and basketball will be resumed next week, according to Bertha Mae Keller, physical education instructor, when the painting of the second floor of the women's gymnasium is scheduled to be completed.

Definitely to be presented by the Women's Athletic Association, this semester, is the new sport of horseshoe pitching, according to Virginia Coker, horseshoe club manager.

Sign-ups for horseshoe pitching are now being accepted, but the arrangements for the place and time that the sport is to be held have not been completed as yet, she said.

Equipment has already been purchased for the sport, she added.

"Anyone who is interested in gaining experience in playing the piano for modern and social dancing, either for NYA funds or not, is urged to contact me as soon as possible," Miss Keller said.

The hours when the pianist would be needed are 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, and 2 on Mondays and Wednesdays, 11 and 2 on Tuesdays and Thursdays, and 12 M on Fridays.

Kiddy Party Date Will Coincide With Anniversary

Date set for the Women's Athletic Association kiddy party, to be held in commemoration of the sixth year anniversary of the WAA in this college, is Tuesday evening, November 5, according to Barbara Smith, WAA chairman.

All women of the college are invited to attend the affair, to which no admission will be charged. Suitable attire for the kiddy party, according to Miss Smith, is a six-year old costume of almost any description, from rompers to short skirts.

First part of the evening's entertainment will be held in the women's gymnasium, where various kiddy games, such as jacks playing, hoop rolling, rope-jumping, will be played, according to her.

Then those present at the party will adjourn to the college cafeteria where they will be entertained by a skit, which will lampoon students of the college, Miss Keller, WAA adviser said. Principal players in the skit will be women members of the faculty, she added.

General chairman of arrangements for the affair is Allene Watt, Miss Keller added, while selection of games will be handled by the Physical Education Majors Club.

Rams Favored To Beat Cal Frosh; Kickoff At 12:30

Tomorrow afternoon on the greensward of the California Memorial Stadium in Berkeley, the California Frosh will play host to the San Francisco Junior College Rams as a preliminary attraction prior to the annual game between California and St. Mary's. Kickoff is slated for 12:30 p.m., according to present reports.

The Rams should loom as slight favorites to defeat the California yearlings, for they have already played two games, while the Frosh has yet to be seen in action, only having two weeks of practice to be molded into a starting unit.

The material on the Cub squad this year is not exceptional, and is not on a par with last year's squad. It is the smallest yearling squad in the history of the university, with only 50 freshmen on the roster. Eighteen of these men, however, won all star recognition while playing in high school. Outstanding of these is Billy Reinhard, brother of Bob, the outstanding varsity tackle for the Bears, who is a fast and shifty halfback, and a better than average passer, who can find his way around the football field; Pete Hansen, a tackle, who played with the much talked about Johnny Petrovich at Alhambra High; Anthony Messina, an All American halfback prepster from the southland; Caxton Rhodes, an All City guard from Lowell, as well as Elrino Nehrer, an end, also coming from Lowell.

Injuries have harassed the practice sessions on the Berkeley campus, and it was necessary for Coach Clint Evans to make changes in his original starting lineup.

Most of his promising players are linesmen, but they had to be shifted into the backfield to plug the gaps left vacant as a result of these injuries. For many of them, it will be the first time in their careers in which they will have carried the pigskin.

The Rams appear to be in tip top shape following its bone crushing encounter with San Francisco State last week. Every player came out of the bruising battle in perfect physical condition, with nary an injury.

A noted improvement in the Rams' offensive play was the way in which the interference was cutting down would-be tacklers to open up tremendous holes, enabling the ball carriers to free themselves into the secondary defense for long gains. Another sidelight was the improvement in the kicking, which was notably done by Luke Lowell.

Tomorrow, the Rams will try to avenge the defeat handed them by the Cubs last year. They will have a decided edge in backfield talent over the Frosh, and with Jimmy Honnert and jolting Al Nauman always looming as breakaway threats, they should give the Cubs an afternoon of trouble.

With a diversified attack, and a wide open game planned by both coaches, it should prove an interesting one for both player and spectator as well.

Soccer

Ram, Bulldogs Meet Tomorrow

With the upset scored last week in their favor, the college soccer squad meets the San Mateo Bulldog tomorrow morning at 8 a.m. at San Mateo, Joe Lantagne, soccer mentor said in his release today.

Odds, Lantagne said, are even, although the Rams are slightly favored because of the hidden ability that sparked in the last encounter.

Subduing the high standing favorites, the Ram squad turned the tables in the last half of the game to win over the California Aggies last Friday afternoon.

First Game A Win

The first quarter played continually in Aggie territory seemed to furnish a score in their favor. But as if overplaying their scoring ability, the Agriculturist rebounded a short kick off a college player and tied the score. Not satisfied with the one point given them, the Rams managed to tally just as the gun sounded for the half.

Surprised at the turning of the underdog, the Californians entered the second half with determination to show the reason for their highly rated ability, only to have themselves set back as Coach Lantagne's men again crashed through their defenses and bolted the ball by the goalie.

Bowled Over

Recovering somewhat from the attack the underestimated collegemen were launching, the ball was brought down by the blue and gold and after a long kicking argument was put through for their second goal, the tally board chalked the game as 3 to 2 favoring the Rams.

Defeated last season by a close 2 to 1 score by the Bulldogs, Coach Lantagne looks to revenge, even though this is his first semester of coaching the sport in this college. Harassed by wind trouble and loss of men last year, the Rams handed the victory to the Bulldogs, but only after a struggle Tom Wilson, former coach, described as valiant.

Starting lineups will probably be the same as the Cal Aggie game, Lantagne said. Dan McHugh, standout in last week's game will make the trip, with Dustivich, goalie, and co-captains Bert Korn and Johnny Lazare.

Track Hopefuls Practice; Prospects Encouraging

Still training track hopefuls during gym periods and after classes, Russ Sweet, track coach, is eyeing the prospective cindermen with hopes of using many of them on next season's track team.

Though the Rams finished a poor fifth in conference competition last season, Sweet hopes to present a much stronger track outfit next semester.

Though track facilities haven't been completed at the present time, Sweet announced that steady progress has been made in the shaping and preparation of the oval around the main athletic field. Track and field facilities will be ready in the very near future, he disclosed.

All athletes interested in fall track are advised to see Sweet in the near future. Since most of the boys who show promise this semester will be given first chance at the open berths on the team, it is advisable to practice this season, Sweet said.

The Rams compete next Spring in competition with the leading junior colleges of Northern California. Letters are awarded to all local athletes who place in the conference meet, to be held some time next May.

Approximately 30 athletes turned out for track last season. Considering the inadequate practice facilities of last semester, it is remarkable that the boys placed at all in the conference meet, Sweet said.

About 50 athletes are practicing daily for track, and Sweet expects to see even a larger number on the field when next season's track schedule gets under way.

Bill Hart Again Heads Ice Skating Club

Bill Hart, popular Ice Skating Club president of last semester, was reelected at an election held last Friday at Winterland, Joseph Williams, club sponsor disclosed this week.

Other officers elected for this semester were as follows: Viola Miles, vice-president; John McAtee, treasurer, and Inge Lubahn, secretary, Williams said.

The main event for club members this semester, will be the semi-annual Ice Carnival, to be held in the Winterland Ice Rink, Post and Steiner Streets, sometime next January.

At present, club members are learning fancy skating, and ice waltzing. Williams extends an invitation for all students interested in the icy sport to join the club. Admission prices to the Winterland rink are 25 cents with skates, and 40 cents without.

"Students who don't know how to skate are welcome to join the club," Williams added. "We will be glad to teach them to skate." Aileen Kinkel, women's skating instructor, has been of great help to club members this semester, Williams said.

Though the carnival won't be held until next January, Williams requests all students who possess figure skating ability to see either himself or Hart in the near future.

Since plans for the carnival are not complete at the present time, Williams couldn't definitely list the events which are to appear on the program. But he did say that a prize would be offered to the best skating couple at the event. The prize will be free admission to Tuesday ice waltz classes, he said.

Meanwhile, the club is meeting regularly every Friday afternoon at Winterland, Williams said.

Cagers To Open Intramurals; 11 Clubs Enter

Opening round of the basketball intramural tournament will be at Balboa Park October 7, Bob Bush, intramural manager, announced today.

Commenting on the large sign-up, Bush said the following organizations had entered the competition:

Beta Tau, Chinese Students Club, Foresters Club, Japanese Students Club, Newman Club, Phi Mu Gamma, Police Training Club, Pre-Medical Students, Ramblers, Rifle Club and Tri-Epsilon.

Play will continue, Bush said, for the next two weeks on Mondays through Thursdays. Managers of the above teams are advised to watch the bulletin board for information and schedules regarding games. The board is located on the flag pole in back of the college, he said.

Softball schedules will be posted Friday, October 4. Softball managers should also watch the board for information, Bush pointed out.

Because of the new surroundings, the intramural sports program has been put on an experimental basis this semester, Louis Conlan, men's sports adviser, announced last week. In addition to basketball and softball, it is planned to hold boxing competitions.

Intramural advisers have announced that every participant will be given a thorough physical examination before entering any activity.

Since the physical education department of the college has been allotted $125 for intramural activities, awards will be given to winning teams and contestants, it was also reported.

Initiative Lack Denied By Officers

Denying a lack of initiative on the part of class officers, as suggested by a recent Guardsman columnist, Alden Thorogood, High Sophomore president, announced today that the sophomores are planning a gala sophomore week.

Referring to The Guardsman comment, Thorogood said:

"It has been stated that last term's classes were making plans for various activities before the semester was two weeks old. Just how many of these plans were completed?"

Continuing, he said, "The high soph officers are holding fire on completion of plans for activities until we know the definite degree of success to be expected."

This semester's Sophomore Week will be one long remembered in the college, Thorogood promised. "We are planning a series of novel and entertaining events that will become traditions of sophomore week."

An integral part of college social life, Sophomore Week has always provided the highlights of the semester. The week of events has always been topped off by the high soph formal, which last semester was held at the California Country Club. Queen of the formal was sophomore sweetheart, Mary Bartholomew, who won the title in a close election.

If Shaw doesn't know what swing is, then how does he know he isn't playing it? Shaw stated that he wanted men to play modern music. The best definition of modern music types are, sweet and swing. After hearing Mr. Shaw play we definitely know he has a modern band, and also that it is not a sweet one.

This leaves us but one alternative—that Artie Shaw has a swing band.

• Traditions

Editor, The Guardsman:

The Guardsman mentioned the other day the need for some traditions such as places reserved only for sophomores etc. In the humble opinion of your scribe there are one or two subjects which are much more fitting as tradition establishing material.

The first is a matter of courtesy to the other students and concerns a very prevalent problem. I mean the habit of certain groups congregating at the foot of the main stairs in the corridor and block traffic to such an extent that only one column of persons may pass. A tradition that no student ever stops in the middle of the hall to talk to another might be very fitting and it would also remove a large part of the trouble experienced by many students in changing classes. Ram's Horn shows many signs of this trouble.

Another subject for the establishment of a tradition is the distance from San Jose and Ocean Avenues to the college itself. Stanford University has established such a tradition and finds it very fitting. Ah yes! The tradition. When any student possessing an automobile passes a certain point in Palo Alto he always stops to see if there are any students waiting there for a ride to the campus; if so, he offers them a lift. The same situation applies in the reverse direction also.

Now I am sure no one will deny that the students of SFJC are able to walk from San Jose and Ocean to the college, but if those who have cars will stop to pick up those who have not, they will find that their number of friends will increase and they will enjoy their college life more.

There are some who will say that I am lazy and just looking for a ride. The fact that I own and drive my own car should stop them however.

• Wanted: Canned Music

Editor, The Guardsman:

This afternoon, while passing away some free time at the Book Store, an idea popped into my head that what we need in school is a recording machine in the cafeteria for the enjoyment of the students. Then those people who are forced to take the long march down to the Book Store or Ramshack just to hear a few of their favorite songs could merely jaunt to the cafeteria, drop a nickel in the slot and hear music to their heart's content. So, in spite of the numerous requests for escalators and various other things throughout the school, couldn't some little thing be done for us music lovers?

Last Day To Claim Book Exchange Texts Or Money

Released today was a list of students who must call for their texts or money from sold texts at the Women's Service Society book exchange, Mildred Bartosiewski, WSS president, announced.

Those students include H. Bretelme, Elliot Blue, Louis Hun Lee, Keith Groswird, Frances Chin, Anne Eck, D. J. Devine, Shirley Folden, Carlos Ugarte, Jon Clay, A. E. Wikstrom, Frank Neustadt, Lillian Wong, Muriel Jacobson, Ruth Loe, David Sparker, Dan McHugh, R. Armstrong, and Bill Rybensky, Miss Bartosiewski said.

"If those students do not call for their money or their books back by this afternoon, they will relinquish their rights to them," Miss Bartosiewski declared. "We feel that we have given adequate warning to them concerning this matter."

The WSS is planning various activities for this semester, she added, declaring that plans were still in a formulative stage.

Students In Terminal Business Subject Of Williams Thesis

For her Master of Arts thesis from Stanford University, Mildred J. Williams, instructor in the business department of the college, wrote a Follow-up Study of Terminal Business Students at San Francisco Junior College.

"The purpose of this study was to find out what the terminal business students had been doing since they left San Francisco Junior College," she said.

Miss Williams states in her thesis that questionnaries had been sent out to the 452 students who after completing one or more semesters in the college had definitely withdrawn from the college business course.

Students Enroll For Purpose

It is also revealed that 92 per cent of the students had a definite occupational choice at the time they entered junior college and that this indicated they had a real purpose for registering.

"Students who had withdrawn from college before being graduated did so mainly 'to accept a job,' 'to look for a job,' and because they had difficulty in arranging their programs because of the scattering of building," Miss Williams commented.

It was also noted in Miss Williams' thesis that many of the students upon leaving college after graduation had accepted part time positions with salaries ranging from $15 to $150 per month. The highest salaries found were $375 and $200 by two men and $120 by a woman.

Miss Williams explains that the primary reason why 24 per cent of the students left their first jobs were because of "no chance for advancement" and "to accept a better-paying position."

"Junior College Beneficial"

These are only a few of the points which Miss Williams emphasizes in her thesis. She concludes, however, with the following statements: "On the whole, the students felt that their junior college training had been a little more than moderately valuable. In fact 42 per cent said that it had been 'extremely' beneficial."

"Suggestions made most often by the students for the improvement of the business department were: (1) have the classes smaller so that more individual attention can be given; (2) offer more work in office machines, especially in bookkeeping machines; (3) give students an opportunity to get practical experience before going out for jobs; (4) have the classes in one building instead of scattered over the city."

Reorganization

Mowbray Heads Welfare Group

Reorganization of the welfare committee for this semester under John Mowbray, high freshman class president, has been announced by Lyle Shultz, Associated Students president.

"Because of the split of the committee into both a welfare committee and a yearbook committee, we have decided to make the division official," Shultz declared.

New members of Mowbray's committee are to include Loretta Egan, chairman of last semester's welfare committee, Barbara Brown, Jim Honnert, Dorothy Daft, Jim Hilgersen and Dan McHugh, he added.

"McHugh, who was previously announced as head of the welfare committee is devoting his time to the yearbook," Shultz said. "Since McHugh is primarily interested in that activity, he prefers to spend most of his time with that activity."

Complete information concerning the welfare committee's plans for the semester are indefinite as yet, Shultz said, but they will be announced soon.

Paint Technology Students Visit National Lead Plant

Students of the paint technology course in the college were guests yesterday of the Melrose Plant of the National Lead Company in Oakland, Walter D. Forbes, faculty adviser for the course announced.

This plant is one of the two white lead plants in this area, according to Forbes.

AWS To Honor High School Seniors At November Teas

Postponed until the week following the college dedication ceremonies on November 10, plans for the Associated Women Students' teas honoring high school seniors are nearing completion, announced Dean Margaret Dougherty, adviser of the group.

"Because of the large attendance expected, 20 girls from each San Francisco high school and their class advisers, we have decided to hold the traditional event on two consecutive days," Miss Dougherty declared.

"Feature of the teas will be conducted tours through the building and grounds, and we wish to have efficient guides. The women of the AWS are at present learning as much about the new campus as they can so that they will be able to make the tours as interesting as possible," she added.

The other committees in the process of organization are those for reception and refreshments.

Dr. John Menke Reports Progress In Cancer Resaerch

Dr. John F. Menke, whose recent experiments in cancer research at Stanford University Hospital may determine a cause of cancer, is the husband of one of the college's science department instructors, Sue Waller Menke.

Results of Dr. Menke's experiments were published in the last issue of Science, official publication of the American Association for the Advancement of Science. Through the extraction of human tumors, a substance was obtained which, when injected into mice, produced tumors, Dr. Menke found.

Dr. Menke has definitely stated that he does not claim to have proved discovery of the cause of cancer. Repeated tests are necessary for such proof, which tests Dr. Menke intends to make.

Mrs. Menke came to the college as an instructor in biological sciences when it opened in 1935. She and Dr. Menke were married in 1937 and went to Baltimore, where Dr. Menke was completing studies at Johns Hopkins Medical School. Mrs. Menke studied with him and aided him in his research there.

In 1939 Dr. Menke was asked to accept an appointment at Stanford University Hospital.

While Thinking

COLLEGE

IT looks like the college will be filled with bells, bells, bells for the next few weeks. (See story in column three.)

Seriously though, it is only fair that the students cooperate and give this new passing system a chance to prove itself one way or the other.

The fact that administration officials held a meeting to discuss ways and means of clearing up the muddle, is in itself heartening for it proves that the administration, as in the past, is more than willing to cooperate in any student problem.

It does not seem logical that this new system can be made to work any better than the system we have now for there is hardly any change made at all. The accuracy of this statement however, can be more readily determined a week or two hence.

We know we are expressing the views of the majority of the students of the college when we say that it is to be hoped that definite action to straighten out the situation, will be taken very soon.

IT seems strange that a great many of the students of the college are unable to perceive the handwriting on the wall.

There are still many who continue to loan their student cards to others without thought of the consequences of their act.

Since the folly of doing this has been mentioned several times before it is hardly necessary to go into that phrase again.

It might be well to point out however, that the students who ignore the rules set down for the use of students cards are hurting only themselves.

The judicial committee this semester is functioning better than it ever has before. Members of committee is seriously attempting to curb violations of the college rules and they aren't fooling either.

They have a tough job on their hands and deserve the cooperation of the Associated Students.

Warning note: The identifications committee will be on the door Friday night so about the most unwise thing one could possibly do is loan his card to someone, that if he expects to get it back.

THE exhibits of the floriculture classes that are reposing in glass encased compartments in the halls are very beautiful.

The only objection to them is that they give a rather sad and somber appearance.

ANYONE planning to go on the Sacramento excursion ought to ask the older college students who went two years ago about it.

The reports of the swell time had on the last excursion are still being circulated. We don't see how the Southern Pacific can manage to repeat the performance this time, for it was rumored that the last excursion just about took the train apart and spread it around the countryside.

THE college intra-mural department is really functioning. Already many applications for participation have been received and plans are rapidly shaping for the forming of a league.

It is interesting to note that this is the first time the college has attempted anything along this line on such a large scale. Also interesting is the progress that is being made along these lines.

Sacramento Game

Pep Rally Set For Tomorrow; Singer Featured

To create spirit and sell tickets for the Sacramento game Friday, October 18, a rally will be held tomorrow in the main court to the rear of the building at 12 o'clock, Pete Aydelotte, rally committee head, announced this week.

Don White, winner of the recent singing contest to select a singer for junior college night at the Palace Hotel, will be a featured entertainer at the rally.

Other entertainment, not known yet, has been planned.

Tickets On Sale Now

Tickets for the trip to Sacramento are on sale now and may be obtained from Aydellote, Bernardo Ferrari, Merrill Steele, Joseph Bryan, William Menary, Lyle Shultz, Alden Thorogood, Bob Org, or from the Associated Student office, Room 169, Aydelotte said.

Price for the round-trip has been set at $1.80. Students selling the tickets may be identified by some sort of arm-band or lapel insignia not yet determined.

Dancing Car Included

Train accommodations and a dancing car are to be at the disposal of the college students who accompany the football team on the trip. Bernardo Ferrari, chairman of the accommodations committee, announced.

At least 200 reservations must be made by October 16 before the special train can be guaranteed, according to Ferrari.

It is hoped by the rally committee that tomorrow's rally will give real impetus to the ticket sales.

More Staff Members Needed For CAB Publication

Additional members for the staff of Cabby, Club Advisory Board bulletin, are being sought, Bob Ogg, CAB president said this week.

Authorized representatives to the club board who wish to serve on the publication are asked to see Theorora Wong, acting editor, who added that reporters and typists are needed for the staff of this semester.

Because of new arrangements for the mimeographing of Cabby, all copy must be handed in not later than the Friday immediately following a meeting of the CAB, Miss Wong announced. Clubs desiring news of its activities in the issue of October 15 therefore must submit their information today, while the deadline following will be October 18.

October 15, date of the next club board meeting, is also the deadline for the filing of applications for renewal of club charters, Ogg reminded. Those clubs which fail to file such applications automatically become suspended, according to CAB ruling.

"Several clubs failed to meet the deadline set last semester," Ogg commented, "and were not recognized in the student body setup."

Day Of Reckoning Near; Cinches Now On Their Way

By EVE BURKEY

Those things are on their way . . .

There's probably one right now nestling cozily on your doorstep.

Maybe you won't be overjoyed to see it, maybe you'll even stare a trifle cross-eyed at it. That doesn't matter. What matters is that the college hasn't forgotten you!

For, this semester, cinches can no longer be considered the plague they were in former times. You, by the mere receipt of a cinch, are assured of an honored place on some moldy roll of fame. Even if at the moment, you view with alarm, in the future you will be able to point with pride at the possession of one of the first cinch notices ever released from the new college!

Think of the care, the hours of heartbreaking toil on the part of the faculty and registrar's office in getting out these . . . things. They've been wearied by the strain, of course. They've maybe been tempted to call it a day and omit sending your instructor's slight token of esteem. Who would have known the difference? Yes, it must have been quite a temptation, but luckily for you, the college's staff is made of sterner stuff. With a feeble gasp, a final stomp was licked and your cinch was sent out to cheer you along with the rest of the college. Inspiring, huh?

You're entitled to your share of the credit too, don't forget. It couldn't have been a cinch (no puns intended or should be inferred).

The endless hours of cutting, the countless blank pages of bluebooks. Maintaining such a stiff pace was doubtless a struggle, but you too were made of stuff!

Down through the years, the hall of Balboa Park will echo to the chant of your prowess at garnering a "first edition." Your name will be murmured with awe by future generations. Of those who passed no trace. . . .

A word of consolation to those few whom malignant fate denied a cinch—Cheer up! All is not yet lost.

There's another midterm coming!

Five Minute Controversy

Class Interval Stands In Spite Of Objections; Mohr To Introduce New Remedy

A system of bells that will ring at exactly five minutes before the hour for dismissal of classes has been instituted by the administraion, J. Paul Mohr, college registrar, announced this week.

The system is an experiment in an attempt to reach a decision on the current five minute class interval controversy.

Bells are scheduled to ring so that each class will be allowed the full five minutes between classes. "I feel that it is possible for students to get from one class to another in five minutes," Mohr said.

The experiment was suggested at an administration meeting held last Friday to discuss the problem.

The new system is to begin sometime this week, as soon as the bells can be regulated.

At the end of two weeks, another administration meeting is scheduled to review the situation and make a final decision.

The action was taken in response to complaints from students and faculty that the class interval was too short to allow enough time to get to one's next class and to discuss problems with instructors.

The following are some of the statements made by various faculty members:

"I don't have to run between classes myself because of my schedule, but I can't see why we should have this situation when California and Stanford, and others seem to be getting along fine with the ten minute interval."

"Ten minutes is a good idea. I think that the students ought to have time to get around and not be late. Tardiness is a bad habit."

It seems to me that the establishing of five minutes between classes does not show a very complete knowledge of the many angles of the situation."

"There is enough rush in modern life as it is without adding to it by making us rush madly from place to place."

The students felt as follows:

"Some instructors don't give the assignment for the next day until their fifty five minutes is up."

"Too many teachers count on tardiness."

"It's just like high school except that we don't have a home room."

"Tardiness encourages cutting."

"I have to run to my next class and even then I am usually late."

"One of my instructors gives me 1500 words to write if I come into the room while the starting bell is ringing."

"Horrible, because it is impossible to see instructors about special work and still get to your next class without coming in late and disturbing the class."

Honor Society

Names of 47 students eligible for Alpha Gamma Sigma, college honor society, were released this week by Alice C. Cooper, club adviser, as follows:

This list includes transfer students and those entering from high school with gold seal on their diplomas.

The next meeting of Alpha Gamma Sigma will be held shortly after this mid-term period. At that time election of officers will take place, according to Miss Cooper.

Miss Cooper asked that anyone eligible for Alpha Gamma Sigma and not mentioned in the above list communicate with her or the registrar's office.

Plans For Cooperative Dormitories In Progress

Formation of plans for the establishment of seperate cooperative dormitories for men and women of the college to be located in this vicinity, forms the initial activity of the Welfare Committee this semester, according to Lyle Schultz, Associated Students' president.

By corresponding with various colleges that have dormitory facilities, the Welfare Committee members hope to gain information that will be valuable to them in formulating plans for the establishment of cooperative dormitories, Schultz said.

Reorganization of the membership of the Welfare Committee was accomplished this semester so that it now includes, John Mowbray, chairman, Loretta Egan, Barbara Brown, Jim Honnert, Dorothy Daft, Jim Hilgersen, and Dan McHugh.

William Goss is the adviser to the group this semester.

Reorganization of the welfare committee was necessary this semester because, according to Schultz, there was a split of the committee into both a Welfare Committee and a yearbook committee.

Mohr Announces Advisers To Meet Tonight

An advisers meeting will be held this evening at 7:30 p.m. in Room 204, J. Paul Mohr, registrar, announced.

At this meeting there will be a discussion about the advising program for the rest of the semester, and on October 15 there will be a meeting with the advisees, Mohr reported.

Last Tuesday evening there was a meeting with the instructors in the engineering department, Mohr said.

Plans were made for the present semester, and work was started in arranging of courses for the spring semester, Mohr added.

Enrollment in mechanical engineering 30 is now filled to capacity and so plans were being made for adjusting the situation to facilitate students entering in January, Mohr reported.

Low Soph Class Schedules Meeting Tomorrow, Rm. 169

Inviting all Low Sophomores interested to attend, Bill Williams, Low Sophomore president, announced a meeting of his officers to be held tomorrow at 4 p.m. in Room 169.

"I would appreciate it if the low soph members would offer suggestions as to the type of social activities they wish for this semester as we will try to formulate future plans at this meeting," Williams said.

Definitely scheduled for Friday, December 13, is a Low Sophomore-sponsored dance, according to Williams. No location has been selected as yet he said.

Tentative plans for a Low Soph night at the St. Francis Hotel on November 15, a swimming party, and a skating party were also revealed by Williams.

All these events, he noted, must be clear through the Social Committee before definite announcements can be made.

Lost Articles Available At Registrar's Office

Lost articles may be claimed in the Registrar's office or in 126, Margaret Dougherty, dean of women recently announced. "Many things have been found that have not been claimed," she said.

A 17 jewel gold wrist watch with initials E.W.D. was lost in the vicinity of one of the gym locker rooms. A reward for the return is given. Return to the Registrar's room or to Room 126.

Music-Makers

College Band To Meet Friday In Men's Gym

With more than 30 students evincing a willingness to help form a college band, arrangements have been made with Madison Devlin, music instructor at Lowell High School, for a meeting Friday afternoon in the lecture room of the men's gymnasium at 4:15, Dean Edwin C. Browne said this week.

Following this meeting, rehearsals under Devlin's leadership will be held every Friday at this time, Browne added. Everyone who owns and plays a band instrument is invited to join the group, the dean declared.

"For many years we have hoped to promote a band, but we could not because of lack of room facilities and teaching staff," he commented. "This first attempt, it is hoped, will presage a very bright future for the band." Devlin, who is volunteering his services toward this aim, is well known for his work at Lowell, the dean said, adding: "Mr. Devlin's Lowell High School band has played for the junior college at various Armistice Day games and student assemblies, and his personal acquaintance with many of the students makes him no stranger."

This attempt to form a student band was first conceived a few ago when the college yell leaders conferred with Browne concerning a band for the football game with San Francisco State on September 27. Browne was chiefly instrumental in the organization of plans for promoting this activity.

Student leaders, pointing out that the college has had to make use of high school bands in the past, expressed the hope that this institution will be represented by a first-class group of music-makers of its own in the very near future.

Yearbook Name Winner Announced This Week

Selection of the winning name from those submitted in the yearbook naming contest which closed last week, will be finished sometime this week on an unannounced date by a committee of judges, according to Ted Green, business manager of the yearbook publication.

Dan McHugh is the chairman of the judges committee which includes, President Archibald J. Cloud; Francis J. Colligan, faculty member; Alden W. Smith, college instructor, Ted Green, business manager; Len Gross, editor of The Guardsman; Dorothy Trood, editor of the yearbook; Lyle Schultz, Associated student president.

"Many good names have been submitted," Green said, "and it will be difficult to choose the winning one."

Student whose name for the yearbook is selected, will receive a complimentary copy of the yearbook and will have the honor of knowing that the name he has submitted will become the permanent title of the yearbook for all future publications.

Also underway is a photography contest, whereby action shots of football and other sports will be accepted for publication, Lillian Hoyle, publicity representative announced.

All photographs submitted must be 8 by 10 inches and may be turned in to the student body office, Room 169. Student who submits the prize-winning photograph will receive a complimentary copy of the yearbook, she said.

Need was also expressed by the committee for staff artist. Anyone interested should apply at once.

High Sophs Look To Record Week; Search For Novelties

Planning a record sophomore week, the high sophs, under the direction of their officers, are working out ideas for novel entertainment, Alden Thorgood, high soph president, said today.

None of the plans has been approved by college authorities he said, and therefore, the sophomores are not ready as yet to announce their exact nature.

The sophomore are also working on the installation of several traditions which, according to Thorgood, the college lacks for its new building.

From Chicago To Coronado

Cloud Returns From Parley On Junior College Courses

President Archibald J. Cloud returned to the college last Wednesday from a convention of prominent junior college leaders in Chicago only to leave again at week's end for the annual convention of Superinendents of Schools at the Hotel Coronado in Coronado.

Delegates to the Chicago convention were selected from all over the country to report just how their colleges were attacking their particular problems, especially in regard to semi-professional or terminal courses.

In all, 10 junior colleges, from all over the United States, were represented at the convention of the National Commission of Junior College Terminal Education.

Interest Keen Among Educators

The interests of the nation's educational leaders in furthering terminal education is evident from the wide scope of meetings which are taking place throughout the country, President Cloud declared.

These leaders are particularly interested in developing courses such as hotel management, business training, and others which have as their immediate object the satisfactory employment of the student upon graduation from junior college, President Cloud continued.

Efforts Successful

The success of these efforts can be seen in the increasing number of terminal courses and the recognition of their value by a growing amount of educators. Student appreciation of the two-year courses is but one more token of their success, he added.

The Hotel and Restaurant Division of the college, which has attracted wide-spread recognition, and the way it has tackled its special problems was prominent in convention discussion.

President Cloud is expected to return from Southern California by the end of this week.

Identification Committee To Be At High Frosh Dance

Warning students against the illegal use of Associated Student cards, Jean Arnold, social committee announced that admission to the high freshman dance this Friday night at the Terrace Plunge Room of the Fairmont Hotel will be one membership card per couple.

Because in the past students have been caught and punished for using a card not their own, this warning was issued from the social committee to remind those planning to attend the dance that an identification committee will be present to prevent the misuse of cards.

"The student body dances are always so well supported that crowded conditions usually occur; therefore, we must keep out those who are not entitled to admission," Miss Arnold commented. "This semester, because of the increased enrollment, larger crowds are anticipated at all social functions," she said.

The dance will feature the music of Larry Cannon and his orchestra, Miss Arnold said. "Many students have shown a preference for the sort of music this orchestra is known for," she added, "and many will like the setting of the Terrace Plunge Room at the Fairmont also."

Dedication

Exhibits In Preparation

Additional time allowed by the postponement of the college dedication to November 10 is being used to beautify the grounds further, and to prepare the exhibits which will be a feature of the open house following the dedication, Lloyd D. Luckmann, Faculty Association president, announced this week.

Scilpturing May Be Ready

"It is anticipated that the landscaping will be completed by that time," Luckmann declared. "That the sculptured heads of Thomas Edison and Leonardo Da Vinci which had been promised the college, may be in place by November, is also possible. More definitely set is the unveiling in the cafeteria of a ram's head carved from redwood by Dudley Carter, Exposition artist, whose work will be presented at the faculty dinner of November 7."

Luckmann emphasized that students should help keep the building in good condition by refraining from defacing the walls and by keeping the general premises clean.

Keep Building Clean

"Since this will be the one day when the greatest number of citizens will inspect the building, it is most important that the building therefore be presented in its very best condition, he said. The services of the building will demand double the present maintenance staff. The Board of Education, however, is cooperating in making this additional staff possible."

Student committee to help ready the grounds for Dedication Day is headed by Jean Arnold, Associated Students vice president, who is now organizing a volunteer group.

Student Cooperation Urged

"It should be a matter of pride to the college students that this is the most modern and best equipped junior college in the west," Luckmann commented, "and consideration should be shown to the general appearance of the building. I hope that students will cooperate with Miss Arnold's committee and will help to maintain the campus in its most presentable aspect."

most modern and best equiped junior college in the west," Luckmann, commenter, "and consideration should be shown to the general appearance of the building. I hope that students will cooperate with Miss Arnold's committee and will help to maintain the campus in its most presentable aspect."

The necessity for a large turnout of students and faculty members to make the dedication ceremony a real success was reiterated by Luckmann.

Spirit Of Democracy Preserved By "Substance"

This editorial was reprinted from the "Daily Californian," issue of September 17, 1940.

THERE has been during these past few months an increasingly pronounced tendency on the part of a great many American intellectuals to define democracy solely in terms of abstract moral values. Generally, this has been the result of the belief that the ills of the world today are basically spiritual; that totalitarian doctrines, whether Fascist or Communist, have swept into prominence primarily because the negations of their political religions have not been met with an opposing positive faith; that such a positive faith is the only weapon that in the long run can conquer totalitarianism.

We share in this view to the extent that we agree that the fundamental requirement of the times, if democracy is to survive, is the formulation of a dynamic philosophy striking at the very foundations of totalitarianism. But we do not believe that such a philosophy can consist solely of the abstract moral values which democracy has been made out to represent. It must first of all be an economic and social philosophy based on the recognition that the disease from which our world now suffers is a real and thoroughly materialistic ailment which faith alone cannot cure.

Democracy as a set of moral values is an age old institution and these moral values have been in decline primarily because the implications they present have not been established in our economic and social life. Emphasizing the moral values and ignoring their economic implications is evading the basic issue and playing into the hands of the anti-democratic forces. It means upholding the spirit of democracy while at the same time making no effort to give some substance to democracy.

We are convinced that the spirit cannot long survive in our highly industrialized society unless it is accompanied by economic security. Especially in this time of crisis it must be demonstrated that such a combination of spirit and substance is attainable. We must gear our economic and social life to the requirements of the times without sacrificing the Bill of Right in the process. This can be done if we embark on a program of national economic planning somewhat like those which have been outlined in detail by Mordecai Ezekiel and Stuart Chase.

Student Band Coming Up; Cheery Sign Of Future

NOTICE that a student band is in the process of organization is welcome news to the college. There has been much discussion of the need for a band for a long time. In past semesters, every time football season has rolled around, students and faculty alike have recognized the value of a band.

Now it appears that a college band is actually acquiring tangibility. Decrial of college rooting spirit at games should wane as the band moves in to take its place beside the cheer leaders.

Of course, the band cannot be expected to develop over night. The first rehearsal is not until next Friday. The task of organization will not be an easy one; the instructor delegated to the job will hold no sinecure. Anyone playing any kind of band instrument will be welcomed at the rehearsals.

Even though an actual band is some distance ahead, it is pleasing to know that an agency well able to foster needed college spirit is on order. It is another forward step for the college.

Perhaps it is peering a little too distant into the future, but, even so, we cannot help hoping that the band is drawing us one step nearer to the time when the college may also boast of an orchestra.

Meet The Students

By DOROTHY PIERCE

"I WISH you were a man. I'd feel more free in talking to you." So spoke Jack O'Brien, this week's interviewee to the mere "woman" reporter.

He was discussing, when this female intruded, the presidential election. This will be the first year Jack has a chance to vote, and he intends to cast it in the right direction.

"Which is right?" inquired a puzzled spectator. Replied O'Brien, "Well, I don't think many of you would be interested in which candidate I chose. Anyway, I don't wish to say."

About this time, your observing reporter noticed a red, white, and blue campaign button; and it did not mention Franklin Roosevelt either.

Next came the regular stock questions.

"Like dancing?"

"I enjoy WATCHING people dance."

"Ideal woman?"

"None. Just so that she can cook." (Oh, dear, where is that cook book. Try looking under that Glamour magazine.)

"What do you enjoy doing most?"

"Ah, now you've hit upon something. I really enjoy listening to George Gershwin's music, especially his 'Rhapsody in Blue'."

Then followed a long discussion in which he talked like a dictionary on its best behavior. Names, songs, and words came pouring forth which this interviewer had never heard—or even thought. Anything over two syllables is greeted with a blank look.

From music the discussion turned to sports. Jack plays none but is a newspaper follower of pugilistic art.

Final impressions left by O'Brien makes one feel that he comes to college DEFINITELY for an education. He has the type of mind you can sharpen your own on.

MICROSCOPIC photography's showing clearly objects 1/150,000 of an inch in length, is an important part of the experimental work being conducted by the University of New Hampshire's eutomology department.

In a recent salon organized in the biological institute, the department exhibited pictures of 5,000 diameters, demonstrating work being done in a study of emulsions. Even the tiniest globules, invisible under the highest-powered microscope, were clearly outlined in the prints.

According to Walter C. O'Kane, department head, "if the land owned by the University of New Hampshire (about 1,300 acres) were enlarged in the same proportion that the globules are it would cover the entire surface of the world."

Southwestern University's centennial anniversary marked 100 years of higher education in Texas.

Founding of a college in Texas was the idea of Dr. Martin Ruter, a Methodist minister who came to Texas in 1837 from Pennsylvania. The institution was named Ruterville College.

In the next two decades three other institutions of higher learning were established by the Methodist Church—Wesleyan College at San Augustine, McKenzie College in Clarksville, and Soule University in Chappell Hill.

The Spectator

The Spectator, this issue, was written by Barbara Budd.

THE growth of a Great Woman and the Growth of a Great Nation, might well be the sub-title for Queen of Destiny, now showing in technicolor at the Clay Theatre.

This life story of a Queen's love for her Prince Consort is humanly revealing as it involves the intimate details of her personal diary. It is a fitting sequel to Victoria the Great, giving, as it does, a more comprehensive interpretation of the soul of a Queen—and the soul of a nation.

Anna Neagle plays the title role of Victoria with the sincere emotional understanding of a consummate artist. She interprets the spreading fan of years in the life of this great Queen with a realism that is magnificent and convincing in its humanity of spirit. Prince Albert is played by Anton Walbrook with vibrant strength and sincere pathos. He is a perfect foil for the delicate loveliness and spirited fire of Miss Neagle. The Duke of Wellington is masterfully portrayed by C. Aubrey Smith.

The story begins in 1840 with the young, beautiful, and impetuous Victoria reading to Parliament an official announcement of her betrothal to Prince Albert of Saxe-Coberg. The marriage is brilliantly consummated in a setting of regal formality. Then develops the sympathetic unfolding of the life-experience of a man and a women between whom exists a strong enduring devotion. Although Victoria never forgets that she is Queen, imperiously upholding her royal rights and recognizing that her first duty is always to her nation, she is in private life a woman deeply in love with her husband. The symbol of this abiding love and unity of spirit is their first-born, a little Princess, and maternal joy and pride overshadows even the majesty of the throne.

The difficult adjustment of Albert, Prince Consort, is sympathetically portrayed. The English people find it hard to forget that he is a foreigner, a stranger among them, and tragically misunderstand him. He is shown some recognition with the opening of The Crystal Palace, the first of all the World's Fairs. This Exposition was the concrete expression of his vision and dream of uniting the peoples of the world in a cause of progress and understanding.

Albert's pitiful death causes Victoria to live in virtual retirement in the tragedy of her grief. After several years she finally returns to public life in answer to the need of her people.

The studied authenticity of historical facts, the grandeur of Buckingham Palace, Windsor Castle, Osborne House, and Balmoral give to this magnificent picture a background of important historical merit. The Charge of the Light Brigade, Crimean War episodes, and Disraeli's rare statesmanship concerning the Suez Canal are some of the major scenes. Lister, Tennyson, Dickens, Kipling, General Gordon and Florence Nightingale, are some of the names so splendidly woven into this great document in recognition of their particular contribution.

The Queen of Destiny is a beautiful love story. It is at the same time an historical epic, a dramatic document of a nation's strength and weakness, the tragic sequence of which might be said to be contemporary. The brilliant court costumes and jewels, the pageantry of royalty, and the poetical landscape of the Highlands becomes a superb setting for the magic of color photography.

What's Your I.Q.?

These excerpts of "misinformation" are again taken from the book entitled Boners, More Boners and Still More Boners, by Alexander Abingdon. The author compiled the statements from classroom recitations and examination papers.

Believe it or not, a number of these statements were made by college students!

1. The benefit of longitude and latitude is that when a man is drowning he can call out what latitude and longitude he is in and we can find him.
2. Georgia was founded by people who had been executed.
3. The reason why you see the smoke of a gun before you hear the report is because the smoke comes out before the noise.
4. If a brother or sister married and had a son, and the other brother married, the boy would be a son-in-law to the woman who the second brother married.
5. Now that the Chinese are civilized, they ought to no longer shave half their heads and wear a queue, because half the brain is cold because it is not covered with hairs, and the other half is hot because it is covered with hairs. Therefore the Chinese cannot think properly.
6. William Tell shot an arrow through an apple while standing on his son's head.
7. The wife of a duke is a ducky.
8. The spinal column is a collection of bones running up and down your back that keeps you from being legs clean up to your neck.
9. Gravitation is that if there were none we should fly away.

Strike Up The Band By Sullivan

On The Feminine Side

NO ONE can deny that social activities are piling up one on top of the other at an almost dizzy pace.

Friday night's dance is to be at the Terrace Room of the Fairmont Hotel, and, in keeping with the tradition of affairs honoring the freshman class, is informal.

For some reason, informal dances rate way up at the top in popularity with the college crowd. Although there is something definitely swanky about the Soph Formal's tuxes, formals, and corsages, one must admit there's a lot of fun in street-wear dances where one is not always on guard for fear of something catching on her skirt.

This season offers an almost limitless choice in selecting date dresses. Of course we all say this every fall, but never before do we remember such a tremendous variety in colors, materials, designs, and accessories. And, despite the war and generally troubled conditions, prices don't seem to have shot up out of range of the average college woman's pocket-book, praise be!

The old stand-by black is more than holding its own this year. In the season's pet jersey or in the always-good crepes, black is still the color where date dresses are concerned. There is something both sophisticated and naive in a plain black dress offset by a striking necklace or an unusual clip; a young black velvet bow in one's hair, if the hatless mode is followed, adds an extra touch.

Black is having strange and wonderful things done with it in color combinations. Vibrant tones of red, royal blue, kelly green, and a dull gold are especially stunning when teamed with a black background. We remember noticing one very smart dress at a college dance last week. It was simply made of black crepe with a fitted bodice and short, flared skirt, but near the neckline two pieces of red and turquoise jersey were draped to form a design. Rather startling, granted, but that woman's Fashion Quotient rated about 140.

Velvets and velveteens are beginning to hit their stride now. It may be a personal opinion, but there's something gala about either of those materials. Our own particular pet this year is brown velvet in one of those, soft doe's-eyes shades, if you know what we mean. Not only is brown the dark-horse in fall's color race, but it has an added something in lush velvet.

Red velveteen is super in date dresses. Of course, red is one of the season's hits in any material, but it has a knock-out quality in velveteen. There is an oddly flattering quality about the material to practically any type, for we've seen it on blondes and brunettes alike with the same grand results. Incidentally, colors in both velvet and velveteen are gorgeous this year—smoky grays, peacock blues, warm browns, startling golds—we could go on all night.

Just one word about the HAT situation. To wear or not to wear is the problem, but the decision is your own in the final analysis. If you prefer tucking a bow in your hair and forgetting about the whole thing, do it. If, on the other hand, you have a special weakness for those small, saucy dancing hats, wear them. No matter what Emily says, both the hatted and hatless styles are in favor at the college, so you can't go wrong. There are, however, some tricky new dancing hats this season that seem almost irresistible. We refer especially to those brilliant little toques and over-one-eye models of feathers and to iridescent velvet turbans for hat excitement.

Be that as it may, the dance is the thing, and we know that you will have a really good time.

NATIONAL NEWSPAPER

Week was last week. A simple statement, isn't it. Perhaps it is too simple. (If you feel such is the case, you may protest in the Ram's Horn). Simple or not, the words National Newspaper Week represent the observance of one of the nation's most respected and most feared institutions—The Newspaper.

Now this publication went over the intellectual side of journalism last week in a stirring editorial. Having dashed through Thomas Carlyle's Sartor Resartus, we feel qualified to write on another side of The Press—its utilitarian aspects.

You wastrels who spent your class time last semester in Union Square know what we mean. When it came time for you to recline on the usually damp sod of that pigeon paradise, what took the chill out of your lives, what cut down your cleaning bills? Need we answer.

At home, when you wish to start a fire; in the street, when it begins to drizzle; in the classroom, when you want to insult the instructor—everwhere do you find The Press pressed into service.

THE PRESS

holds many a cherished tradition. Most prominent of these is that The Press must be served. In the theaters, in the athletic stadiums, at the swankiest party, the best is none too good for the Gentlemen of The Press. These looks and deeds of sweet accord comes only because to insult The Press is to invite destruction, not out of any decent motive.

There is a tale revolving around newspaper circles of the cafeteria that once refused room service to a group of hard-working newspapermen toiling several floors above the establishment. The passing of the cafeteria was not even noted in neighborhood papers.

IT SEEMS STRANGE

that in a modern institution of this size, equipped with the best facilities that the city can afford, is lacking in the one thing that would make the lives of its students and officials happier and healthier.

Several members of The Guardsman, busily engaged in serving you, our public, attempted to obtain room service from the cafeteria. Unable to take time out to eat, their tongues lapping up the dust on the floor in agony, chasing the spots they saw before each other's eyes, these jilted journalists were denied room service. Two students hadn't had a bite in six hours. When the service was denied them, they had to be taken from the room, jibbering and clawing at the stuffy atmosphere.

It is rumored that the Dean was even denied service.

Is this situation to be tolerated? Is The Press to be served? Is this column going to continue?

Look around Friday.

RAM'S HORN

Two Letters Comment On Distribution

EDITOR'S NOTE:

Any student desiring to express an opinion on any subject is urged to use the Ram's Horn for this purpose. Letters should be left in the publication's office, Room 184. Deadline for the Tuesday issue is the preceding Thursday. Deadline for the Friday issue is the preceding Tuesday. All letters should be in by 10 a.m.

• Copies In Library

Editor, The Guardsman:

In answer to a letter from another student, I recently wrote a letter suggesting that the library make some provision for keeping back copies of The Guardsman on file for those students who are not able to afford a student-body card and hence do not get the paper. I was advised in the editor's comment to contact the librarian which I did, and she told me that I might have this worked out if I would leave my paper at the call-desk and also have a friend or two leave their papers. I have asked two people to do this, so there will be three copies of each issue of the paper available for one hour loan purposes from the loan desk. They may be had by requesting them. If the above copies do not prove enough, more people can be contacted who will leave their papers also. If this plan works out, I will be glad to try and put in some time on it. If there are no calls at the desk, we will discontinue leaving them. I guess from now on it is merely a matter of seeing whether it will be necessary for such a provision. The library eventually plans to have a paper rack such as is used in the public libraries. Until this time, the above plan will be used if deemed necessary.

• Paper Causes "Jam"?

Editor, The Guardsman:

Six months ago, back in the "good old days," a student of San Francisco Junior College, upon leaving a classroom, expected to find the halls "jammed" with fellow students. The California Extension Building was small and inadequate for the number of students attending. Although the congestion was annoying at times the students realized that nothing could be done because of the limited facilities. However, every attending student looked forward to the day when the new campus would be opened. How different things would be. No one need be late for classes. One would even have time between classes to exchange a few words with one's friends. Happier days were indeed on the way.

That dream did come true. It lasted approximately one week. That is, until the first edition of The Guardsman appeared. Where was it distributed? The most congested area in the building was chosen. Those students who, twice a week, must literally fight their way to and from the Cafeteria, know the conditions.

League Better Appreciated Were Games Spread Out

IT IS too bad, we think, that the LACC game and the Sacramento game had to be played on succeeding weeks. Some people actualy say they want to go to L.A. and Sac'to too. That takes mazuma, and many people haven't got that much mazuma. Besides that, many people had to dish out mazuma to go for the Cal Frosh game last week. Let's hope the league will be kind and spread out the out-of-town games so some can work and go to all of them. How about it, Mr. Conlan?

Knock-Me-Down-and-Bury-Me

Incidentally, our next game with LACC this Friday ought to be a knock-me-down-and-bury-me affair. For the first time since we don't know when, the Cubs managed a win over the Trojan Frosh, their traditional rival. This may not be so hot for us, they being hot and bothered about a fresh win, even though we are what we are. The Cubs' triple threat Leon McCardle deserted them for U.S.C. Incidentally, we saw Leon play during his high school career—we went to the same prep school.

Ackie and Arnie Say "Hell——O"

Glenn C. Ackerman looks forward to seeing Lee Eisan again, Arnie Spatt of the LA Collegian says. "Ackie" is the head coach of the Cubs. By the way, the traditional game was listed in our football league even before our college was even started, six years ago.

We are very fortunate to be able to watch our football squad practice by just going down to the field. In many universities and colleges, they have secret practices where doors are closed even to the press. Yet, having this privilege of seeing the squad in action for nothing, it seems that no one is interested enough to even spend a few minutes picking up pointers by watching. Perhaps if we closed the doors, the psychological effect may induce some guys to go down there. Quien Sabe?

Beaned, By Golly

To anyone who says that hockey is a sissy sport, there is one person who will disagree—and how. Ruby Klistoff, one of the more rabid fans of the sport became a little too rabid and was consequently beaned. Living in a world of the fourth dimension for five minutes, or so 'tis said, Ruby awoke and just said "whodunnit?" We wish we knew.

A Plug For The Tracksters

During football practices, there are a group of students who run circles around the gridstars. They are the unsung heroes of the track—those guys who run around the outer ring of the field. Russ Sweet, spikester mentor, usually leaves them to kick footballs with the gridders. All of which means nothing, but the tracksters need a plug anyway.

Clinty And Lee—In Stride

Head Coach Clint Evans of the yearling squad at the U. of C. had been doing the same thing that our coach, Lee Eisan has been doing since the Rams have put on suits . . . shifting positions of players. Inasmuch as this was the cubs' first game, and the outcome as it was, the LACC game, will be more on the "come-on-youse-guys" type of game.

New Gym Instructors Get Third Degree From Scribe

By JOE BRYAN

When introductions were in order somone forgot the new members of the physical education department.

Johnnie of Poly

Bespectacled John Brady is an example of a local boy making good. Brady is a former Mission graduate who attended several universities. They are U.S.F., California and Stanford in the order named. Brady takes over several of the classes which were formerly taught by "Dutch" Conlan, present Coordinator of Education. He emphasized the fact that he did not receive the position vacated by Conlan. Brady is the former coach of Washington High School, Centerville, in Alameda County.

Aileen Is Keen

The second is Aileen Kinkel, the new women gym instructor. After your reporter dodged a barrage on forehand and backhand drives to interview her the diminutive miss informed him that she was allergic to reporters from The Guardsman. After a little prompting she came through with the information desired. She is a Cal graduate. She teaches almost every course offered to women in the physical education line. This is her first real teaching assignment. She assumes the responsibilities held by Vera Spencer Olssen, who is still on leave of absence in Sweden.

Hurley Is Burly

Ends get positions on the college coaching staff. Joining Tom Wilson and Jack Gaddy on the staff is John Hurley, former Washington State end. Hurley takes over the duties of Terry Dearborn. He is the swimming coach and hopes to have a team ready for competition by next March.

Joe Is Oke

The dark husky fellow who coaches soccer is Joe Lantagne. He substitutes for Joe Amori on the staff. He is a former Stanford man. When Dutch Conlan was promoted Tom Wilson was made head basketball coach and Lantagne inherited the soccer team. In addition to his coaching activities Lantagne teaches hygiene.

A national dairy association has judged a University of Tennessee student as the champion cheese judger of the nation.

Work On Track Practice Pits Underway Soon

Work on the track practice pits is slated to get under way at once, Russ Sweet, college track and field coach, announced.

The pits will be on the edge of the football practice field, it is planned. The northwest corner of the field, where the clubhouse stands, will be given to pole-vault pits. In the center, on the west side, will be the high jump pits, and the broad jumpers will perform in the southwest corner of the field, the coach said.

At the present time, the javelin tossers have been working out with footballs, and the sprinters are practicing on the track.

This semester, Sweet expects to do little but build up for next semester. However, he commented, he has a few tentative weekend meets that will probably show him who is who on the track squad.

Practice is held Monday and Wednesday afternoons on the athletic field.

Tennis Intramurals Will Include Singles, Doubles

Following the complete sign-up of tennis candidates, the tennis intramurals will commence as soon as possible, Tom Wilson, tennis coach announced.

An elimination tournament will be staged to decide the winners of the singles and doubles tournament, Wilson said, and participants must win two out of three sets in order to receive the victor's trophy.

All students wishing to enter the tournament are requested to sign up.

Rams Invade Los Angeles In Traditional Clash; Cub Team Light, Fast, Strong

The Rams of San Francisco Junior College are scheduled to embark for the cinema capital Friday morning, where they will battle the diminutive Los Angeles City College eleven on Saturday afternoon in the huge Memorial Coliseum, the warring grounds of many an intersectional grid game.

Probably possessing the lightest squad in its history, the LACC'ans will display a potent attack, directed by Coach Glenn C. Ackerman. This is Ackerman's tenth year as head coach at Los Angeles City College, and all the opponents which have faced the Crimson Tide in the past will safely vouch that they played against a well directed team.

This was proved last week, when his eleven defeated the highly touted Trojan freshmen, although the men of Troy were heavily favored in the betting.

Crimson Forwards Light

The Crimson forward wall will probably be the lightest one the Rams will face all season, for the two tackles, John Sanchez, and Radiard Glaaney, who tip the scales around 212 and 204 pounds respectively, are the only ones in the starting lineup who weigh more than 200 pounds.

The guards, Richard Hottel and Tom Paxton, are exceptionally light, weighing in around 145 and 150 pounds. This is about 25 pounds less than the weight of an average guard should be on any football team.

Backfield Loses McCardle

The backfield was given a cruel blow with the announcement that Leon "Mickey" McCardle, a triple threater, who won All City honors for Los Angeles High School, made known his intention to enroll at the University of Southern California.

However, Coach Ackerman hunted around the campus for an able replacement to fill McCarle's shoes, and came up with Jackie Fellows, who also won All City honors for Los Angeles High. Fellows is 5 ft. 5 ins. tall, weighs 160 pounds, is fast and shifty, a better than average passer, who will be the main threat against the Rams. Fellows rounds out a very light backfield, for the three other members weigh in the vicinity of 150 pounds.

Rams Have Usual Backfield

Coach Lee Eisen announced that he would start his usual starting backfield composed of Al Nauman, Jimmy Honnert, Luke Lowell, and Dave Cunningham for this encounter.

This quartet should do a great deal of power driving through the light forward wall of the LACC'ans, but it shouldn't be forgotten, that this same line stopped the giant Trojans, whose offense usually consists of power plays. If stopped by the Crimson line, the Rams have sufficient passing prowess to go via the airlanes to secure touchdowns.

The Rams will leave San Francisco Friday morning for the southland, which will include a squad of 27 men, as well as managers, yell leaders, and members of the faculty. Any students wishing to make the trip may secure tickets for $9.30.

Basketball Heading Toward Two-Team Split

Within the next two weeks, the preseason basketball squad will be divided into teams, according to ability, Tom Wilson, college basketball coach, said this week.

Only one meeting of the class was held this week and that was not sufficient to get a line on his aspirants, he remarked.

The next two weeks will definitely see the group divided into varsity and junior varsity squads, Wilson promised, adding that the squads will be then cut further to make "strings" for the different teams.

This process of individual ranking will take place later in the semester, however, and for the present the segregation will be limited to forming squads, the coach revealed.

Wilson noted that two of last season's lettermen have signed into the preseason class. They are Bob Staynor and Joe Pfahnl. Both will be eligible next semester.

Pfahnl and Staynor were both guards last season and both won their block in basketball. As far as is known at the present, these are the only basketball veterans returning to the wars.

Pfahnl, a guard, was captain of 130 lb. Commerce High School team during his last year there. He has grown since then, he claims, and now is 5 ft. 11 in., weighing 160 lbs.

Staynor resides in the East Bay and played high school basketball in the Oakland league.

Women's Athletics

Splash Another Aquacade Say WAA Officials; Other Plans Speeded

Round-robin intramural speed and form swimming events will be the feature attractions of the traditional Women's Athletic Association Splash Party, which will be held on October 24, from 7:30 to 9 p.m., at the YWCA on Sutter Street, according to Barbara Smith, WAA president.

Invited to the affair are all the women of the college as well as members of the WAA. Price of admission, which will entitle the ticket-holder to swim in the pool, is 25 cents, Miss Smith said.

Arrangements for the evening entertainment include the running-off of the intramural contests first, then open swimming in the pool may be participated in by all those present, she said.

Clubs Enter Intras

Intramural teams will be made up of representatives from the various sororities and women's organizations of the college, Miss Smith said. "All those sororities who wish to enter teams in the intramural speed and form swimming competition are urged to notify Jane McKinnon, swimming club manager," Bertha Mae Keller, physical education instructor said.

Requirements are that each women's group must be represented by a team of five or six women, and these groups must make arrangements for the women representing them to wear one certain color of cap, for the purpose of better distinguishing contestants, Miss Keller announced.

Caps For Recognition

"It is important for the women's groups to notify us of the color of cap chosen, so that there will be no duplication of the same color by an opposing team," she explained.

"The WAA badminton club is the first organization to have submitted a team, and we are very anxious for other women's organizations to show their interest by notifying us of their intentions to participate in the intramural contests as soon as possible so that present plans for the intramural program may be completed. Synchronized swimming to the strains of phonograph music will be executed by a WAA swimming group," Miss Smith said.

Novelties Added

In addition to the intramural speed and form swimming there are plans being made, under the direction of Aileen Kinkel, physical education instructor, for novelty intramural competitive games, such as racing with a teaspoon in the mouth of the swimmer, and blowing up a balloon while swimming across the pool.

Since the WAA Spread at Sigmund Stern Grove earlier in the semester, took the place of the banquet which usually forms a finale to the annual Splash Party, there will be no banquet following the swimming program this year, Miss Keller said.

Badminton Playday Oct. 26 At Marin Junior College

Invited to the sectional badminton playday at Marin Junior College, on Saturday, October 26, at Kentfield, college gymnasium, is the Women's Athletic Association badminton club of the college, according to Barbara Smith, WAA president.

Also to participate in the playday are representative badminton teams from San Francisco State College, San Jose State College, Salinas, San Mateo, and Santa Rosa Junior colleges.

Sign Up At Kentfield

Registration of team members will be held at Marin, in the Kentfield gymnasium, from 8:20 to 9:20 a.m., and the badminton tournaments will be held from 9:30 to 1:30 p.m., Bertha Mae Keller, physical education instructor said.

"There are some good badminton players in the college, this semester", Miss Keller commented. "Since the college has been asked to send 4 singles teams and 5 doubles teams to the playday, those WAA badminton club members who have attended badminton practice periods regularly will have an opportunity of being selected to represent the college on one of the two teams," she said.

Interclub Tournies For Practice

There will also be inter-badminton club tournaments, to facilitate the selection of team members, which will be completed by October 11, according to Miss Keller.

"Since there will be a 30 cent lunch charge for the college representatives who attend the playday, WAA will attempt to subsidize at least part of the transportation expenses," Miss Smith said.

Women Faculty, Students Invited To Kiddy Party

In celebration of the sixth year anniversary of the Women's Athletic Association in this college, a six-year old kiddy party, to which all women students of the college are invited, will be held in the evening on November 5, Barbara Smith, WAA president revealed.

Diversions of the evening will include the playing of various kiddy games, such as hoop-rolling, kiddy car racing, rope-jumping, and jax playing. All are required to come in six-year old kiddy garb, faculty members as well as students, Miss Smith said.

Help Wanted . . . Faculty

"An S.O.S. is being sent out for some members of the women's faculty to volunteer to write a skit for presentation by the faculty at the kiddy party," Bertha Mae Keller said.

"Tentative title of the skit," she said, "is First School Daze Of The Faculty (Gay Nineties)." Mary Jane Learnard, assistant registrar has volunteered for a part in the skit, as well as Helen Kelley, college instructor, and Aileen Kinkel, physical education instructor.

This skit will be presented in the cafeteria where those who attend the party will adjourn to be served refreshments, after they have participated in the games to be played in the women's gymnasium, during the earlier part of the evening.

"Since women members of the faculty are to dress in kiddy garb too, there is a possibility that a prize will be offered for the youngest, old faculty member", Miss Keller said.

Courses on marriage and the family are being taught at more than 300 colleges and universities.

Nauman, Lowell, Taylor Lead Rams To End Long Standing Jinx; Defeat Cal Frosh 6-0

California Memorial Stadium, Oct. 5. Dynamite in the arms of Al Nauman, college quarterback and key offense man, and the glue-fingers of Luke Lowell and Herb Taylor blasted an jinx hat had been vexing he Rams since the opening of hte Cal Frosh-Ram game series. For the first time since the regime of Head Coach Leland Eisan, Ram mentor, the University of California Frosh were thrown back on their haunches, and hovering over them was a big Ram 6.

Six to nothing!! The team that supposedly pushed the varsity over the lot during scrum—the team with a mighty reserve of fifty men, were defeated by a fighting, charging, more game Ram eleven.

Defense Experiment Works

Using a new defense of a five-man-line against the offensively strong Cubs, Lee Eisan stymied the Frosh, who were used to a short secondary with two men backing the line. Relying on the open field running ability of Billy Reinhard, Coach Clint Evans of the Frosh team used mostly power plays off tackle, only to be met by a strong secondary backing up the line and a wide coverages of the flats that prevented the Reinhard-Bob Weeks passing combination to function properly.

The lone score came midway in the third quarter after a sustained drive through a heavy Cal Frosh line and two perfectly executed pass plays. Starting on his own 28 yard line, Lowell dropped back to kick after two unsuccessful attempts at the line by Nauman and Jim Honnert. Getting off a short punt, the ball was brought back and the Cubs penalized 15 yards for roughing the kicker.

Nauman bucked the line for 1 yard, bucked center for 4, and on the next play, threw a short shovel pass to Lowell who wormed his way to Cal's 46. Time was called after the next play, in which acting captain Davitt Cunningham, playing brilliantly, developed a bad cramp in his leg.

Pass Is Perfect

Taking advantage of the rest, the Rams worked a perfect pass play which sent out two receivers, but the ball went to Taylor, who galloped from the 36 all the way down to the 10 yard stripe. Two attempts at the line were non-productive, so the Rams called on the sure-fire arm of Nauman, who threw straight to the waiting arms of Lowell who bobbled the ball for a second, tucked it under his arm and traipsed over to score.

To those early California rooters, the missed conversion looked for awhile as a means to a winning end. But to the fighting Ram eleven, it meant that the game was not yet won, and proved to their coach without doubt that his Rams are not a group of tender, loin chops, but a mass of sinewy beef under full coordination.

Nauman's passes were perfectly executed, but without the line holding the charging Cubs, such passes would never have been completed. Dick Wilson and Dutch Danielson, alternating centers not only gave Nauman perfect passes from center, but held the Cal line until he lofted the ball into the air. Guards Pinky Larracou, Clark Johnson and Teeny Nicholas held like the proverbial stone wall as did the tackles How Council, Bill Windeler and John Blakemore. Only in seeing this type of football can the stands observe that it is an eleven man game.

Line Grabs True Honors

Honors go to the ball carriers as usual, but to the unglorified line does this win for the Rams really belong. Drive after drive of the fast charging Cub was held by the stubborn line. Twice the Cubs came within scoring distance of the college. Both times the line held, once under the shadows of their own goal post, within 10 yards of promised land.

The first and second quarters were mostly power plays with both lines getting the worst end of the deal. Midway in the second quarter, Reinhard and weeks carried the ball to the 18 yard line, only to lose the ball on downs. Again in the second period, a fumble took the ball to almost scoring distance, but Tom Rielly, alert tackle, pounced on it thus smothering another threat spark of the fighting Cal Cub.

Eisan Happy, Relieved

"I am happy and relieved," said Head Coach Eisan after the game. "We are not yet in full stride. Downfield blocking and punting need improvement. We were good enough to beat a bunch of farmers, but . . ."

Praised by the college team was the clean game the Frosh played. "They were big, but clean" said Jack Medrano, sub halfback. Praised also were the college ends, Taylor and Hagen, on their coverages of punts and passes.

Soccer

Mateo Game Even Break 1-1

Gaining an even break with San Mateo last Saturday, Coach Joe Lantagne's soccer boys are readying themselves for the crucial test next Saturday afternoon, when they are scheduled to meet California at Berkeley.

Sloppy play and a rough field contributed to slow up the locals during the San Mateo game. The final score read 1 to 1. The first half was very even, neither side scoring, though the Rams threatened the Bulldog goal several times during the first two periods.

The first score came late in the third period, when San Mateo cashed in on a long 50 yard kick which eluded the goalie. The local shinkickers came to life during the fourth period and scored after many attempts.

Lantagne admitted that the boys seemed a little slowed up after their 3 to 2 upset over Cal Aggies in the season opener. Cal will be a tough team to take, Lantagne said. Playing them on an unfamiliar field will be another disadvantage, he added.

According to impartial witnesses of the San Mateo fracas, the Rams were decidedly the superior of the two outfits. Had a few breaks fallen to the locals, the score would have been decidedly in favor of San Francisco, most witnesses agreed.

Lantagne, still declining to predict the chance of his boys, did remark that the lads could win if they would buckle down to hard practice during the next few weeks. One of the main faults of the team this far, he added, has been the lack of condition.

"Soccer is no babies game," Lantagne said. "It takes a lot of conditioning to last a full game and still be able to play hard during the last minute."

Intramural Softball Teams Must Signup Today

All softball teams must be signed up by Tuesday, October 8, Captain Fred C. McFarland, director of intramural sports warned to the managers of the sport. Applications can be obtained from Bob Bush, George Malley or himself, he said.

To aid the club wishing coaching advice, a group of physical education instructors who are in charge of the sports have been chosen, it was unofficially rumored, Bush said.

Basketball, tennis and free-throwing will be coached by Tom Wilson. Russ Sweet will handle the cross country run and golf; Captain McFarland, softball, rifle and volleyball; John Hurley for swimming and horseshoes, and Joe Lantagne for boxing.

Softball, the first in the series of intramural activities, will have commenced from October 7, Captain McFarland said. Rumored is the fact that a faculty team in softball will be entered in the intramural activities, Bush said.

Development and results will be posted on the bulletin board, Bush also said.

Ice Skate Club Draws Accomplished Performers

Many accomplished skaters have signed in the college Ice Skating Club, Joseph Williams, ice-skating instructor said this week.

Williams expressed pleasure at the tournout of talent, which includes a few solo skaters who are very good.

Although handicapped with the loss of the Galbraith brothers, there are a few new skaters that are expected to do big things in the semester's show.

Among the better skaters are Ingeborg Lubahn and Peggy Evans, and Williams expects these women to be outstanding skaters in the coming carnival.

It has been rumored, but not confirmed, that ice-skating may become a regular physical education activity for men as well as women.

Traffic Ruling Prohibits Parking In Paved Areas

Clarification of the parking rules issued from Dean Edwin C. Browne's office last week was made with the announcement today that cars are prohibited from the paved area in front of the college building leading from but not including Phelan Avenue.

"THIS PAVED AREA MUST BE KEPT CLEAR OF CARS," the dean emphasized. "Discharging of passengers may be made at the curb in front of the building, but cars may not remain or park there. Neither students nor faculty nor workmen are exempt from this ruling."

The upper level directly behind the college building is also prohibited, Dean Browne said, since it is used as a loading zone. Any cars parked there are subject to tickets, he warned.

Stressing the fact that traffic hazards near and around the campus must be eliminated, the dean declared there is ample room to park cars on the levels at the north and south ends of the building. Phelan Avenue may also be used, he added.

"But there must be absolutely no parking on the hillsides," he reiterated.

"Those drivers who have not absorbed the full significance of the 'No Parking' signs set up by the police will find themselves the recipients of traffic tickets, in answer to which they will have to appear before the Municipal Court."

Opera

Students May See Aida Nov. 1

Last year the San Francisco Opera Company gave a student's performance of the opera Madam Butterfly. This year the opera company will give a student performance of Aida on Friday, November 1 at 1:30 p.m. at the War Memorial Opera House, Flossita Badger, of the college Music Department, announced.

This year as well as last there has been a large response to this opera performance. The response has been largely from the students taking music courses, but those who are not enrolled in a music class are urged to see Miss Badger as soon as possible.

According to Miss Badger a few seats are still available. The prices for the seats range from 75 cents to $2.50.

The cast for the opera will include the well-known stars Elizabeth Rethberg and Enzio Pinza singing the leads. The rest of the cast will be made up of the regular members of the San Francisco Opera Company.

It is expected that this will be the most popular performance of the opera as only students will attend.

Wendell Called To Active Duty In QMC At Lewis

Paul Wendell, faculty member of the college hotel and restaurant division has been called for a year's active duty with the United States Army.

Wendell holds a reserve officer commission in the United States Quartermaster Corps, and left last week for Fort Lewis, Washington.

He has been a member of the college faculty for several semesters and has been especially active in the hotel division where he was recently appointed as public relations officer for the division.

There is a possibility that Wendell will remain in the army for more than a year, as several reserve officers may be regularly assigned to active duty.

Action On Applications For NYA Jobs Delayed

"For the next few days no applications for NYA employment will be accepted," Claude T. Silva, instructor, assisting with NYA at the college, announced today.

"This is due to the fact," Silva explained, "that we have on hand a great many applications which have not been sorted and checked, and until they are segregated we cannot give proper attention to new requests."

Silva also added that the time schedules will be due on the sixth of every month. "This month," Silva concluded, "we had a rather difficult time, because the sixth fell on a Sunday, but from now on the question of time slips should offer no trouble."

Students To Participate In U.C. Debate Conference

Names of those scheduled to participate in the Saturday Monthly Debate Conference to be held at the University of California on Saturday, October 12, are not as yet ready for publication, announced Lloyd D. Luckmann, adviser for the group.

"We are planning on sending several members of the debating class, and although they have not had actual experience in debating, they have all had previous experience in public speaking of some kind," Luckmann said.

The conference is open only to students of debating and the representatives of this college will be entertained first at a luncheon as the guests of the California debaters, and then will take part in the discussion.

New Choir Talent To Be Heard On Dedication Day

Several new voice students who have been practicing with Flossita Badger, college music instructor, will be heard for the first time November 10 at the college dedication ceremonies, Miss Badger announced last week.

A series of programs are being formulated for later presentation.

"A great many students who have fine voice possibilities have enrolled in the A Cappella Choir this semester," Miss Badger said.

Officers for the choir are Jack Meyers, manager, Ruth Berryesa, assistant manager, and Bill Cockran, secretary.

Civil Service Exams Open To Men Students Oct. 31

The San Francisco Civil Service Commission has announced an examination for men stenographers, typists, addressing machine operators, and key-punch operators.

Men students interested in taking these examinations should file their applications on or before October 15. Examinations will begin on October 31.

Further information may be found on the bulletin board in the main hall or obtained from F. Grant Marsh, business department head. Marsh's office is in Room 222.

Frosh Social

Mixer Dance Location Not Yet Chosen

Plans for the freshman mixer dance have been slightly delayed because of indecision as to the locale of the affair, Jim Honnert, low freshman president said today.

Despite the recent announcement of the social committee as to the inadequacy of the college's gymnasiums for holding dances, there is a possibility, Honnert said, the dance could be held in one of the gyms.

Until this is settled, he added, the question of outside locale cannot be decided. Decision as to the possibility of holding the dance inside the college is expected within a few days.

A committee is working on details of the dance but the social committee has not approved a date for the affair as yet, Honnert said.

The frosh mixer will be for the purpose of getting members of the freshman class better acquainted, according to him.

As the freshman class is the logical class to carry on the traditions and build up the spirit of the college, he pointed out, therefore a closer acquaintance among the students is necessary.

High freshman president, John Mowbray has declared the high frosh to be perfectly agreeable to the idea of holding such a mixer.

Visitors

Galileo High Faculty Will Tour College

Faculty members of Galileo High School and their principal, William Wieland, will tour the buildings and campus of the college as the guests of the Faculty Association on Monday, October 14, from 3:30 to 5:30 p.m., announced Lloyd D. Luckmann this week.

On Monday, October 21, the Teacher's Association of San Francisco, with George Learned, principal of Roosevelt Junior High School, as their president, will tour the campus. During the following week, on Wednesday, October 23, the faculty of Girls High School and Charles C. Danforth, principal, will be guests here, Luckmann said.

The procedure will be the same as on previous occasions, a conducted tour of the grounds followed by a tea in the cafeteria.

College faculty members comprising the reception committee are as follows: Dean Margaret Dougherty, Dean Edwin C. Browne, Walter C. Forbes, Thomas A. Gabbert, Miriam Gatley, Ella Nowell, Helen Reveal, John E. Ross, Edward E. Sandys, Henry D. Soule, and Luckmann.

Instructors of Denman Junior High School toured the campus and buildings of the college as guests of the Faculty Association last Tuesday afternoon.

Breaking The Ice

Bill Hart Practicing For Participation In Pacific Coast Figure Skating Competition

Bill Hart, president of the Ice Skating Club in the college, is spending most of his time practicing for the Pacific Coast figure skating competitions to be held soon, Joseph Williams, adviser for the club, said recently.

Newly elected vice-president, Viola Miles, will compete in the novice division, while Peggy Evans will try her luck in the junior division, according to Williams.

Competing in the solos will be Ed Bodel, who will also act as partner to Arline Mendleson in the dance numbers.

In skating shows to be held in Santa Clara and Oakland, a number of these college skaters will compete, thus giving them an opportunity for practice for the college carnival.

The carnival is planned for some time in January and some very good talent and skill is expected.

The Ice Carnival sponsored by the Skating Club last semester was recalled by Williams, who expressed a hope that a similar success may be duplicated somewhere in the future. The carnival had featured such skating stars as Stuart Ross, Women's European title-holder, Murray and Sheldon Galbraith of this college, Marcella May, and Margaret Field, as well as Hart and Bodell. Highlights were solos and dance exhibitions by members of the club.

Judicial

7 Charged With Illegal Use Of Cards

Seven college students appeared before the judicial committee last week on charges of lending their Associated Student cards to other persons, Ed Hardies, committee chairman announced yesterday.

In an attempt to clamp down on students who violate the agreements signed when they purchased their student cards, members of the committee have installed a rigid system of checking and identification at all Associated Student functions.

At the meeting last week, three students were given second degree censures, which consists of confiscating the student card for a one month period.

Three other students were cautioned against lending their cards again and warned that if the offense were repeated a second time, confiscation would result.

One person had his student card taken away for a period of two months.

Hardies, commenting on the action of the committee said, "We want the students to understand that we are intent upon clearing up these student card rule violations. It is the only way the rights and privileges of the majority of the student card holders can be maintained.

"We wish to once again urge all students to cooperate with us to the fullest extent, and warn those that continue to ignore the requests of the committee that we mean business," Hardies concluded.

Seven-Year Law Course Envisaged For Harvard

CAMBRIDGE, MASS.—(ACP)—A seven-year combined College and Law School course, open to a few specially qualified students and designed to integrate more closely the study of Law and the other social sciences, is envisaged in a report now being considered by the faculty of Harvard University.

Drawn up by a committee of nine professors, the plan has already been approved by the Law School faculty.

A student enrolled in the proposed seven-year course would take three years of under-graduate work, then enter Law School, and in his fourth and fifth years approximate the curriculum which is now ordinarily prescribed for regular first and second year Law School students.

In his sixth and seventh years, a student would cover the work normally done by third year Law students, plus advanced work in History, Government, and Economics. At the completion of the course he would be awarded an A.B. as well as an LL.B. degree.

Professor Finds World's Smallest Ants In Africa

GRAND FORKS, N. D.—(ACP)—Floating in a test tube on the desk of Dr. Neal Weber, University of North Dakota associate professor of biology, are eight of the smallest ants in the world.

So small that 12 of them together would be the size of one pinhead, the tiny insects were discovered by Dr. Weber last summer in central African jungle near the Belgian Congo border in the Sudan. The professor's specimens have proved to be 25 per cent smaller than any other ants known to man.

Police Captain Layne Dies; Was Adviser To College Group

With the passing of Captain Arthur Layne, Supervising Captain of the San Francisco Police Department, the college lost one of its most valuable advisers and supporters, Harold Leuenberger, police training instructor commented recently.

"Captain Layne was instrumental in starting the police training course in the college," he said, "and he helped initiate additional Civil Service courses."

Donating his time to act in an advisory capacity, and as a technical expert to the faculty of the college, Captain Layne won the admiration and friendship of all who knew him, Leuenberger noted.

Classes in the history, duties and customs of the police service were carried on here by the Captain. He also instructed the students in the principles of patrol work and traffic.

In memory of the passing of one of the college's friends and advisers, all of the Police Training classes were dismissed last Friday.

"Captain Layne was one of the best known police officers in America," Leuenberger commented, "and all who knew him deeply regret his passing."

Intramural Arrangements For Golf, Horseshoes Next

Entries are no longer being accepted for basketball and softball, and as soon as play is under way in these sports details of arrangements for golf and horseshoes will be announced, according to Bob Bush, intramural manager.

Bush urged that all students who might be interested in participating in either golf or horseshoes in the college intramural sports program watch the bulletin boards and intramural posters on the flag pole in back of the building.

"It will be well worth while to enter either golf or horseshoes," said Bush, "as gold, silver, and bronze medals will be awarded winners."

The golf program will be in the form of an open tournament and the horseshoes play will be for singles teams. All clubs are urged to have entries ready when sign-up time is announced, Bush added.

Twice a month journalism students at the University of Michigan take over the editing of some daily newspaper in the state.

Aviation

Five Will Take Advanced Course

Five students from the advanced flight training course will be named shortly to begin advanced training, it was announced today by Capt. George D. Richards, aviation department head.

The students selected will be judged on a basis of physical fitness and aptitude in the course, Richards said, and will be given a more intensive and complete aeronautic training than the scope of the present course allows.

Final register of students who will be eligible to complete the course will be ready for publication in the next few days, he said.

The theory courses have progressed into aerodynamics, and are an adjunct to the flying course now under way.

Art Department Displays Patriotic Posters

Recently the art department displayed a group of patriotic posters from the Academy of Advertising Art in San Francisco. It was declared by Evans M. Ecke, art instructor, that these were not the best of the winning posters, however.

Ecke also revealed that the finest of these posters will be on display in Room 100 during the week of October 16.

COLLEGE

THERE is a good possibility that in the near future we may possess a song written by bandmaster Fred Waring especially for the college.

Last semester the Executive Council sent a letter to Waring asking that he honor us with a song as he has done for many colleges and universities throughout the country. His reply stated that he was so overloaded with requests of this type that he could do nothing until the fall.

According to that we should have a song written some time this semester.

The present Executive Council is planning to send another letter to Waring, and accompanying the letter will be a petition signed by members of the Associated Students.

Petitions are being circulated this week and next week. The more signatures we can get, the better our chances of having a song written for us.

WITH the rainy season approaching, the problem of Municipal bus service has taken on a more serious aspect.

A letter has been sent to E. G. Cahill, manager of public utilities, asking that the city help solve the transportation problem.

It is to be hoped that the city will act on this matter without too much beating around the bush for it is an important matter and should be attended to within the next few weeks.

INTRAMURAL activities have struck a small snag. It seems that although a great many teams evinced a desire to participate in the program, yet when it came time to play, some of these teams failed to appear.

Taken all in all, the new intramural program is doing very well and deserves the praise of every student of the college.

Although built on a solid foundation, the program must have the support of the students to succeed.

Persons are not required to take part in the intramural program. The least those who sign up can do is keep their word and go through with their part of the activity.

WE received this too late to be printed in the column on page two that refers to student boners. It might prove interesting to some. It was turned in to the instructor of an English class:

What is a kiss?

A Kiss is a noun used as a conjunction.

It is more common than proper.

It is never declined.

It is not singular because it is always plural.

It is a preposition because it has an object.

It can be active or passive.

It agrees with me.

If the author of the above will drop into 134 sometime next week, we'll be glad to award him a prize as the "brain of the week."

THESE CRAZY WOMEN

THERE are times when the female of the species act like several different kinds of a fool rolled into one.

Last week while passing by the Rose Room in the Palace Hotel, the large poster of a handsome pose of band leader Artie Shaw made us stop in our tracks.

It wasn't that Shaw had this effect but a closer inspection of the picture revealed that some dopey woman had planted her lips squarely over those of pretty boy Artie and had left the perfect lipstick imprint of her lips on the poster.

If that isn't the height of something or other, tell us a better one.

STATE

THE action of the State Legislature in outlawing the Communist party is one of the best things that body has ever done.

It is about time something was done to curb the influences and activities of these groups that are un-American to say the least.

The Communists no doubt will wail that they are being deprived of the right to free speech, and expression.

They should be. Any organization that admittedly is controlled by and takes orders from a foreign government opposed to our way of life should lose these purely American privileges.

Now if the Nazi-American bund would receive the same treatment, we'd be getting somewhere.

High Frosh Informal Tonight Changed To Red, Gold Rooms

Location of the Associated Students dance tonight will be the Red and Gold Rooms of the Fairmont Hotel instead of the Terrace Plunge Room as previously announced, Jean Arnold, social chairman, said this week.

The dance, which will be held in honor of the high freshman class, will be informal, she added, and music will be provided by Larry Cannon's orchestra.

More Dancing Room Expected

The change from the Terrace Plunge Room to the other locale was made so that more space will be available, Miss Arnold declared. "Since a larger single location was not available for tonight's dance, the committee decided to arrange for both the Red Room and the Gold Room. We hope in this way to accommodate the crowd of students who will be attending the affair."

Reminding that the general admission is one Associated Student card per couple, Miss Arnold warned that an identification committee will be at the door to prevent misuse of the cards.

Faculty Members Invited To Dance

Invitations to members of the faculty and administration who have been asked to act as patrons and patronesses tonight had not yet replied at this writing, but most of them will probably be present, Miss Arnold said.

Those who had been requested to attend were: Dean and Mrs. Edwin C. Browne, Evans M. Ecke, Mr. and Mrs. Richard Allman, Mr. and Mrs. Edwin Cranston, Mr. and Mrs. John Gerstung, Mr. and Mrs. John Ross, Mr. and Mrs. Fred McFarland, Mr. and Mrs. Edward Sandys, John Selig, Dr. and Mrs. John Menke, Mr. and Mrs. Lowell Hollingsworth, Dr. Franklin Sewell, Mr. and Mrs. Stephen Tomer, Yvonne Stoupe, and Mr. and Mrs. Cecil Aggeler.

College Council Will Meet October 21

First meeting of the Junior College Council for this semester will be held Monday night, October 21, in Room 136, Claude A. Shull, president of the council announced.

"Highlighting the evening's program," Shull said, "will be Dr. Merton Hill, Director of Admissions of the University of California."

Dr. Hill is one of the best informed men in the state on the junior college and its place in the community, and his talk for the evening will concern this subject.

Tentative plans are in the making for special music by the A Cappella choir of the college.

"All new students whose parents do not belong to the council," Shull continued, "are asked to inform their folks of this meeting and ask them to attend. We would like to make this branch of the Parent Teachers Association one of the strongest in the city."

New members of the council will have an opportunity at this time to meet and hear speak, Archibald J. Cloud, president of the college, and Mrs. George Hearst, president of the Second District of the Parent Teachers Association.

A membership committee under Mrs. G. H. Schnacke is contacting parents of all the students in the college and inviting them to this first meeting of the semester, according to Shull.

"If the students will tell their parents of this meeting," Shull noted, "and get them to attend, we will be extremely happy."

Laboratory Assistants Asked To Get Pay Checks

All laboratory assistants are requested by Michael Zarchin, faculty treasurer, to secure their September checks at the finance office as soon as possible.

"There are still a few October checks belonging to these students. I would appreciate their calling for them this week," Zarchin added.

In all probability there will be no Market Street Railway car tickets for sale to junior college students, Zarchin reported. Plans for the purchase of these tickets have "fallen through," he said.

Those students having business with Ward M. Nichols, college comptroller, are asked by Nichols to see him in Room 187 from this date forward. He takes care of all purchase orders, and student body accounts.

Zarchin will continue the sale of car tickets and petty cash payments in the finance office in Room 188 though, Nichols added.

First Rehearsal

Band Meets Today At 4:15

Students who have volunteered as members of the first college band to be organized will meet this afternoon at 4:15 in the lecture room of the men's gymnasium, when Madison Devlin, music instructor at Lowell High School, will be present to lead the group, Dean Edwin C. Browne announced this week.

Turnout Of Thirty Expected

Replies to questionnaires sent to students as to type of instruments which they own and play have come in already, and a group of about thirty is expected at today's meeting the dean said.

Devlin, whose band has played for the college at Armistice Day games and at various student assemblies, is volunteering his services every Friday afternoon at 4 as conductor at rehearsals, he revealed. Of the band, Devlin commented: "I know there is a great deal of material here, and I am most happy to help organize a first class junior college band."

Band To Be At Games and Rallies

When organized, the band will represent the college at athletic contests and assemblies, Browne indicated. "After many years of going without our own music-makers and of substituting with a high school group, we will at last have a band of which we may be proud," he pointed out, saying that lack of facilities and teaching staff had prevented the beginning of this activity earlier.

The dean had been approached several weeks ago by the college yell leaders concerning the possibility of securing a high school band for one of the football games, and after a conference, plans were put into action for forming a group from within the college.

Debaters Meet Tomorrow At U.C. For Conference

College Debaters will meet in the Alumni Room of Stevens Union at the University of California tomorrow for the Saturday Monthly Debate Conference, Lloyd D. Luckmann, adviser for the group announced today.

Question for the discussion shall be: Resolved, That the western hemisphere should form a permanent alliance or union for defense against foreign aggression.

Representatives from among the college debaters will be Jack McKay, Leland Martin, Myron Dubain and Albert Nossman.

"Today the debating class was formally organized as the Phi Rho Pi Debating Honor Society. It is now affiliated with approximately 75 other junior college debating societies throughout the country," Luckmann remarked.

The debating society will provide for merit awards in competition with other colleges and among the debaters within the group itself.

AMS Barn Dance Set For Saturday, Nov. 16

Associated Men Students barn dance has definitely been set for Saturday, November 16 at Alvarado's Barn in Richmond, Ted Theodus, AMS president, announced this week.

This barn dance was formerly set for November 11, Theodus said.

"Activities will commence Saturday afternoon at 4:30 p.m. with a variety of athletic events," Theodus said, "and cider, apples, and hot dogs will be served during the afternoon."

Dancing will commence at eight, instead of 8:30 p.m. as formerly announced, and will finish at 12 midnight.

"We are still auditioning orchestras for the dance," Theodus said.

Dedication

Open House To Feature Displays

Moving pictures and displays, which will highlight the open house following the formal ceremony, will attempt to show the people of San Francisco the scope and quality of the curricula offered at this institution, at the college dedication November 10, J. Paul Mohr, registrar, announced this week.

Open house will be held at 3 o'clock on that day, preceded by the formal dedication at 1 and a flag ceremony at 2, according to Lloyd D. Luckmann, chairman of the dedication committee.

Picture Showings Start At Three

Beginning at 3, the moving pictures, dealing with the work in aeronautics and in police training, are scheduled to be shown continuously in Rooms 100 and 136. The movies are being secured through the cooperation of Captain George Richards, civil pilot training instructor, with the Civil Aeronautics Authority, and of Beverly Pasqualetti, instructor, with the San Francisco Police Department, Luckmann revealed.

Classrooms and laboraties designated for a single purpose will be labeled with a descriptive bulletin, Luckmann said, and students will be present to give an explanation of the distinctive features of the labs. Mechanical and engineering labs are among those which will be open, he added.

For the psychology department, Harold Leuenberger, one of the instructors in that branch of science, plans an exhibit of all the devices employed here for tests and measurements, including a demonstration of the I.H.M. correcting machines which each semester score the entrance examinations given to new students. To show how these work, Leuenberger will invite visitors to answer a quiz on the junior college and grade the resulting papers on the machines, Luckmann disclosed. Also anticipated from this department is a graphic display of surveys on student and community needs in relation to the junior college, which will be presented by Leuenberger.

Library To Have Exhibit

The college library in Room 314 will present a book exhibit, according to present plans. Both there and in the art lab in Room 160, the works of Richard Allman and Evans Ecke, art instructors, and that of some students, will be on display, Luckmann remarked.

Other exhibits, according to Luckmann, will be several sets of flower arrangements by the floriculture department, displays by the geology and geography department which have already been established, and a display of materials studied in the life science courses.

From the music room in 200, the radio production class will present, at 3 o'clock and again at 4, a half-hour broadcast which will dramatize the life of Franz Schubert and will feature some of his famous music, it was announced.

Guardsman Has Display

In The Guardsman office in 134, a display showing the stages of newspaper publication will be presented, according to Joan Nourse, instructor in journalism. Material for this display will be secured through the cooperation of The San Francisco Chronicle, Luckmann said.

Invitation to students of the college and their parents to attend the dedication was again stressed by Luckmann. "We are now completing our preparations for both the program and the exhibits, and leaving nothing to the last minute, so that we can be assured the public will find their visit to the college interesting and enjoyable," he commented.

Charts And Models Arrive For Hygiene Classes

Equipment consisting of charts and models of the human body has arrived for the use of the classes in personal hygiene, according to Verrel Weber, hygiene instructor. This equipment is to be used to make the course more interesting and informative.

Miss Weber and John Hurley, of the men's hygiene department, are working together on the pre-tests given to the classes in personal hygiene at the beginning of the semester to determine the students background in hygiene.

First Midterms

Students To See Advisers About Grades October 15

All students will meet with their advisers Tuesday, October 15, at 12 o'clock, J. Paul Mohr, registrar, announced this week.

This procedure is being followed as all returning students will not have deficiency or "cinch" notices mailed to them. All 12 o'clock classes will be dismissed so that students can confer with their advisers, Mohr said.

Letters To New Students' Parents

A letter explaining the methods of grading, student adviser, and a report of a deficiency in any class work, will be mailed to the parent or guardian of all students entering the college for the first time. These notices will be mailed only to students receiving a D or an F in any class, Mohr said.

This is the first time that such a method has been used. "I think that it will be a great success," Mohr commented.

At the end of the second midterm period, about November 19, another advisers' meeting will be scheduled for all students, both old and new. No notices will be mailed at that time, Mohr revealed.

Following is a list of rooms where students can meet their advisers:

New Airport Opened At Belmont For Training

Opened last month for flight training, the new airport at Belmont has been designated solely to the use of Bay Area Civilian Pilot Training students, and will henceforth be flight headquarters of enrollees in the college Aeronautics Division.

Flight Courses At New Field

All flight instruction will be given at the new field, and ground school courses are already under way, announced Capt. George D. Richards, Aviation head.

Several members of the course were cast in the roles of ground demonstrators for moving pictures recently filmed at Belmont Field. Clarifying the various phases which underlie pre-takeoff technique, the students were shown in the process of engine

Finance

Policy Needs Careful Study

To straighten out difficulties that have arisen over Associated Student funds, Alden Thorogood, finance chairman today reminded persons connected with the handling of student funds for individual organizations to study carefully the present finance policy.

Quoting from section three of the policy Thorogood said, "Requisitions must be secured for all purchases of goods or service. Each requisition must be signed by the faculty adviser of the group requesting the requisition, the chairman of the student finance committee, and the comptroller.

"Copies of the requisition shall go to the faculty adviser, the comptroller and the executive secretary.

"Any item purchased without a requisition shall be billed to the person contracting for it."

The policy was formed by last semester's finance committee headed by former Associated Students President Allen Williams, and was formed to avoid confusion and inefficiency in the handling and control of student moneys, Thorogood remarked.

The committee announced that student interest in the present football season has increased considerably showing also an increase in finance receipts.

Members of the finance committee are Loretta Egan, welfare council member; Len Gross, Guardsman editor, and Thorogood.

Publicity Committee Will Wear Colored Arm Bands

Read and white felt armbands for members of the rally committee are being arranged for by the publicity committee, according to Hugh Waite, chairman.

Pledges for the Phi Beta Rho sorority are to undertake the making of the bands. By wearing these emblems, rally committee members will be recognized more easily when conducting rallies, Waite said.

Working in conjunction with the rally committee and the Southern Pacific Railway Company, the publicity committee is at present concentrating on the Sacramento train excursion and football game.

"College art students are also assisting with this publicity," Waite said, "by furnishing posters advertising the trip."

To augment the publicity for college football games, the publicity committee has made photographs of various team members in action, Waite said. These pictures will be placed at the disposal of The Guardsman and various San Francisco daily newspapers.

CAB

Tuesday Last Day To Apply For Charters

Bob Ogg, president of the Club Advisory Board, again issued warning this week that clubs which fail to file application for renewal of charter before the CAB meeting next Tuesday, Oct. 15, at 2 o'clock will be suspended, and their status of an active organization in the college be removed.

Revocation of charter will follow should a suspended group not take steps toward recovering good standing with the club board, Ogg declared.

Seven Clubs Ousted Last Semester

Seven organizations last semester were ousted because of failure to comply with the charter renewal provisions. These had neglected for two consecutive semesters to file application, and were consequently dropped from recognition in Associated Students activity.

Of the seven, only one, Alpha Gamma Sigma, college honor society, has notified the CAB of its intention to regain affiliation with the club board by going through the probational procedure required of newly formed groups. According to a student representative, the Chess Club, also ousted last semester, is being reorganized, but has yet filed no application for a charter grant.

Delegates Should Be At Meetings

The chief duty of a representative, he indicated, should be to act as spokesman from his club to the CAB, and from the CAB to the club. "Therefore," he said, "the delegate should represent, not himself, but the club. He should present at CAB meetings the views of his organization, and carry back to it news of what the club board is doing."

Room 142 has been announced as the regular meeting place of the Club Advisory Board this semester, and representatives will gather here on alternate Tuesdays at 2 o'clock.

Still Some Parking Offenders—Browne

Although the majority of student drivers have endeavored to cooperate in regard to the parking regulations which have been issued, further warning must still be made to those who still park in the prohibited zones, Dean Edwin C. Browne declared this week.

"The parking is improved to some extent," he said, "and no parking tags have been placed on the cars for the last few days. Except for workmen and truck drivers loading in the space behind the college building, this space has also been kept clear, allow students to find their way around the campus without danger of accidents occurring."

However, there are still a few students who park on the hillside north of the building, he commented, adding: "It is apparent that traffic tags will have to be issued to assure proper control of this dangerous situation."

Areas which are specifically prohibited by reason of the hazards which would be incurred include the paved area directly in front of the building, leading to, but not including, Phelan Avenue; the upper level behind the building, which is used as a loading zone by workmen; and the hilly space to the north and south.

Cars may stop in front of the build-

Where And How Not To Park Your Car

Lack of cooperation with Dean Edwin C. Browne's traffic regulations is graphically shown by these pictures, snapped during the middle of this week. Parked on a slope, the first car is in direct conflict with Dean Browne's ordinance against hillside parking, as well as in danger of rolling down hill.

A white tag, issued by the Dean, and requesting the owner to observe college parking regulations, may be seen on the windshield on the car on the left. The tags are being used by the Dean merely as warnings to first-offenders. Future violators of the parking ordinances will be subject to regular parking tags in answer to which they will have to appear in Municipal Court.

Bus Situation Serious As Rainy Season Approaches

THAT Municipal bus service to the college was definitely not all that it could be was pointed out in an editorial several issues ago. At the present time the situation is unchanged and no official comment from the administration regarding attempts to improve the service has appeared.

While we know that college officials are concerned over transportation to the college and that they are trying to remedy the conditions, some reports on their progress would be desirable.

As the previously mentioned editorial stated, approaching rains make the rerouting of the Municipal bus directly to the college doors a matter for immediate consideration. A five-minute walk, over unprotected ground, in a downpour is sufficient to leave one's clothing, not to mention books, dampened for the greater part of the morning.

Even a cursory survey of the street layouts adjoining the bus route indicates that no great brain power or disruption of present service would be required to change the bus route so that students could be discharged directly in front of the college.

If necessary the route need only be changed during the hours when student traffic is greatest—from 7:30 to 10:30 in the morning. Like plans could be made for the afternoon.

The fact that students are jammed into the buses like so many sheep also merits real consideration, but additional buses involve financial pitfalls. All of which would require the usual lengthy amount of administrative haggling.

The rerouting of the bus line, however, should involve no monetary obstacles, and deductively speaking, an immediate categorical answer should not be difficult to secure.

America Realizes Folly Of Appeasement Policy

MOST important question facing the American people today is whether the Berlin-Rome-Tokyo pact is merely a bluff or something more deadly.

The question has been hashed and rehashed ever since the recent signing of the agreement that adds another greedy nation to the totalitarian bloc.

It is perhaps not so important to learn whether the Japanese and their cohorts are bluffing when they speak in threatening terms of the United States, as to discern the attitude of the majority of the nation on this question.

A year ago the answer to this question would have been only too apparent: peace at all costs, or in other words appeasement. Today the opposite is true.

America, in reviewing the last few years now realizes the folly of the appeasement policy, and it is time the easy going liberty lovers of the nation awoke to this fact.

Whether there is anything more ominous than a bluff behind the recent moves of the axis can not be accurately determined. That the recent three power agreement was directly aimed to frighten the United States and give its citizens a bad case of the jitters is, however, only too evident.

The United States is on the verge of a conflict that may any day spread. This we all know. What we should all realize as well is that regardless of the pressure that is brought to bear by foreign powers, this nation will bear in mind always the one thought "No Appeasement", for appeasement is the shortest road to ruin.

BROWN-EYED Theresa Montalvan, who works in Dean Browne's office, intends, to be a GOOD secretary, she told this interviewer.

Seventeen years old, and a low freshman, Miss Montalvan thinks her first semester at the college is great. She likes "everything" about the campus, but when pressed for a criticism, admitted that the walk up the hill isn't particularly to her liking. "Especially when it's hot," she added.

Sports are her favorite recreation, with basketball a prime favorite of the five feet one inch tall Theresa

Observing the approach of lunch time, we appropriately asked Theresa her favorite dish. Spaghetti with cheese finally emerged as her choice of menu.

"You boil the spaghetti," Theresa explained, "drain the water and add the sauce. The sauce," she revealed, "is made by adding a small amount of cooking oil to tomato sauce. The cheese is added and there's a dish fit to be called spaghetti."

Bob Hope is her favorite radio performer, mainly because "he's always funny." Kay Kayser, and Tommy Dorsey are favorites with Theresa as are Paul Muni and Bette Davis.

Her favorite type of man does not have to be rich or even have a car, though "it would be nice." Theresa asks only that he be sincere, amusing, and not too good looking.

FISHING to Alice McGrain, art student at Miami University, is duck soup. Vacationing in Indiana, she cast her baited hook into Big Indian Creek.

Abruptly, a 13-inch bass leaped out of the water and landed with a thud in the bottom of the boat. Miss McGrain took off a slipper and dealt the fish a fatal blow with the heel.

She told her story to an unbelieving cousin and offered to show where it happened. As they rowed to the spot, Miss McGrain said,

"It was right here."

The words hardly had been spoken when another bass of almost the same size leaped into the boat.

The co-ed again used the slipper technique.

"Now maybe you'll believe me," she observed.

The Spectator

IN translating Aben Kandel's powerful novel of teeming New York life, City of Conquest, to the screen, Warner Bros. took upon their shoulders a particularly difficult task. Kandel's story traced the life stories of a group of characters against the turbulent background of the great Eastern metropolis. To properly compress all these diverse themes into one coherent whole is not an easy task by any means, and it is to Director Anatole Litvak's credit that he has done as well as he has.

The main thread of the story revolves around the hopes and ambitions of a young New York couple, sweethearts since childhood. Both are trying to fight their way to some measure of success against the cold hostility of the Big Town.

He, (James Cagney) fights his way upward in the boxing profession, not because of any personal ambition, but because his girl, Peggy, wants it that way. Peggy (Ann Sheridan) has one driving desire within her: to dance. So "Young Samson" battles his way upward with his hands while Peggy uses her feet to reach her destiny.

Around the hopes and frustrations of these two, are inter-woven the secondary tales of Cagney's brother, brilliantly played by Arthur Kennedy, another recruit from Broadway, who from infancy has coveted a musical career, and the poor kid who stole bread as a youth and ended as a gangster. (Elia Kasah).

City of Conquest has one main weakness . . . it attempts to tell too much. Narrating the lives of four individuals, each complex and full in its own respect, tends to jumble the film into a rather cataclysmic state in several places. On the whole, however, Director Litvak has kept the broad expanse of material before him in sharp focus to blend the varied delineations admirably. So our one criticism need not be a robust condemnation.

Cagney, in our opinion, the screen's most dynamic personality gives another fine performance, particularly in his scenes in which he goes blind. Sheridan really surprised us. This girl, who received critical raps for her lack of acting prowess at last redeems herself with a convincing, sympathetic portrayal of the stage-struck girl. Admirable supporting roles are filled by the always reliable Frank McHugh, Donald Crisp, Lee Patrick, and George Tobias. Frank Craven is given a part similar to his chores in Our Town in which he wanders in and out to comment philosophically on the developments. It doesn't help the picture any.

The attempt to capture the spirit and atmosphere of New York is successful on the whole. But as we said before, any attempt to paint a picture of New York and its struggling millions is beyond the power of one film's expression.

On The Feminine Side

IT IS interesting to note the amazing number of exceptionally well-dressed women about the campus. Not only are the majority of the women at the college neatly dressed, but they seem to keep well posted on the latest developments in the collegiate fashion world.

Although it's impossible to single out any one woman as being better dressed than another, there are several outfits which we have noticed that really deserve mention.

Blonde Gerry Ryan has come up with one of the smartest suits that we have seen on the campus. It consists of a neatly tailored brown woolen skirt and an exactly matching brown silk shirt usually worn with an amusing clip or pin at the neckline. Over her skirt and shirt, Gerry wears a long, long, and we do mean long, tailored jacket of a brilliant, unusual shade of green—a sort of a cross between a Kelly green and a deeper forest shade. With a large brown bag and suede wedges in the same color, the ensemble is sure to be a stand-out.

Freshman Mary Keddie has one of the nicest looking two-piece dresses that we have seen lately. It consists of a casual long-sleeved wool jersey blouse in a rose, almost cream-of-tomato-soup color worn over a pleated brown skirt of the same material. The unusual color combination is rather striking, and a novel touch in jewelry completes the outfit.

Barbara Brown and Jean Spencer are only two of the college women who have succumbed to the lure of tailored Glen plaid suits. Barbara's suit is in shades of brown and rust and features one of the newer, longer jackets. With classic brown shoes and a trim white sharkskin shirt, she could double for an illustration of Harper's college issue. Jean's suit is also in a brown tone, but hers is combined with blue instead of rust. For some reason, those suits serve as a perfect foil for colorful slip-on sweaters which are reaching a new high in popularity.

An advocate of camel's hair for all around wear is Dot Trood. Her boxy jacket-coat of that material is tremendously practical, as she can wear it either for street wear over street clothes or with her campus skirts and sweaters. Camel's hair coats and jackets are still right up at the top where smartness and warmth are concerned.

Anita Welt has another of the two piece dresses which are becoming more and more popular on the campus. Anita's is of a teal woolen fabric, and it flaunts an incredibly fluffy design of white angora on both sides of the dress front.

Then there are those innumerable women who are always popping up with a good looking sweater and skirt combination in some vivid shade.

Matching pastels or autumn colors, contrasting shades, and gay plaid combinations are seemingly all over the campus. That green and red tartan skirt combined with a redder-than-red twin sweater set may have a Christmasy air about it, but added together it all totals chic. And the dusky gold long sleeved slipon sweater which one woman sports with a lush brown Duncan plaid is noteworthy for its very unusual shade.

We don't know if it's the fact that Leap Year is drawing to an end or if it's just a natural interest, but somehow the incentive to be just a wee bit different in dressing seems to have inspired any number of college women. And the consensus from both the masculine and feminine contingents is, "It's wonderful."

Shots At RAMdom . . .

This column was written by Hugh R. McDonald for this issue.

ALL POSSIBILITIES

of an Anglo-American union, political or cultural, were shattered last Thursday when a London columnist betrayed the sanctity of British inflected endings and spelled HONOR without the pendant U. Aroused Englishmen, loins-a-girded, disregarded air raid sirens and destroyed the newspaper plant whence came the stigma on Empire letters. Further investigation of the murdered columnist's belongings disclosed other and more horrible addictions to American usage, it was disclosed that he had referred to a container of bully-beef as a CAN, sacrificing the dignity of the sacred TIN; written in his diary was the word REFLECTION, with the accustomed—XION suffix superseded by Yankee taint; and an impasse to horror was reached when PETROL was deferred to GAS.

IRATE LONDONERS

formed a posse, and began immediately to investigate the backgrounds of all metropolitan and suburban editorialists. The search was stumbling through with characteristic insular alacrity when a wary Briton realized he was a member of a POSSE rather than a SEARCH-AND-FIND organization, and that the shibboleth was the blasphemous "Lynch 'em!" rather than the "Yoicks!" and "Pip-Pip" so long treasured by blood-bent Englishmen.

BITTER REMORSE

and antagonistic accusations resulted from this disclosure, and in the war of words blood was soon spilled. When street fighting had subsided four days later, newspapers heralded the infiltration of Nazi-American saboteurs as a rout, and announced that the sordid forays on the English language had ceased. The newspapers, disregarding the rather apparent news value of the sinking of the entire Home Fleet the previous day in the North Sea, carried these words in 76-point: JOHN BULL K.O.'S YANK SLANG: NOW FOR THE NAZIS!

RAM'S HORN

Letter From Montana Gives Sound Scolding

• Freshman Appreciation

Editor, The Guardsman:

Published in the October 1 issue of The Guardsman was a complaint by an old student of the college concerning the attitudes of new students toward the new campus.

My purpose is not to contradict this statement; it is, rather to point out that some of us do appreciate our fine new surroundings as much as older students do.

There are some of us who also spent previous years in old wooden buildings and crowded our ways through too narrow corridors. We too burroughed our way into small lunch rooms and studied in dingy libraries. There are even some of us who had to dodge trucks and street cars and run between rain drops to make our way to different buildings.

These, then, are the members of the Freshman class whom I wish to defend. We too entered the college, with appreciation of upper classmen. We too thrill at the shining "newness" of our beautiful campus.

Probably more important is the fact that even those who have come here from large high schools realize that ours is to be the pioneer class of San Francisco Junior College. We all realize that upon our activities and actions will be based the tradition and reputation of the college. We do appreciate the new campus and the spirit which is behind it.

• Protest From Montana

Editor, The Guardsman:

As an Montanan and a loyal booster of our great Treasure State, Montana, I wish to inform you and especially your student body that the so-called phrases of which you speak, quoting "from the wilds of Montana," and your ironical word "exile", appearing in your student blotter, Tuesday, September 24, 1940, concerning one Bob Fex who is now residing in Helena, Montana, the heart of the gold country, are the utterings of one lacking in knowledge whereof he speaks.

It will, I am sure, be of interest to you to know that eighty-eight millions of dollars of gold have been taken from Helena, Montana, where the said Mr. Fex now has the privilege of spending his time, without any apology to Mr. Fex, however.

Two celebrated Montanans now occupy a high pedestal in your native state, namely Myrna Loy and Gary Cooper. It is possible that even you have heard of them. I might add also that Martha Raye is from Great Falls, Montana, along with many others too numerous to mention.

Thomas J. Walsh, first Attorney General under Franklin D. Roosevelt, until his untimely death robbed him of that glory, was an exile from Helena, Montana. Our great Senators Wheeler and Murray, national leaders, to say the least, are from Butte, Montana, "The richest hill on earth, one mile high and one mile deep." Twenty-six miles from Butte, Montana, is the largest smokestack and smelter in the entire world. It was through the insistence of Senator Murray and Congressman O'Connell that a certain Mr. Tom Mooney, who rotted in a California prison cell, was released.

Our scenic spots are of the best. Among them are Glacier and Yellowstone National Parks. Our fishing streams are superb. Montana is noted for its hunter's paradise. National magazines of great repute admit this without the slightest aspersion, such as has appeared in your school circular.

When you have a few moments to spare, drop into your school library, in the event you have one, and spend a little time. It will do you a great deal of good. Someone once said, "A little knowledge is a very dangerous thing". If the shoe fits, wear it.

I have tried in a very small way to give you some of the high lights of our great State. I defy you to print this. For your information, I am not a member of the Chamber of Commerce.

A loyal Montana Booster,

John Sullivan

P.S. I understand Russ Sweet, one of your coaches, is a former Montana resident. We have schools in Montana, too.

Editor's note: The references made of your state in The Guardsman were really written in a spirit of fun and most certainly were not intended to throw disparaging remarks at Montana. Your loyalty to your native state is to be highly commended but your sense of humor seems somewhat lacking.

Lee Eisan, Men Praised For Cal Frosh Win—Boukeis

REGARDING the Cal Frosh game last Saturday the Rams showed a great deal of power in the flanks. Herb Taylor's pass-snagging ability hasn't lost any of its knack. Luke Powell did some mighty fancy stepping as well as catching the touchdown pass. However, we feel the score would have been different if the boys had perfected downfield blocking. We think we can safely say that the blocking of last Saturday was not quite as good as was that of the State game. Maybe it was because of Cal's defensive power, but from where we sat, that's the way it looked. Let's hope the L.A. Cubs don't play the same as they did against the Trobabes of USC. They beat them 6 to 0, y'know.

Boukeis To Lee

Coach Lee Eisan has done himself mighty proud by defeating the Cal Frosh. He remodeled a small group of men into a smooth working machine, even though he claims they were ragged. The new defense was just the thing for Cal. Clint Evans didn't know what the score was, and expected any minute to see his wonder boy Billy Reinhart break away. To his surprise, the Dina-mite Lee had a new defense that held the Billy side of the Reinhart family down to at least a few yards per. Lee, a Cal graduate, showed his alma mammy just how dangerous a little boy grown up can be.

Sportsmanship, Ram Style

Lauded for clean play was the Cal line. Billy Reinhard, brother of Bob, who was doing a mighty fine job in punting for the Bears, was praised highly as was Bob Weeks, fullback. Alger, frosh end was also praised for his fine pass catching.

Flawless Helen To Dive

To those who wish to see perfection at its best, may we suggest the Far Western Diving Championship going on this weekend at Fleishacker Pool. Helen Crlenkovich will be there to dive as well as many other far western champs. Helen, you know, lost her National Outdoor title to Marjorie Gestring in Portland, Oregon last August. She still holds her indoor title, though. It is rumored that Miss Gestring will also be there to compete.

Nice Going Captain

The intramural games went along perfectly last Tuesday, despite a slight mix-up that was natural since this was the first intramural activity. Captain McFarland, in assuming responsibility of being the adviser for the group, has grabbed a hold on one of the most responsible burdens in the college. At the rate the thing is grabbing publicity and interest in the college, we must hand a great big boukei, b'god.

Wilson To Work Out Hoopsters For League Race; Will Experiment

With the league season only a couple of months away, the college basketballers will start intensive practice shortly, according to Tom Wilson, basketball coach of the college.

"The intramural program will prevent the use of the men's gym by the cagers on two days a week, but the other three will be devoted to stiff practice sessions," Wilson said.

The varsity of last season used the slow break with a fair degree of success, the mentor declared. He expects to experiment with both slow and fast breaks to see which best fits the locals.

Last season's team finished in the second division. It was then under the tutelage of Louis "Dutch" Conlan. Wilson, former jayvee coach, took over the varsity when Conlan assumed the position of college Coordinator of Education Management.

From last season's varsity, only Joe Pfahnl and Bob Staynor are returning, Wilson noted. Both of the veterans are guards and Wilson expects these two to see a lot of action.

Missing from the roster are such stellar performers as Red Kerwin, Vern Genesy, Joe Johns, and Eddie Cerf.

Wilson has not yet released the varsity roster but has promised to have it ready for publication soon.

As in former years, the men who do not make the varsity will perform for the jayvees, where they still have an excellent chance to prove their ability to play varsity ball, the coach pointed out.

Playing for the jayvees is not like being relegated to the bone yard, Wilson declared. The jayvees have, in the past sent several fine men up to the varsity. He said that many a casaba-artist that plays for the jayvees is right on the heels of the varsity.

Tentative Meets Planned For Cindermen To Limber

Several pre-season "warm-up" meets with various bay region schools are in the offing for the college cindermen, announced Russ Sweet, local track and field coach.

Nothing definite, as to place and date, is yet in sight, Sweet declared. In his opinion, the meets will probably be held on Saturdays on the opponents home grounds.

The reason for this is lack of complete facilities on the athletic field and the need for more work to be done on the track, Sweet explained.

"High jump, pole vault, and broad jump pits are being installed at the present time," he said. "They will probably be finished soon and will give the men a chance to do some real practicing."

Although the local trackmen have yet to snag their first inter-collegiate championship, Sweet has his hopes of garnering one in the near future with some of the material that he has at hand.

The coach noted that in the field events, the college has more than adequate representation, while things are not so bright on the track.

Sweet has his eye on several likely looking cindermen in the pre-season group. Some of these men are veterans returning to the wars; others are newcomers who have yet to gird themselves for the battles of intercollegiate competition.

The track squad suffers from no dearth of veterans, Sweet exclaimed. If these men and the newcomers perform as they potentially are able to, the track coach expects to lose less sleep worrying over the fruits of his labors.

All in all, things are pretty well in hand and shaping up all right, Sweet said, and injuries and failures in class are the main sources of worry now.

The first honorary degree ever bestowed by the University of Maryland was given the Marquis de Lafayette 116 years ago.

Falkenberg, Kay Leads Ski Team For Coming Snowtime

Falk Falkenberg and John Kay will lead the ski team into coming skiing events, Bob Ogg, Ski Club president said. Fall training will probably begin in two or three weeks, Ogg also announced.

Last week, the Ski Club of the college held a meeting at Bob Ogg's home in Berkeley, which met with proved success. Several moving pictures were shown, chiefly of Falkenberg jumping at the Pacific Coast Championships last spring for the Vanderbilt trophy. A new championship threat was uncovered, in Kay, who claims to have won Italian-Swiss championships before coming to San Francisco, Ogg said.

Water Sports Headline Bill At Association Splash Party

Main feature of the Women's Athletic Association splash party, to be held on October 24, at the YWCA on Sutter Street from 7:30 to 9:30 p.m., will be intramural water sports competition, according to Barbara Smith, WAA president.

All women of the college are invited to the affair for participation in open swimming after they have witnessed the running off of intramural competition, Miss Smith said.

Entrants from the various women's organizations will engage in speed and form swimming and unusual water games, Aileen Kinkel, physical education instructor, announced.

"So far we have received applications for entering the intramural events from the WAA ice-skating group and the WAA rifle club," she said. "We urge all clubs that wish to enter teams composed of four to six women to contact Jane McKinnon, swimming club manager, Miss Keller, or me.

"Each club of the college which enters swimmers for the intramural event, should also choose a certain color of bathing cap for its representatives to wear," she added.

Besides the speed and form swimming contests, there will be intramural competition in unique water games such as teaspoon, balloon, and lighted candle racing, Miss Kinkel said. Synchronized swimming by a selected group will also form part of the evening's entertainment, she said.

Tickets for the affair, which are tentatively set for 25 cents, pending a reduction of price, may soon be purchased at the YWCA when arrangements have been completed, according to Eleanore Haliber, general chairman of the splash party.

No Swimming Saturday

There will be no swimming classes on Saturday at the YWCA because of the Columbus Day Holiday, Aileen Kinkel, swimming instructor, announced.

Inauguration Of Barnyard Golf In Association Set

Initial instruction in the sport of horseshoe pitching in the college will be given next Monday from 4 to 4:30 p.m. to the west of the Women's gymnasium, when "barnyard golf" will become an official part of the Women's Athletic Association sports program, Virginia Coker, WAA horseshoe club manager said.

"There has been much interest shown in the sport this semester by the women of the college, and we urge all those who wish to sign up for the sport to come out next Monday," Bertha Mae Keller, WAA horseshoe club adviser said.

Two official 30 foot courts, according to Miss Keller, have been requested of the board of education, and will be placed on the western side of the Women's gymnasium, between the roadway and the gymnasium. Equipment for the sport has already been purchased, she said.

"At the first meeting of the sport, instruction will be given in the technique of pitching, gripping the shoe, control, and the scoring rules, and regulations of the game. Members of the horseshoe club will be fortunate in having as their manager, Virginia Coker, who is Northern California Champion of the Horseshoe Pitcher's Association," Miss Keller said.

It was also revealed that Miss Coker will defend her title on Saturday, October 26, when she will compete at the courts on Mission Street between 25th and 26th Sstreets, with women representatives of the Northern California Horseshoe Pitchers Association.

Women Phys. Ed. Has Woes; Releases Same To Public

Problems facing the women's physical education department and the Women's Athletic Association were recently revealed by Bertha Mae Keller, college physical education instructor.

"One of the biggest problems that faces the physical education department and the Women's Athletic Association is that of providing a pianist for the physical education dance classes, and the WAA dance club. Women who play the piano and who would like to gain experience by playing for social, modern, and folk dancing classes are urged to see either Laurine Bergin or me as soon as possible," Miss Keller said.

Women in physical education and WAA classes are urged to use the paper towels sparingly, because the towell supply is limited and if towels are not used with discretion, the supply may run out by December, she said.

For the convenience of the women of the college, a pay telephone has been installed on the wall opposite the main office in the lobby of the women's gymnasium.

Cheer Leaders Wanted

Any woman interested in becoming WAA cheer leader is urged to see Barbara Smith before Monday. Tryouts will be held on that day during council meeting at 4:30 in the lounge room of the women's gymnasium. Duties include leading of songs at sings and serving on the arrangement committee of social affairs but does not include the leading of yells, Miss Smith said.

"Attention is called to this fact, because the telephone has been installed for convenience and a certain number of calls must be guaranteed daily in order to insure its remaining installed," she said.

The announcement was made that all classes will meet whether it rains or shines. In case of rainy weather, all outdoor WAA and physical education classes will meet indoors for discussion of playing tactics and rules in the various sports, or for club business.

Release Rules, Schedules Of Softball, Tennis

Official playing schedules for the first week of play in the Intramural Softball League was released this week by Bob Bush, intramural manager. The remaining game times will be released next week.

All games will be played at the Balboa Park fields and will start promptly at 3 p.m. Any team that does not have a full complement of players on the field ready to play by 3:15 p.m. will be considered to have forfeited the game. Games forfeited will not be replayed, Bush said, but games cancelled because of rain will be rescheduled.

Games are to consist of seven innings. If seven innings have not been played by 4:45 p.m., the score of the last complete inning will be considered the final score. Officials' decisions are final, Bush said.

The intramural posters and bulletin boards in the halls will carry complete information as to whether games are to be played on days scheduled.

Those signed up for tennis intramural are as follows, according to the ladder released by Captain McFarland.

J. Effinar, M. Glaser, Kenneth Ludlam, Leon Kalimos, Henry Chew, Charles Yee, Joseph Greeley, Carl Fry, Richard Miller, William Hong, L. Davy, W. 2. The first round of the elimination is to be two out of three sets. Other rounds will be three out of five sets.

5. Results will be reported to tennis manager or intramural director or in the Rifle Range in Room 30.

Rams Tackle LACC Tonight In South; Aim For 3rd Win

Winning two successive games over San Francisco State and the California Frosh, the Rams will try for number three tonight at Snyder Field in Los Angeles, where they will battle the highly touted Los Angeles City College eleven.

A squad of 27 men left the bay region this morning by train for the southland, headed by Coach Lee Eisan, with high hopes of accomplishing this feat, following the Rams' crushing victory over the California Frosh last Saturday, which was its first victory over the Cubs since the rivalry of the two institutions began.

The contest against the LACC'ans is not to be taken too lightly, as the Crimson Tide defeated the giant Trojan Frosh last week in its initial encounter by one touchdown, and was the first time that the Los Angeles boys have defeated the Trobabes in the past three years. Incidentally, two other would-be touchdowns were called back as a result of penalties.

Ackerman Experienced

The LACC'ans are coached by Glenn C. Ackerman, who in his 10 years as football coach at the college, has brought up three championship teams. This year's varsity proves to be no exception and has all the earmarks of being another one. This was shown by the upset victory over the Trobabes. Coach Ackerman's form of attack is strictly diversified, with speed playing an important factor.

The spearhead of the Crimson Tide attack is ably handled by Jackie Fellows, who won All-Western honors at Manual Arts High School in Los Angeles last season. Fellows is a good passing halfback and has an uncanny way of hitting his receivers with perfect strikes.

Fellows is 5 ft. 5 ins. tall, weighs 163 pounds, and uses his speed to great advantage when bringing back punts against the opposition. Against the U.S.C. Frosh, he carried the ball 14 times, and averaged 4.7 yards per try. Ackerman found him to be an able replacement to fill the shoes of Mickey McCardle, triple threat halfback, who enrolled at the University of Southern California to gain new football honors.

Cubs Have Reserve Power

However, Fellows is not the only man in the LACC backfield. Les Friday, fullback, is a good line crasher as well as a good blocker, who paves the way to break Fellows into the open. Backing up the Crimson Tide line on defense is Captain Bob Panagis, a vigorous tackler, and a great team player, who was the only center on last year's varsity to win a letter award.

In all probability, the forward wall of the LACC'ans will be the lightest one the Rams may face all season. However, it must be remembered that it stopped the heavier Trojans, whose offense is strictly dependent upon power plays.

Soccer

U. C. Next Foe of Lantagnemen

Meeting their toughest opposition tomorrow morning at Berkeley, Coach Joe Lantagne's soccer lads are in shape for the tilt against California.

Lantagne, though not predicting a win for the Rams, does admit that they have a chance to upset the highly touted bear. The locals will have to play heads-up soccer to do it, he added.

"I know that we will be meeting a team tomorrow that is the toughest in the league," Lantagne said. "We don't expect to have an easy time of it tomorrow, and we aren't really hopeful of victory. The boys do have it in them to win, if they really try hard every minute of the game."

Lantagne further mentioned that after the California tilt, the locals will meet U.S.F., State, and Menlo on even terms. "We should win a few games, then," he revealed.

Practice has been going on all of this week, rain or shine, in preparation for tomorrow's contest. Lantagne expressed anxiety for the condition of several of his key players, but hopes that they will be in shape to last a full game tomorrow.

Though the field where the game was to be played was not announced, it was believed that the tilt would be held on Hilgard Field, on the west side of the California campus in Berkeley.

Eighteen players will make the trip tomorrow, Lantagne revealed, and all will do their best to upset the dope and return with the scalp of the Golden Bear.

The team morale is high, he said, and the boys won't be beaten until the final gun. "Whether we win, or lose, the Ram will have tried his hardest. We won't be ashamed of them, I know," Lantagne emphasized.

Duke University's baseball coach, Jack Coombs, once pitched a 24 inning game, longest in American League history.

AWS

Chairmen For Teas Honoring Seniors Named

Committee chairmen for the Associated Women Students' teas honoring high school seniors on November 12 and November 13, have been chosen, according to Virginia Hubbert, AWS president.

Chairman for the day's events is to be Sylvia Fisher, Miss Hubbert announced. Aspasia Vasilatos, AWS secretary, is to be in charge of refreshments and Anita Welt is to be chairman of the entertainment committee, she added.

"Any woman interested in serving on one of the committees is invited to leave word for me at Miss Dougherty's office," Miss Hubbert declared.

Women already chosen to assist in the teas, which are held semi-annually, include Dorothy Dall, Inga Friedman, Ruth Falconer, Helen Wilson, Loretta Egan, Dorothy Trood, Betty MacKillop, June Tamp, Jean Streikaer, Jean Ormond, Jane Riedy, Phyllis Anderson, Margaret Wright, and Shirley Statan, she added.

According to tentative plans the teas are to feature tours of the new campus conducted by women students. The tours are to be followed by refreshments served in the college cafeteria.

"We shall complete our plans very soon," Miss Hubbert said, commenting that the success of past similar affairs was to serve as a precedent in planning these teas.

Naval Reserve Calls Students

Several eligible members of the division have discontinued their training, it was learned, because of concurrent enlistment in the United States Naval Reserve. Imminence of naval reservists' mobilization has forced their registration, since actual military duties take precedence over the Civilian Pilot Training Program.

As a consequence, the final roll of flight students has been altered, and will not be published until later in the week.

Carter Presents Redwood Sculpture For Cafeteria

By FRANCIS CHRISMAN

Dudley C. Carter, renowned for his unique wood sculpturing, has presented the college with a huge, one-ton redwood ram which will grace a corner of the college cafeteria.

Carter has revealed that he thought the gift appropriate and had determined to offer it to the college as a result of his work with Diego Rivera, famous muralist.

Both the Ram and Carter served as models for a large part of the mural which some day may decorate the walls of a college library and is now being completed by Rivera.

"When I heard that the mural was to go to your college," Carter said, and when I learned further that the Ram was a sort of mascot to the students, I decided that perhaps its proper place should be at your college, and so I offered my carving and it was accepted."

Carter, a native of British Columbia, attributes his skill at sculpturing to the fact that he spent most of his boyhood on the Alaskan border and learned to copy the work of the Indians in that region.

"But it was not until about 10 years ago that I really became interested in this type of thing," the artist revealed, "and so I took a course in sculpturing in Seattle and started to work."

Carter's work, as he calls it, is a long, drawn out process requiring infinite skill and patience, and the majority of his pieces are only completed after weeks and often months of labor.

An entire piece, such as the Ram which the college is receiving, takes about 16 eight hour days of work to complete, apart from time taken up in the construction of trial models.

Carter makes a point of the fact that no one but himself ever touches the wood from the time it is cut down in the forest until the finished product is ready for exhibition.

He also is justly proud of the fact that all his work is done with only a double bladed axe and several chisels.

From the time his first carving was exhibited, he has had great success in his chosen field. Many of his pieces have been bought by private individuals while others are to be seen in various museums; and during the entire life of the exposition on Treasure Island Carter was employed on the "Art in Action" exhibit in the Palace of Fine Arts. It was here that he carved out the great Redwood Ram that is soon to be a part of the college.

In his studio at Carmel this well known craftsman has set up all needed facilities and, after a trip into Canada to visit his family, he will return to work.

Just completed, he has announced, are a gigantic three ton piece that is named the "Goddess of the Forest," and several minor pieces relating to Indian life with which he is so familiar.

The great majority of his work has been done in relation to Indians and their legends and to animals that he has known in British Columbia.

Carter expressed his belief that the Ram he offers will bring the college luck and trusts that he will be able to return on November 10, for the dedication ceremonies, at which time his contribution will be officially accepted at its unveiling.

Alpine Lodge

WSS Excursion October 26-27

Alpine Lodge will be the scene of the Women's Service Society's week-end excursion on October 26 and 27, announced Mildred Bartosiewski, president of the group, recently.

The purpose of this excursion is to entertain new members received into the organization, she declared.

According to Miss Bartosiewski, some of the old members, not attending the college now, will also be invited.

"Other groups have tried this type of entertainment but have not been successful. We hope that our weekend party will have more success than these past efforts," said Miss Bartosiewski.

The girls attending will do their own cooking, and hiking will be one of the main attractions.

Verrel Weber, faculty adviser, has consented to be the chaperon.

Miss Bartosiewski has expressed the desire that at least 20 persons attend as a guarantee has to be given. Price per persons will be 75 cents, and transportation will be by automobile.

"Alpine Lodge is located halfway up the side of Mt. Tamalpais and is a very beautiful place that affords a good view of the surrounding scenery," Miss Bartosiewski commented.

Play Day is to be held at the same time and it is expected that some of the women attending the Play Day at Marin Junior College, will come up to the lodge and meet the others, she said.

A meeting of the WSS will be held on Wednesday, October 16, to discuss the reception of more new members. All present members are urged to attend. The time and place of the meeting will be announced later.

Aliens Here On Student Visas Must Register

WASHINGTON, D. C.—(ACP)—The department of justice has ruled that all of the 6,000 alien students who have entered the country on student visas must register and be fingerprinted before December 26, in accordance with the national alien registration act.

The non-quota alien students are compelled to carry 12 semester hours of school work and must be 15 years old when admitted to the United States. Average age of students now here is 18.

Largest single group of alien students is at Montezuma Seminary, Montezuma, N. M., where 330 from Latin American countries are enrolled. Such students have been coming to the United States since 1937 instead of going to schools in European cities.

Youngster Amazes Geology Students

By FRANCIS CHRISMAN

Members of George L. Green's geology 41A class have been forced to hang their heads in shame and chagrin by the innocent actions of an eight year old boy.

From the instructor himself comes this story of what he calls "an amazing experience."

It seems that a small boy, after several attempts to locate a member of the geology department at the college, ferreted out Green.

According to his story, as relayed by Green, the youngster, while at the late exposition on Treasure Island, was told that he could secure ample geological information by questioning a member of the geology staff here at the college.

The instructor, somewhat amazed, attempted to point out and to name for him various igneous, sedimentary and metamorphic rocks and stones—but he was still further amazed when the small intruder declared that he knew all about those things and wanted to delve deeper into the subject. To prove it he proceeded to identify the assortments shown him with the air of one who really knows, calling this group one thing and that group another and completely mystifying everyone present.

The undercurrent of humor in the room changed immediately to one of astonishment and respect, and as the "students" listened to the "child" a sheepish grin crossed many faces.

Ever since then, there has been an attitude of grim determination in the mannerism of several geology students in our institution of higer learning. Instructor Green is hoping that someday he will again have the pleasure of meeting this wondrous young man and finding out if there is something that he doesn't know about their favorite subject.

Galileo Faculty Members Will Tour Campus Monday

Faculty members of Galileo High School accompanied by their principal, William Wieland, will tour the campus and buildings as guests of the Faculty Association on October 14, from 3:30 to 5:30 p.m., announced Lloyd D. Luckmann this week.

"On Monday, October 21, the Teacher's Association of San Francisco, and their president, George Learned, principal of Roosevelt Junior High School, and on Wednesday, October 23, the faculty of Girls High School and Charles Danforth, principal, will be our guests," said Luckmann, president of the Faculty Association.

On Thursday, October 10, the Association of Vice-Principals was entertained by the college faculty. Following a tour of the building and grounds they were served tea in the college Cafeteria.

Students Asked To Leave Dishes, Trays In Cafeteria

So that the cafeteria may continue to function efficiently, students were asked this week by Hilda Watson, in general charge, not to carry dishes and trays out of the cafeteria.

"We are conscious that many students have more or less been forced outside by lack of seating facilities," Mrs. Watson commented. "However, every effort is being made to remedy this situation."

Students who lunch in the cafeteria can help by leaving their tables as soon as possible after eating, she said, adding that a large sum has been invested in dishes, and it was felt this was a fair request to make.

Thirteen Students Launch First Co-op Store Venture

Launching the first venture of the kind by students here, 13 members of the newly organized Junior College Cooperative Association last Monday opened a cooperative store at a location on Lee Avenue near Ocean.

Hal Simpson, president of the group, announced that the store is now selling school supplies only, but arrangements have been made with students in several courses to take lecture notes which will also be available for distribution. The buying and selling of books will probably not be handled this semester, he said.

Coop Not Sponsored By College

Neither the cooperative nor the association under which it functions is under the sponsorship of any of the faculty, nor is the group officially connected with the college administration, Jack McKay, treasurer-manager of the group, said.

Dean Edwin C. Browne, who had been approached by officers of the association in this matter, gave as reason for this situation: "It is not at all the policy of the public schools to enter the commercial field, and consequently assigning a faculty sponsor to a store that is in business would be unwise, and hardly fair to other groups."

Brought together in a cooperative study group sponsorship by the Producer-Consumer Cooperative of San Francisco, the eight students who originally conceived the idea of this venture are Ione Bennet (secretary), Ruth Adamson, Ted Aarons, June Hobson, Ruth Hobson, Rita McDonald, Simpson and McKay. Students who joined later are Isaac Abrams, Bill Hewitt, Armen Hogopiah, Jimmy Jones and John Ricohermoso.

Disposal of Co-op Profits

The plan of the cooperative has been worked out so that profits acquired at the end of each semester will be disposed as follows, according to McKay: One-half of the sum is to be rebated to student patrons in proportion to the amount of purchases, with membership fee subtracted; one-fourth is to be used for cooperative education; and one-fourth is to be set aside as a reserve for expansion.

Membership in the association is open to students of the college, McKay declared, and may be acquired either through payment of 50 cents or by subtraction of this sum from the semesterly rebates.

Meetings will be held at least once a month, McKay said, and probably oftener, at which the business of the group will be carried on. Social meetings will also be scheduled, he added, announcing the first of these is set for tomorrow night at Miss Bennett's home, 204 Grandview Avenue, for prospective members. Highlights of this party will be folk dancing and games, Miss Bennett said.

New NYA Applications To Be Put On Waiting Lists

Incoming NYA applications are to be put on a waiting list until openings to provide for them appear, Edward H. Redford, college NYA director, has announced.

This procedure is necessitated by the fact all NYA jobs are now filled and all available funds are being used, Redford said.

"However," Redford declared, "we shall provide for applications as new openings are found or when and if we receive additional funds."

The funds of which Redford spoke have been requested because of increased enrollment at the college this semester but no word has been forthcoming from the main offices on the NYA.

Redford praised the manner in which supervisors and workers have cooperated in filing time schedules and added that the sixth of each month is to be the established date for filing of all future time slips.

Paint Students Hear Smart

Students of the paint course in the college had last Monday as another of their guest speakers for this semester, David Smart, president of the Yates and Smart Paint Company, Walter D. Forbes, paint course instructor announced recently.

Smart showed the formation of a paint film and how the various pigments intertwined to make an ideal coverage for surfaces, according to Forbes.

"He gave us some extremely helpful pointers," Forbes said, "and told the students some intimate details on the best methods of house painting."

Among his other facts, Smart also included a long and detailed formula for the ideal paint.

Smart said, "You paint students are very lucky considering the opportunities offered you in the course given here in the college. It is no longer necessary for you to work your way up from the bottom as my contemporaries in the paint business and myself had to do."

It was also pointed out to the students by the speaker that there is a great need for paint education and that there are unlimited opportunities for placement of good men in the paint field today.

New Library Books Feature Californiana

San Francisco and California as a whole claim the cream of books added to the college library recently, Dr. Marcus Skarstedt, college librarian, said this week.

Several volumes survey the tragedy of the Donner Party in its struggle to reach California. Others are Joaquin Miller's Overland in a Covered Wagon; Sketches of the 60's containing stories by Bret Hart and Mark Twain; Early Life of Tom Larkin; Bonanza Inn; Champagne Days; and a number of selections from America's most prolific pen-wielder, William Saroyan who has been both classed as a "third rate ham" and lauded as America's "literary genius."

At a University of Oregon dance admission charges were based on color of the girl's hair—red-heads 79c, blondes 89c and brunettes 99c.

While Thinking

AN open letter to Bill Frantz and John Julius, two former Guardsman editors:

Dear Willie:

We received your letter from National Guard camp and were simply thrilled to the bone at the thought of two such manly ex-pen pushers as you and Johnny parading around in the uniform of Uncle Sam.

Congratulations to Joe Guedet, John Benton, Ed Tersian, Eugene Senter, and Howard Cloud, the former college men who are now holding down lieutenant's commissions. No doubt you and Johnny will also be sporting a gold bar on each shoulder soon.

Incidentally, Willie, we'll be only too glad to mail copies of The Guardsman to you at camp. Anything to increase the circulation, you know.

Sometimes we wish that we were living a life of ease and contentment as you are (o.k. so you're working hard but you get paid for it, so shut up).

If you and Julius run the regimental paper, be sure and mail us a copy so that we can learn all the dope about all the dopes.

From your description of some of your buddies we can understand why it is you never have a dull moment. "Six former Whittier inmates, four 'hard fighting, harsh language' boys, a former circus clown and an artistic photographer with the d.t.'s" should certainly provide enough diversion. How do you keep from becoming a character yourself? Or did we speak too late?

Speaking of photographers, your friend may be slightly woozy upstairs, but send him to us anyway cause we sure need a photographer bad. The "click" men we have around now are about as dependable as one of Hitler's promises.

Everything is fine on "Pneumonia Hill." The Guardsman has, believe it or not, SIX typewriters (count 'em) and we expect some more very shortly.

The publications office is a honey. We have plenty of typewriter tables, closet space for the files, two desks in the center of the room for makeup and a separate desk for the editor and the business department respectively.

Some of our wiseacre reporters still insist on calling the office "W.J." but by slow degrees (with a blackjack and a pair of brass knuckles) we're breaking them of the habit.

The office is down at one end of the building sort of off in a corner. The only trouble with it is that every time we open a window all the copy and a couple of light weight reporters get blown away. We're still hunting for one little guy who came in to get a copy of the paper and was whisked away by the breeze.

Some of the same old headaches are still here (guess who?). Read the staff box for the future developments.

Of course the usual complaint about a gossip column has come in again. It showed up a little later than usual this time, so perhaps in 50 years people will begin to get the idea that a gossip column deals only with a very small minority that has its names repeated over and over to the exclusion of almost everyone else. We got the same argument that Winchell seems to be doing all right, but we guess that it never occurred to the objector that Mr. Winchell deals only with news. His column may sound like gossip but if one stops to examine it, he will find that his so-called "gossip" deals with people who are nationally known figures, thus bringing them under the heading of news. Or said objector might read a recent issue of The New Yorker.

Hey Willie, I nearly forgot, The Guardsman has two telephones, one inter-building communicating, the other for outside use. We were certainly disgusted for the first week of classes though, for we sat there wishing the phone would ring so we could briskly answer "Guardsman" but the darned thing didn't make a sound. When it finally did ring, it was only the college telephone operator asking us where the bank was located! Incidentally, the office must think we are an encyclopedia, for when people don't know the answer to something they give us a buzz. The payoff came recently however, when from the printers we phoned the college, asked for publications office, and got the blithe answer, "I'm sorry, they have no phone." My answer was censorable, but after considerable clicks and pressure on my eardrum, connections were made. (You figure it out.)

The Ex. Council is the same as ever Bill (nuff sed). Say, do you have push button radios in camp?

Well it's time to start work on another issue again (we never seem to have time to stop anymore) so I'll close now. Ask Johnny how the horses are going.

Write again sometime, Len.

P.S. Say, Bill howabout you and

Dedication

Ceremony May Be Aired Over NBC

Airing of the college dedication ceremony on November 10 may be possible if arrangements with the National Broadcasting Company go through, Lloyd D. Luckmann, chairman of the dedication committee revealed this week.

Luckmann has contacted Jennings Pierce, NBC educational director, and hopes to complete his plans within the week, he said. Attempts are being made to have the formal ceremony broadcast directly from the women's gymnasium where it will be held, and to have a roving reporter describe the flag procession and ceremony which follows at 2 o'clock.

Directory To Be Supplied

Visitors attending the open house, which is scheduled for 3 o'clock on, will be supplied with a directory of the building, Luckmann commented. Exhibits for this portion of Dedication Day are now being completed, he added.

Faculty members, who will cooperate in the preparation of displays and other features, Luckmann said, are as follows:

Richard Allman and Evans Ecke, art; Francis Colligan, faculty published works; George Green and Joseph Williams, geology and geography; Lowell Hollingsworth and Marie Weller, radio; Harold Leuenberger, psychology, tests and measurements; William Mayo, mechanical engineering; Glenn Noble, biology and life sciences; Joan Nourse, publications; Beverly Pasqualetti, moving pictures and visual aids to education; Thomas Porter and Henry Schrumpf, floriculture; Capt. George Richards, aviation; Hilda Watson and Mozelle Milliken, hotel and restaurant management.

Students who are aiding the dedication committee are as follows: Lou Goldstone, publicity; E. Albert Larricou, bulletin boards and descriptions for classrooms; and Bob Ogg, student trophies exhibit.

Insurance Classes Take Business Exams

"Swinging business education in line with business practices is the main purpose of the tests now being given in the Life Insurance Department," said William C. Marsh, business instructor in the college.

As a result of a two-year investigation, aptitude tests, skill tests, and general academic background tests are being given to students in the insurance department in order to determine for what field of business they are best fitted, according to Marsh.

Many Firms Give Exams

For many years now businesses have been giving tests to young men and women just entering the business to see whether or not they are sufficiently fitted for any jobs which might be available, said Marsh. He further noted that the college is trying to get one jump ahead of the business world by giving the students similar tests before they go into the business itself.

"In many cases," Marsh continued, "the courses as designed have not always been correlated with the actual business itself, therefore we wish to make the necessary changes in the courses themselves so as to make it easier on the behalf of the students and the businesses."

The department is attempting to give even more thorough and detailed tests than the businesses themselves, Marsh further explained, and an attempt is being made to suit the students more adequately to their field.

"Round Pegs In Square Holes"

"'Round pegs in square holes' do not make for pleasant working conditions either for the business firm itself or for the students placed there," he said, "and we want not only to place students but also to make them happy and fit them properly in the jobs which they are filling.

"The department hopes that these tests will be very successful in what they are trying to do," Marsh concluded, "and the faculty sincerely desires to help students in the business field here at the college."

Ready For The Excursion

Sacramento Trip

Tomorrow Is The Last Day To Buy Excursion Tickets

Only two more days remain for students to purchase tickets for the Sacramento excursion next Friday night, stated Pete Aydelotte, rally committee chairman. Two hundred applications must be taken by tomorrow or else the college will not be granted the special train, Aydelotte went on to say.

Tickets for the trip may be obtained from Bernardo Ferrari, Merrill Steele, Joseph Bryan, William Menary, Lyle Shultz, Alden Thorogood, Bob Ogg, from the bank and Aydelotte. Tickets are $1.80 and this price includes a dancing car and an observation car.

Students making the trip will meet at the Ferry Building at 3:45 Friday afternoon from whence they will proceed to the 16th Street Station in Oakland. Here they will embark upon the train and they will leave the station at 4:15. The train will make one five minute stop at Berkeley before proceeding to Sacramento. The train will arrive in Sacramento shortly after six o'clock. This arrangement will give those students who make the trip plenty of time to eat dinner and get to the stadium as the game does not start until 8:00 o'clock.

Following the game the college members will be the guests of Sacramento Junior College at a dance to be held in the Sacramento gymnasium.

The train will leave Sacramento for Oakland at 12 midnight and arrive in Berkeley at 1:30. Five minutes later it pulls into Oakland. There may be a slight variation of schedule but not more than ten minutes, commented Aydelotte.

Soph Activities May Be Limited To Class Members

Plans to restrict a portion of sophomore week's events to high sophomore students alone was revealed today by Alden Thorogood, high sophomore president.

Notification of dates of the closed events will be made to high sophomore class members by mail, Thorogood said, adding that in order to insure attendance of high sophomores only, an identification day will be held in the near future.

"An identification committee, consisting of Bob Ogg, chairman, Mercedes Dahleen, Henry Suerstedt, and Ed Hardies will be stationed in the office," he said. "High sophs will bring their associated students cards to the committee on identification day. The student's qualifications will be looked up, and if he is found to be a high soph a number four will be stamped on his card. His name and address will be noted and he will be notified of any special events."

Sophs Should Watch Guardsman

High sophomores were advised to watch The Guardsman for announcement of the date of identification day.

To plan the special events for sophomore week, a committee headed by Hugh Waite and consisting of Pete Aydelotte, Bill Minares and Thorogood has been set up, Thorogood said.

In addition to the inauguration of special events, Thorogood has announced that sophomore week will feature several other novelties hitherto unknown to the college.

Dance, Sweetheart Committees Named

Rosters of the dance and sophomore sweetheart committees as released by Thorogood are:

Dance committee—chairman, Thorogood, Lyle Shultz, Hugh Waite, Jean Kelly, George Meyers, Dorothy Trood, Muriel Grennelle, Mercedes Dahleen.

Personnel of all the committees formed is not final, and additions and adjustments will be made to them from time to time, Thorogood pointed out.

Green Tells Of Indian Lore

Interesting sidelights and background material on the unusual geologic formations and ancient Indian artifacts now on display at the south end of the building on the lower floor by the geology department were revealed this week by George L. Green, geology instructor.

Behind comparatively insignificant pieces of gold and jade and pottery exist true stories of grotesque sacrificial ceremonies of the Mayan Indians of Yucatan, of the removal of relics from age-old gold mines and burial grounds of the Andes.

While working as a geologist in Central America and South America, Green personally collected the curious specimens and became more thoroughly acquainted with the Indian legends.

Most fascinating of Green's information was his account of the sacrifice of Indian maidens in the awesome well at Chichen-Itza in Yucatan. Green was present during the dredging of the sacred well some years ago. Innumerable skeletons and a wealth of gold and sundry valuable "finds" were taken from the ooze at the floor of the well.

Jade objects found in the well were of particular interest, Green said, because there are no sources of jade within a 1000 mile radius of the well.

Two features of unusual interest in the exhibit are a gold fish-hook and nose ring which were discovered in an ancient mine. Both were made several centuries ago by people who were skilled in working gold. These objects were alloyed with copper and worked over charcoal fire.

Pottery taken from the highest crags of the Andes can also be seen in the exhibit, along with other Indian artifacts salvaged from the new-restored temples of the Mayans in Chichen-Itza and neighboring cities.

All of these objects, while of real intrinsic value, are worth much more as archeological specimens, Green pointed out.

Student Band

Organization Accomplished Last Friday

Organization of a student band, the first such endeavor in the college, was accomplished last Friday afternoon under the leadership of Madison Devlin, music instructor from Lowell High School, according to Dean Edwin C. Browne.

Student volunteers who own and play instruments and who promised attendance at the first rehearsal scheduled in the men's gym at that time, were listed as follows:

Flute: Walter Alpern, Suzanne McFall; clarinet, John Chikes, Al Meadows, Roy Jair, Fred Konkel, Dave Bridges, Robert Lamberson, Adrienne Travers, Ruth Thurman, Ralph Vogt; saxophone, John Chikes, Timothy Siam, Jerome Cohen, Robert Lamberson, Marjorie Fenster, Tom Nakashige; bassoon, Robert Gunthorp; violin, Margaret Errington, Don Moss, Norman Vogel; tuba, Herbert Taylor; viola, Don Moss; string bass, Lois Jester; trumpet, Edmund Backlund, Donald Field, William Zillohu, Miriam Huntington, Kent Jorgensen, Tod Nakamura, Kenneth Williams; trombone, Albert Bagot, Robert Bryan, William Watkins, Norwin Safholm; alto horn, Anders Wickstrom; drums, Roy Harding, Robert McGovern, Frank Lewis, Bert Pound; piano, James St. Clair, William Schaefer; drum majorette, Virginia Kenny.

Devlin, who is known to many of the students and faculty here, has played for the college at Armistice Day games and at various student assemblies, and is highly praised by Dean Browne. He will lead the newly organized group of this college every Friday afternoon at rehearsals, it was announced.

"We are grateful for his voluntary services," the dean said, "and with his help, we may presage a very bright future for the band.

The group of music-makers, which is now being organized, will play at athletic contests and on other occasions when a band would be needed to represent the college, he added. "We'll be most proud to have a first-class band of our own."

Welfare Group Still Considering Dormitories

A committee made up of members of the Welfare Council, under the chairmanship of John Mowbray is working on the prospects of securing cooperative dormitories for the college, according to John Mowbray.

Time is being devoted to finding out whether there is a need and a desire among the students of the college for such a project, Mowbray said.

Five minute intervals between classes is also being investigated by the committee in an attempt to solve the problem of the time limit between classes, he added.

Rally situations will be investigated to determine the possibilities for securing more room for the school rallies. It has been suggested that bleachers be built on the hill between the administration building and the men's and women's gyms to accommodate the student body at future rallies. The committee will secure information on the possibilities of such a project, Mowbray revealed.

With these various investigations under way the committee looks forward to a great deal of work in order to determine the desirability of these projects, he added.

Faculty Association Will Meet At Stanford

Faculty members of this college will attend the meeting of the Northern California Junior College Faculty Association, which will be held at Stanford University on Saturday, October 19 at 9:30 a.m., announced Lloyd D. Luckmann, president of the Faculty Association, today.

"Dr. Walter Eells will speak on the national junior college survey which was completed last year. Another speaker for the occasion will be D. Edgar E. Robinson, who will discuss The United States and the World Today," remarked Luckmann.

The luncheon will be attended by members of the college faculty who are free at that time and by members of various other Junior College faculties throughout Northern California.

Academic

12 O'Clock Classes Dismissed Today For Advisory Meetings

Twelve o'clock classes will be excused today so that all students can see their advisers about deficiency notices, J. Paul Mohr, registrar, announced.

"All students should report to their advisers for a short conference," Mohr said, where they will have an opportunity to discuss their problems with the advisers and to make appointments for a further conference if necessary."

This method of informing students of deficiencies in their class work is believed, Mohr expressed, to be of more benefit to the students than the former method.

Deficiency or "cinch" notices have been mailed only to the parents or guardians of those students who have entered the college for the first time, Mohr said.

These letters inform new students of the college's methods of grading, the student's adviser, and a report of a deficiency, he added.

"If any student is ill or absent today, he may secure his deficiency report from his adviser in the next two days by meeting his adviser at the adviser's office," Mohr revealed.

Following is a list of rooms where students can meet their advisers:

Agosti, Alfred P., Room 100; Aggeler, Cecil, Room 132; Allman, Richard, Room 205.

Thorogood Made Social Functions Coordinator

To coordinate the various programs of organizations within the college, by seeing that the dates of social functions do not conflict, Alden Thorogood, has been appointed to the office of coordinator of student government, Lyle Shultz, Associated Student president, announced.

"Because as finance chairman Thorogood was in close touch with the problems which will now come under the head of coordination, it was felt that he would be the logical one to fill the position," Shultz said.

Increased number of student body members and a more complex system of college social events were deemed responsible for the creation of the office of coordinator, according to Shultz.

"Since our elected officers have their specific duties to perform, it is evident that there will be many overlapping activities. I believe the coordinator will be able to straighten out most of these conflicts," he remarked.

A Cappella Choir Will Sing Oct. 21

Contrary to previous announcement the A Cappella Choir will make its first appearance for this semester at the Junior College Council on Monday evening, October 21, according to Flossita Badger, music instructor.

The choir will render four songs: A Joyous Christmas Song by Gaveart, Jesu Priceless Treasure by Bach, Listen to the Lambs by Dett, and Scotland's Burning by Schaefer.

Yearbook Name

No Decision Reached Yet

Owing to the fact that so many good names have been submitted to the committee selected to choose the name for the yearbook, it has been unable to reach a decision in the contest, Dorothy Trood, yearbook editor, announced today. The committee hopes to reach a decision soon and announce the winning name by Friday.

The contest lasted for three weeks and ended last Tuesday. The deadline was extended several times to allow all those who desired to submit a title to do so, Miss Trood said.

Decision Not Reached

The committee did not reach a decision after a great deal of deliberation, she revealed. There were so many good names entered in the contest it was hard to select the winner," Miss Trood added.

Committee members under the direction of Dan McHugh are: President Archibald J. Cloud, Francis J. Colligan, Alden W. Smith, faculty members; Ted Green, business manager; Len Gross, editor of The Guardsman; Dorothy Trood, editor of the yearbook; Lyle Shultz, associated student president.

This is the first time in its history that the college has ever had such a publication. The yearbook was secured for the college mainly through the efforts of the Welfare Council under Dan McHugh, the yearbook editor announced.

Photography Contest Underway

The photography contest is still underway and all those who still want to submit pictures may do so. Action shots of football games and various other sports will be accepted for publication, Lillian Hoyle added. All photographs submitted must be 8 by 10 inches and may be turned in to the student body office, Room 169, according to Miss Hoyle, publicity representative. The student who submits the prize-winning photograph will also receive a complimentary copy of the yearbook, Miss Hoyle said.

Anyone who is interested in the post of staff artist for the yearbook should also apply to the student body office or see Miss Trood.

Petition For Waring Fight Song Has 1000 Names

Members of the Executive Council have prepared a petition to be sent to Fred Waring asking him to write a fight song for the college.

Close to 1000 names have been secured and as soon as the goal of 2000 names is reached the petition will be sent to Waring.

Last spring the council members sent a letter to Waring asking him to write a song for the college as he has done for several other colleges and universities. The orchestra leader replied that he would be busy filling other requests for songs for some time forward, but that he would be willing to consider the college's request for a song later on in the fall.

Waring and his outfit, consisting of orchestra, glee club and several individual entertainers play these college and university songs on the radio program, Chesterfield College Smoker Night.

Another letter written by the present Executive Council will accompany the petition which is being signed by the Associated Students. The possibilities of securing a song to be used by the college in the future looks promising if the required number of signatures can be secured.

Anyone who wants to sign the petition may go to Room 135 or sign the paper that is being circulated around the school. The petition will probably be completed and mailed by tomorrow.

Collegiate Spirit Backs Conscription For Safety

EDITOR'S NOTE: For the past six months, the question of military conscription has been a vital problem for every American. Hundreds of arguments and opinions have been rendered pro and con on the situation. Through the medium of the Associated Collegiate Press, The Guardsman presents a consensus of collegiate feeling on the subject utilizing dispatches from the various college papers.

The varying reports and attitudes reported below may not agree with your own opinion on the subject. Whether it does or not, the Ram's Horn will welcome letters discussing the question of conscription. Send in your ideas formulated during the past months on the draft to Room 134. It will be interesting to hear what the students of San Francisco Junior College have to say on the most important innovation in the American way of living for the past fifty years—the military conscription act. Letters should be limited to 250 words to permit as many letters to be published as possible. Each letter should be signed with the writer's name although if requested, it will be omitted when the letter is published.

THE pulse of America's collegians is quickening. It will be an interesting study, when things have returned to a more normal state, to analyze the swing in collegiate opinion during the months when congress was debating and passing the conscription bill.

Comment of the Daily Athenaeum at West Virginia university is typical: "Strangely enough, the consensus on the campus has changed considerably since last spring. Many who were then opposed to conscription are now in favor of the draft." The Athenaeum also observes that American youth has no argument with peoples of any land and would rather spend its energy in friendly rivalry of sports—BUT YOUTH IS READY."

At Louisiana State University, the Daily Reveille urges "a vote of confidence to our congressional leaders who finally secured passage of the conscription bill. Why should we not have selective service when the imminent black clouds of war are shadowing every phase of liberty designed by peace-loving peoples?"

At East Texas Teachers college, the East Texan believes that the munitions makers are now satisfied, and that "they smile as they run their hand in their pocket to feel the place that will hold those fat, juicy profits." But the Texan adds that "from past demonstrations of patriotism on the campus, it is evident that all students will answer the call and that they will be glad to defend their country."

While admitting it is "natural enough" that some college men should not favor the draft, the College Exponent at Mayville (N. D.) State Teachers College warns the public not to "get the wrong opinion of this college youth. The majority believe in military training for the defense of our country. No class of youth is more patriotic or loyal to these United States."

"Conscription should be hated," declared the Brown University Daily Herald, "but it should not be shunned. We should use it in the same way we use a dangerous and distasteful medicine when the body must be protected from the onslaught of a deadly disease."

Analysis of nationwide collegiate opinion reveals considerable support for the view expressed by the Alligator at the University of Florida: "Conscription is a sacrifice worth making so long as the conscripted defend—not offend, invade or seek to conquer." Echoing this warning is the Dartmouth, which fears "there may be a danger in the spirit that runs through it all. If we do not intend to find our own war, we had best keep the fact in mind. If our talk of war against the principles of fascism is sincere, it would do no harm to fight it at home with action and not words. A beaten-up Jehovahs Witness makes unconvincing copy for an anti-fascism crusade."

Thus the nation's youth accepts the principle of conscription, willing to sacrifice when necessary but on the alert to safeguard historic liberties.

Meet The Students

By DOROTHY PIERCE

IN the winter of '21 there came into this dreary old world a little ray of sunshine in the person of Therese Guilfoy. It wasn't heralded in the newspaper, shouted from the housetops, or announced over the radio, but it was, to Therese, the most eventful day in her life.

Not being a very observant or brilliant child, she had none of the remarkable experiences some children have in their pre-school life.

She toddled, crawled, and got into as much mischief as she could manage. Finally her parents sent her to grammar school.

She bothered the teachers so that they sent her on to Immaculate Conception Academy with a sigh of relief.

High school was fun for Therese. There she developed her liking for sports—in particular tennis, ice skating, football, baseball and dancing.

There she decided on her career—to become a home economics teacher.

She intended to go to Santa Clara upon her graduation from high, but found out that this college does not offer any home economics courses. Anyway they wouldn't let her in. Hence, she entered San Francisco Junior College.

For one year she tramped the streets of Powell, hung on to the "H" street cars, and played gym at the Palace of Fine Arts.

Then came the new campus of that junior college, for which she is eternally thankful. No more inconveniences!!

She can often be found in the library or wandering aimlessly through the halls of that magnificent structure.

The only annoyance at the college is the "pesty" flies. She wishes they would find some place else to go.

According to a recent survey, Tuskegee is the first mechanical school in the southeastern states to pass a class in aeronautics 100 per cent.

For two months the flying class drove 80 miles a day for flight training at Montgomery. Then a private field was leased seven miles from Tuskegee.

The Spectator

Today's column was written by Barbara Budd.

A DELICIOUS mix-up — capriciously entitled Hired Wife—is now being served at the Orpheum. The human ingredients are a serious-minded boss who gets "blonde fever" in the spring. An efficient, flippant secretary madly in love with him, but who won't admit it, even to herself. A glamorous blonde model, and a clever attorney, who is constantly dazed over the situation he creates.

The story is completely irresponsible in its smart audaciousness. Sophisticated humor flows relentlessly on to a virtual vortex of tangled situations, but laughter, not tragedy, is the key-note to this mad vehicle of fun.

Brian Aherne plays Stephen Dexter, young president of the Dexter Cement Company. Rosalind Russell is Kendal Browning the sophisticated secretary. Virginia Bruce is cast as devastatingly lovely Phyllis Walden, the blonde model. John Carroll gayly plays the gallant nobleman, Jose, poor, but genuine, and with that certain way with women. Robert Benchley is the droll attorney who fixes things.

The story opens on a spring morning. Dexter gazes out of the window. A beautiful girl painted on a billboard attracts his attention. His allergy to blondes comes upon him with stabbing suddenness. He rings for Kendal, and orders her to find and hire the girl on the billboard. He wants to use her as a model for an advertisement for his cement.

Kendal tries to sway his determination in a vain effort to protect him against this spring folly. She has no success. Dexter not only succeeds in engaging the model, but begins a vigorous campaign of luncheon and supper dates with her, to the wild distraction of Kendal.

In the meantime Dexter's cement company is about to go into bankruptcy. In a moment of slow, painful inspiration the attorney conceives the brilliant idea of getting his client married, so that bankruptcy can be avoided by placing all property in his wife's name.

Dexter at first rebels, and then recalls the vision of Phyllis, the model. He instructs Kendal to communicate his marriage proposal by proxy, because he must go to the bank with his attorney.

Kendal follows instructions explicitly with the exception that she interprets the proposal in such a way that Phyllis haughtily refuses, as she had secretly hoped. Kendal returns and advises Dexter that he has been refused. Helplessly Dexter, Kendal and the attorney sit around the tables in a triangle of muteness. In a moment of slow wisdom the attorney decides that Dexter must marry Kendal. The three of them charter a plane for South Carolina.

It is hoped that Aherne and Miss Russell will be teamed again. They are comedy naturals, and in combine with Benchley, a super-comedy is inevitable.

John Carroll as the South American Romeo also comes through with a fine portrayal. Keep your eye on this boy, for he has personality aplenty, along with a fine ability to act.

More pictures like Hired Wife would be appreciated in these gloomy times.

On The Feminine Side

MANY were the heated discussions flying about the college last week concerning the difference between formal, semi-formal, informal or street, and sports dances. Not that we can by any stretch of the imagination be classed as an authority, but we'll try to clarify the matter as best we can.

We might as well begin with the college dances as they've come up this far.

The Low Frosh dance was, if you can remember those blissful pre-midterm days, semi-formal. In other words, women were supposed to have worn full length dresses, preferably with sleeves, and men were to have worn dark business suits. However, there is an ardent group of street-length date dress advocates who turned out in short dancing dresses, as per usual, correct or no

Last Friday's dance at the Fairmont was informal or street. Street length dresses were in order for the women and suits were in order for men. Incidentally, it was rather surprising to note the popularity of brown and gray for men's suits, when you remember how not very long ago a man was practically limited to navy blue or black.

Strictly formal will be the traditional Soph Formal next January. It's the date that the college women wait for and worry about almost all semester, for it's one grand and glorious chance to dress to the teeth. Women will wear formals, while the men will have an occasion to air their tuxes. Then, too, it's one of the rather few college affairs when corsages are in prominence.

College nights at the various hotels are usually street or informal for obvious reasons. Terrible things can happen to a new formal on a crowded hotel dance floor, and when such a night is preceded by a more or less informal affair at school, it would be silly to dress formally. By the way, corsages aren't at all necessary on those occasions, although they're undoubtedly very nice (at least as far as the woman is concerned).

A good example of a sports dance is the semi-annual Collegiate Mixer tea dance held during Orientation Week. Since it's held right after classes, women attend in skirts and sweaters or sports dresses, usually with saddle shoes or "flats", sometimes with spectator pumps. As far as the men are concerned, slacks and sweaters or sports jackets are perfectly good.

Of course, the AMS Barn Dance is an exception to any of those rules, being practically a costume dance. Men have a chance to wear violent plaid shirts, jeans, and, we frequently suspect, hob-nailed boots. The women have a wide variety from which to choose, in selecting their outfits. Denim over-alls, rural-looking wash dresses, colorful plaid shirts (often matching those worn by their dates), and divided skirts are all popular.

Perhaps the situation is a bit more understandable now. For the special benefit of Bill Williams, low soph prexy, who brought up the subject, we hope so.

The University of Wisconsin boxing team has not lost a home match in eight years of intercollegiate competition.

Shots At RAMdom . . .

WILL SPRING EVER COME? By Nadine Siglic-Harcourt. Poughkeepsie: Saffron Label Publishing Co.; 1183 pp.; $ .42 (Income Tax included.)

Mrs. Siglic-Harcourt has done it again. Her 32nd novel of English country life is just as charming, just as engaging as the 31 novels of English country life that have gone before it, with one exception. Somehow that sure touch of hers has weakened. Perhaps the foreign situation has slightly unhinged her sensitive mind. Mrs. Siglic-Harcourt's publishers tell us, confidentially of course, that ever since she came to our country to find "time for reflection" as she so nicely put it, her heart continually travels back to her native Shankshire and the six water spaniels she left behind her.

Whatever the reason may be, Will Spring Ever Come? is definitely not the novel that her previous one, Will Autumn Ever Come?, was. In the previous book we found her lovable characters waiting for autumn to solve their own perplexing problems with an air of real anxiety. In Will Spring Ever Come?, Cynthia and Ronald simply do not demonstrate proper enthusiam for the arrival of spring.

Perhaps their ennui was planned, to show the effect of our crazy world upon these two young souls forced to face it shoulder to shoulder. It would be just like Mrs. Siglic-Harcourt to introduce some such subtlety into her work. We have felt all along that she had it in her. Now, perhaps, we are beginning to see the real Mrs. Siglic-Harcourt.

Her tale, like the 31 tales behind her is one of poignancy. The bitter is thoroughly mixed with the sweet, congealing into a vividly human drama in which we see Ronald, the Londoner, tossed into the placidity and fox hunts of Shurling-by-the Lake. How Ronald conquered an innate aversion to fox-hunting, and, in so doing, conquered Cynthia makes for a story rich in all the little things that this exponent of the English country-side has so endearingly expressed in her previous novels.

Yes, every one of Mrs. Siglic-Harcourt's 1183 pages just exhales the flavor of toasted crumpets, privit hedges, and strolls over a benighted moor, made stuffy and damp by a thick fog.

If you are one of those who hangs around his bookstore, avidly awaiting for the next creation of this gem among novelists, you will not be too disappointed in Will Spring Ever Come? And if you read carefully, you will find a message, a message of hope and inspiration, in the lives of Cynthia and Ronald.

• Dusty Shoes Inspire Comment

Editor, The Guardsman:

I would like to comment on the dusty condition of the lot across the street from the college. Those of us who are not lucky enough to have machines to get to the college have to come daily across this lot. Would it be possible for a gravel walk to be put in so that a person who has to cross this lot does not look like an immigrant from the dust bowl? It is practically foolish to shine one's shoes, for they look like they've never been shined by the time one gets to the other side of the lot. It may sound silly, but it would keep some of the students from looking like tramps quite as much as they do at present.

• A Dirt Column, Students?

Editor, The Guardsman:

We hate to mention it, but there's something drastically wrong with The Guardsman.

Every week we scoot wildly up one column and down the other. No, we're not monkeys, we're merely looking for a dirt column.

Perhaps the average J.C. students should possess an IQ superior to the mere twelve year old mentality of the rest of the country, but I dunno. Think of Walter Winchell and Superman—they seem to be doing all right, and some of us sort've like that stuff!

Other junior colleges have dirt columns in their papers, why can't we.

Well, anyway, it's a thought, and we'd certainly appreciate it if you could tell us next week which of the four (4) girls Pinky Larracou professes to have a yen for and if she really believes all those lovely things he tells her.

• Distribution Defended

Editor, The Guardsman:

In regard to a letter which appeared in the Rams Horn, Tuesday, October 8, 1940, concerning the distribution of The Guardsman. Mr. Belton (the writer of the letter) seems to think finding a suitable place to distribute the papers is something of a "snap". It may interest him to know the distributing place has been changed several times and is now undergoing another change to try to avoid clogging up the halls, making it rather impossible for one to pass during the class interval time.

We are trying to find a suitable place to hand out papers, check student body cards, and keep from stopping traffic. If Mr. Belton has any suggestions as to where such a place can be found it would be greatly appreciated if he would leave his suggestion in The Guardsman office, Room 134.

Hen, Bull Sessions Anticipate Sac'to Trip

ON the lips of almost, if not all of the college students is the Sacramento excursion. Since the college is now one, there are little groups of bull and hen sessions going on during the lunch hours reminiscing the old days—two years ago when the Powell Street bunch went to the Capital City and fit like the divil, only to be downed by the skin o' m' teeth. Some of the newcomers sought to listen to these sessions to find out what the bunch did on that train and what they did to the town. How the Southern Pacific Railroad can afford to risk another car after last year's trip is over our heads—bits of the train were scattered around the tracks—on the return trip the locomotive had to go slowly so as not to bump into any of the scattered bits that fell on the track during the trip up.

True College Spirit

In one of these bull sessions your reporter caught this item. One fella says t'other fella, "we—ll," sezze, "I' hell with school. I got me a part time job that will git me about three bucks and so I'll go to Sacto and I'd like to see the guy wot tries to stop me."

Crude, But Oh, Boy, What College Spirit!

Circulating around the college at present is a petition to have men's ice skating classes along with the women's classes now going on. Last semester, the women did not have a skating class credit to the one-half unit for physical education. However, they were not as active as are the men, who, sending appeal after appeal to the board, were turned down. As a last stand, this petition is being signed by those who are skaters and those who are interested in skating. Surely the board cannot overlook such enthusiasm.

Warning To The Wise

If the Physical Ed. department for men doesn't watch out, the WAA is going to run them out of print. At the rate the news has been flooding the office concerning the women's part in athletics, the men will be getting the shoulders. Perhaps 'tis a good thing we are of the male species. Sure, we're damn proud we are, so there!

Intramural Actions

First intramural basketball games were played last Friday in the men's gym. Sixteen teams were there, and the outcome was such that the managers haven't been able to release a comprehensive score sheet yet. However, it is very gratifying to see that the college is enthusiastic about the games. Intramural activities are the second thing that took the college by storm, if you get what we mean.

RAM NICKS CUB 7 TO 6

Honnert Boots Winning Digit Plus Scoring Tying Touchdown

SNYDER FIELD, LOS ANGELES—OCT. 11—Splitting the uprights down on the heads of the Cubs in their own stamping grounds, Jimmie Honnert, supposedly out of the game because of a leg injury, booted the extra point that won the sixth annual game between this college and Los Angeles City College, 7 to 6, last Friday night.

On the previous play, Honnert had carried the whole Cub line from the four to score the tying digits. The fullback's educated toe passed the exam with flying colors to pull the Rams out of the tightest spot they found themselves in this season.

Power Scores

The Rams winning score came 10 plays after the whistle had blown for the second half to begin. Seed of the touchdown was planted when Ken Hagen recovered Lou Duarte's fumble on the Cub 22.

Quarterback Al Nauman punched the line for 2, and a reverse from Honnert to Acting Captain Dave Cunningham netted 6, a pass from Nauman to Honnert brought the ball to the 10½ yard line and first down.

Nauman made 6½ at right guard, and time was called by L.A. Honnert, his hand and leg taped because of an injury, slammed the line, found a gaping hole and ploughed through.

As he passed the line of scrimmage, the whole secondary pounded on his back, but his legs drove till the 32 on his jersey crossed the final stripe and then kissed earth.

The Winning Kick

The pass from Center Dick Wilson was perfect. Nauman held the ball; the line held as a dam does a surging tide; Honnert's leg swung from the hip—lofted the ball high and true, and a 7 was placed next to a 6. It was a red and white 7.

The Cubs were not idle in their four quarters. Thrice they came dangerously close to making another touchdown. Their touchdown, in fact, caught the Rams off guard, when the safety man had drifted too far in, and Jack Fellows, 5.5 inch halfback ripped 67 yards under storybook protection in downfield blocking.

Cubs Not Weak

As the whistle blew starting the game, Nauman's return was weak and on the exchange of punts, the Cubs began to gather yardage. Johnny Blakemore's first kick was partially blocked and the Cubs started an offensive game.

Spearhead of the Cub attack was little Les Friday, wearing a white 18 on his red and blue jersey. An exchange of punts brought the ball to the Ram 49, where, line plunge and line bucks with a few reverses brought the ball to the 34, when a pass from Friday to Jim Kalpakoff tallied to the 18 yard line.

Two plays later brought the Cubs to the 10, with third and two to go. The needed two became a minus 3, when Charles Lee was dumped for a five yard loss by Hagen, Pinky Larracou, Clark Johnson and Herb Taylor. In desperation, Friday attempted a field goal, only to watch the ball go wide and low.

Quarterly Thrusts

Their second quarter thrust resulted in their only touchdown, which later proved to be not enough. Late in the third quarter, another danger arose when a quick kick by Fellows bounced out of Nauman's hands and John Joseph of the Cubs pounced upon it.

However, the Cubs had no real threat after the second half, for the play lost 5 yards because Jack Medrano, Ram sub half, broke through their weakened defense and nailed Fellows. Three desperate passes failed and the Rams took the ball on downs.

Again in the last quarter, the Cubs in desperation took to the air. But this attempt was stifled when Nauman intercepted Fellows' pass on the midfield stripe and bounced to the Cub 43.

Kline Scheduled To Visit Future Ski Club Meeting

A large meeting has been planned by the college ski club to take place within the next two weeks, announced Alden Smith, team adviser.

Bill Kline, National Amateur Skiing Champion of the United States, has been asked to say a few words at the meeting concerning skiing. As an added attraction, colored movies will be shown by the Sierra Club of California which were taken in a region in the high sierras where it was not accessible by automobile, but by horse only.

Smith commented that he has waited a year to see the pictures and considers them the finest ever taken by an amateur photographer. All members of the Associated students are invited to attend the meeting.

Boxing Coach Asks For Managers – Apply Now

Coach Joseph Lantagne this week asked all men students interested in managing the intramural boxing program to see him in the gym office either this afternoon or tomorrow afternoon between the hours of 2 and 3.

Several managers will be selected from the applicants, he said. The boxing program is expected to get under way within two or three weeks, Lantagne said.

Intramural

Team Rosters Now Complete

Sixteen basketball teams and 13 softball teams have enrolled in the intramural games, Captain Fred C. McFarland, chairman of intramural activities, announced last week. Results have been posted on the bulletin board for observation by the managers of the various sports, McFarland said.

"The response to the program has been very gratifying, and we hope it will continue as such. It's popularity has increased as the term has grown, and we expect it to be one of the best interests of the college," he remarked.

Sign-ups for tennis have already been completed, and the first round will be over by tomorrow. Semi-finals and finals will be played on the college grounds so that the college may see the men in action. "Everone is invited to see the matches," he said.

Joseph Lantagne, coach of the college boxing team wishes to advise all students who are going to enter the intramural boxing activities to sign up at once. The matches must be made and tentative schedules and weigh-ins must also be taken care of, he said.

Golf, the other intramural sport, will be a one day tournament and sign-ups have already been completed. The play-off will be on October 26, the time and place to be announced later, Bob Bush, intramural manager said.

Finals in the basketball tournament will be played on October 22, and the complete schedule will be released soon, McFarland said. Medals for the sports will be posted on the blackboard for the college to see.

Basketball Squad Cut To 65, Has Two Veterans

Already making one cut from the squad, Tom Wilson, college basketball coach, announced that more men will be dropped in a short time.

Last week, about 30 men out of the class of 95 were cut from the ranks. According to Wilson, the remaining 65 will be watched so that he can pick out those with the most ability.

Although he has not formed any idea of who will or won't be on the varsity next semester, the mentor indicated that he would start working the men on some of the various systems of defensive and offensive play.

Wilson intends to vary the defensive play according to the opponent the locals are playing. "In some games, we will use zone defense, in others, a man-to-man, and in some we may use a zone and man-to-man", he remarked.

As to the offense, Wilson said that most of the play would depend on blocking and general screen play. Although this is a very general statement, Wilson was unable to give any further details at the present time.

Wilson also noted that of the 95 men that turned out for the pre-season instruction, only two of these were lettermen from last semester's team. The two men are Joe Pfahnl and Bob Staynor, the guards of 1940 Ram varsity.

Last semester, the team was supposed to be all freshmen, however, five of these men are no longer in the college.

Intramural Splash Party October 24

Final plans and arrangements for the Women's Athletic Association intramural splash party, to be held on October 24, at the YWCA on Sutter Street from 7:30 to 9:30, have not been completed as yet, owing to the lack of response shown by the various CAB organizations of the college in the matter of entering teams for the various intramural contests, Barbara Smith, WAA president, announced.

All presidents of the many women's organizations of the college are requested to turn in to either Miss Smith or Jane McKinnon, WAA swimming manager, as soon as possible, a list of the names of team members to be entered in the intramural speed and form swimming contests and water games.

"Deadline for the submission of applications for entering contestants in the intramural events is Wednesday, October 23. So far we have not heard from most of the women's organizations of the college. We can not go ahead with present plans until the approximate number of entrants in each intramural event is known," Miss Smith commented.

Each women's club president is also requested to signify the color of cap chosen for their team members to wear while participating in the intramural contests.

The wearing of one certain color by each team will facilitate the designating of the various teams as they participate in each event, Miss Smith said.

Most recent entrant in the form swimming intramural is that of the women's faculty team, according to Bertha Mae Keller, physical education instructor. Laurine Bergin, Aileen Kinkel, Miriam Gatley, Eleanore Blinn, and Miss Keller, faculty members, will comprise the team, she said.

Also invited to the affair are all women of the college and a special invitation is extended to the women faculty members of the college, WAA officials said.

Intramural events of speed and form racing, novel water games such as balloon, teaspoon, and lighted candle racing will be the featured attraction for the first hour of the evening, after which open swimming for all those present will be held.

Admission to the affair has definitely been set at 25 cents per person and tickets may be purchased soon at the YWCA office, Miss Smith said.

Galileo, WAA Schedule Indoor Track Meet Soon

Galileo Girls Athletic Association members will be guests of the Womens Athletic Association of the college on October 25, from 3:30 to 5 p.m., when the WAA version of a recreational indoor track meet will be participated in by both institutions, Barbara Smith, WAA president said.

Main events of the day will be an indoor version of the broad jump, hurdles, relays, discus throw, and pole vault, Miss Smith announced. "We have invited Galileo high school students to participate in this playday mainly because we want to partly make amends to them for the five years that the college has camped on their doorsteps.

Program chairman for the event will be Virginia Coker, WAA horse shoe club manager.

Northern Colleges Meet For Badminton Playday

Initial playday of the fall semester for colleges in the northern section of California will be that of badminton, which will be held on October 26, in the Kentfield gymnasium of Marin Junior College, from 9:30 to 1:30 p.m., Barbara Smith, Women's Athletic Association president, announced.

Registration for the event will be held from 9 to 9:20 on October 26, after which a short rally will be held, she added.

Prior to the playday, a faculty student badminton tournament will be held on October 18, from 2:30 to 4:30 p.m., in order to furnish needed practice for members of the WAA badminton club, Miss Smith said.

Four singles and five doubles teams will be sent to represent the college at Marin, where they will compete with teams from San Francisco and San Jose State Colleges, Salinas, San Mateo and Santa Rosa Junior Colleges.

Rams Invade Capital City Favorites; League Opener

By LOUIS GOLDSTONE

The Rams are going into action on the Northern Front Friday night.

This time it's Sacramento Junior College on the wrong side of the barricades.

This speculation is futile and unproductive; all that can be said at this writing is: 1) Sacramento, judging from its first two performances, is not so hot, and 2) The Rams, other factors being equal, should be capable of taking the Panthers down the line by a comfortable margin.

In 1939 it was 19 to 6 at Seals Stadium. There was no great difficulty about it; the score might have been larger. But the difference sufficed for most purposes. Eisan was not unhappy.

That was last year.

This time there will be a difference. Perhaps not an essential difference in the score, but surely in the atmosphere. A trainload of San Francisco rooters are going to pile out at the State Capital. There will—for these people—be something to holler about no matter who wins. But then, they can always read about it in the morning papers.

You know about the Rams.

You don't know about the Panthers.

Neither do we.

The Sacramento coach is named Hack Applequist; which ought to be worth six points in any man's league. In their opener, the Panthers drew a scoreless tie with the Sacramento Athletic Club. Somebody lost the paper which said—we think—that the Panthers took a fancy lacing from Stockton Junior College in their second game. We don't know the score. But it seems that the Panthers took it on the chin again.

Bud Beustad, Phil Paulsen and Carl Chapman are the leading lights of the Sacramento backfield, and if you remember last year's game, you will probably remember Beustad.

To sum up, it should be a nice game, inasmuch as it will mark the opening of conference play for the Rams. The memory will furnish something relatively substantial to hang onto through the following a.m.

Ram Soccermen Edged By Cal

Losing a hard-fought soccer match to California last Saturday morning, the Ram soccer lads aim to upset USF in the next league tilt, Saturday, October 19, Joseph Lantagne, soccer coach, announced today.

"We really put up a fight against Cal," Lantagne said. "The Berkeley boys were bigger and rougher than we were, and we had a tough time. They managed to push over two goals in the second quarter, and held that lead throughout the rest of the contest."

Goalie Commended

Lantagne, as well as most of the spectators, were full of praise for the marvelous defense work of goalie Nick Desdevich. Time and again the Bears tried to score, but Desdevich managed to get the ball and kick it out safely. Even the California players were unanimous in their praise of Desdevich.

Other outstanding Ram players were Bert Korn, who played a hard offensive game at right wing, Bill Fairfield got off many long kicks, to get the ball out of dangerous territory when the Bears threatened the local goal.

Too Much Sellinger

One right wing of California named Sellinger was the downfall of the Ram. Sellinger was the only real man on the Cal team, but he was enough to tip the balance in favor of the Bear. The Cal boys worked smoothly as a unit, feeding the ball to Sellinger, who would outsmart the locals, and try for the goal.

The first quarter of the soccer game was fairly even, a slight advantage going to the Rams for their speed. Then the referee called a foul, and the Bears started on their march.

The second period was all Cal. Two goals were scored in rapid succession in that quarter.

The last half was more even, Cal dominating the third period, with the Rams making a strong bid in the last one.

This week Lantagne is busy coaching his boys on the weaknesses that lost them the game last Saturday. Lantagne feel that they stand an even chance to upset USF—and will know by next Saturday afternoon.

Rating For Track And Field Team Indefinite

With nothing definite yet in the schedule, Russ Sweet, college track and field coach is still unable to rate his team in competitive performances.

Last semester, the track team scored an average of 47 and a fraction points per meet. After taking into consideration that the men had no home field and had had a hard time practicing, this was a good average, Sweet declared.

This year's track team should be better than last year's, according to all indications, the coach announced. This semester there are quite a few returning veterans and several promising newcomers.

He also expresed pleasure at the work now being done on the pits at the athletic field Although he doesn't expect them to be superior to the best now in existance, he believes that they will be quite adequate for the college cindermen

Sweet expects to have several meets with bay region schools in the near future, he revealed. After one or two of these engagements, he expects to have a better idea of the worth of the men that are out for track.

Rifle, Pistol Club Enters Rifle Association League

The college rifle and pistol club will soon enter the league sponsored by the San Francisco Rifle Association, announced Charles North, team captain.

There will be four leagues into which the college will enter two teams. The first college team will enter the second league, and the second college team will enter the fourth league, North said.

The University of San Francisco will enter a team for the first time in its history, entering into the second league, which means it will compete against our first team, North also announced.

California and Stanford will not enter a team, but will meet the college rifle and pistol club next semester when the regular competition commences, North said.

University of Texas has eight of the world's 1222 identified copies of early editions of Shakespeare's plays.

Rules For Block Passes Adopted

The Executive Council adopted at their last meeting the rules which will govern the issuance of block passes to collegiate contests and functions, announced Lyle Shultz, student president.

Passes will be issued when students meet the following requirements: Athletic passes-1) Students must be, and must have been, member of the Associated Students of the college during the time of his active competition; 2) He must have passed in at least 10½ units during his active competition; 3) He must have earned a block letter in the same sport in two years, or have played two years in one sport and earned a letter in the last year, and then have graduated; the pass then to be awarded at the discretion of the Executive Council on recommendation of the coaches; 4) Those with passes at the present time may have them re-issued if they comply with Rules 1, 2, 3; 5) Passes shall not expire until two years after date of issuance, and may then be renewed for each two year period thereafter; passes not presented for renewal within thirty days of expiration shall be declared null and void.

Social passes shall be awarded upon recommendation of the President and the Dean of the college, and on approval of the Executive Council.

This is the first attempt of the student body government to regulate the issuance of passes, said Schultz, and the co-operation of all is necessary for its succesful passage. Those possessing passes at the present time are urged to acquaint themselves with the new rules.

Charter Renewals Due On Penalty Of Suspension

College organizations whose applications for charter renewal are not in today, will be suspended following the Club Advisory Board meeting at 2 o'clock this afternoon, Bob Ogg, CAB president, warned this week.

Although applications are still being accepted today, clubs should submit them early enough to allow sufficient time for examination by the Membership Committee, he announced.

New clubs and those which had previously lost active membership in the club board must not only file such application to regain good standing, but must go through a probational period of two semesters, Ogg said.

Of seven clubs ousted last semester for neglecting to file the necessary information, one of these, Alpha Gamma Sigma, college honor society, has taken steps to regain its charter, it was reported at the time of this writing. "This semester the society will attempt a more active schedule of events than in previous semesters," AGS leaders commented.

Clubs Should Attend Meeting

All clubs were urged by Ogg to send a representative to today's meeting, which will be held at 2 o'clock in Room 142.

"We would prefer to have the president represent his group so that we may have more direct contact with it, but if he is unable to attend meetings, he should send one of the other officers or appoint a special delegate," he declared.

A complete list of all clubs approved for charter renewal will be available for publication in Friday's paper, Ogg said.

Those who have had to drop the flight training because they were called by the Naval Reserve are: John Minium, Walter Zimback, Robert Jackson, Joseph Tischeira, and Robert Ludlow.

Sandelin Called For Duty In The National Guard

Terry Sandelin, recently appointed assistant to the instructor in chef training in the college Hotel Division left last Monday, October 14, to report for duty with the 250th Coast Artillery as a cook, second class, announced Hilda Watson, coordinator of the division.

Don Sands, recent graduate of the division has been appointed to take Sandelin's place as assistant to Ernst Hjorth, chef training instructor, Miss Watson revealed.

Sands was recently with Manning's Coffee Company in San Francisco.

Co-op Opens Circulating Library

By THEODORA WONG

New addition to the student cooperative store now established at Lee Avenue near Ocean will be a small lending library which will be ready soon, Jack McKay, manager, revealed this week.

The first set of books for the library will come in within the next few days, he said, and the project will later be expanded to include partitioning of the back of the store for a reading room where all students will be welcome.

Membership Open To All

Membership in the Junior College Cooperative Association, under which the new store functions, is open to all students, McKay declared, and the only requirement is payment of a 50 cent semesterly fee. Purchasers at the store may automatically become members through subtraction of this sum from rebates, he added.

According to the JCCA constitution, profits will be disposed at the end of each semester as follows: one-half of the sum is to be rebated to student patrons in proportion to the amount of purchases, with membership fee subtracted; one-fourth is to be used for cooperative education; and one-fourth is to be set aside as a reserve for expansion.

Each member and purchaser is given a rebate number, and all purchases are charged to an account corresponding to that number, McKay emphasized. In this way, accurate records will be made on which rebates will be based.

Class Needs Sold At Co-op

Art supplies, general stationery and other class needs, as well as lecture notes which will be acquired soon, are being made available at the cooperative. Student members are working there on a loan labor basis, and hours of work recorded for each individual will be paid for, McKay announced.

Commenting on the co-op system which is in effect, he added, "The consumers who buy at the co-op store will control it in every way, since they eventually become members through subtraction of membership fee from the rebate each semester; the members, in turn, elect the administration of the store, including the manager of the co-op. Besides the officers, there will be a Management Committee, an Educational Committee, and an Auditing Committee which will be responsible for the supervision of co-op affairs. "The books of the cooperative are open to anyone who wishes to inspect them, as all our transactions recorded may be made public at any time."

Co-op Run On Eight Principles

The cooperative is being administered under the eight Rochedale principles of cooperation as conceived by the group of pioneers in this field in Rochedale, England, McKay explained.

These principles are: (1) open membership, (2) democratic control, (one man, one vote), (3) limited interest on capital, (4) patronage dividends, (5) cash trading, (6) neutrality in race, religion, and politics, (7) continual education, and (8) constant expansion.

Action To Be Taken On Parking Situation

"With the return of President Archibald J. Cloud to the college this week, some sort of action on the parking situation may be expected," J. Paul Mohr, registrar indicated today.

The registrar revealed that, though several plans are now under consideration, no single idea has been decided upon.

Regarding other aspects of the college campus, Mohr explained that the lights along the pathways from the main building to the gymnasiums are completely installed so that evening dances may now be considered.

Although there are a few student drivers who still park their cars on the dangerous hillsides north and south of the building, the traffic situation as a whole has improved, Dean Edwin C. Browne announced this week.

"Students now make a conscientious effort to obey the parking regulations, and are endeavoring to help eliminate the hazards that were present when these rules were ignored completely."

Debating Honor Society Organized For Semester

Formally organized as Phi Rho Pi Debating Honor Society, the debating class is preparing for its forthcoming schedule for this semester, Lloyd D. Luckmann, debating coach, announced recently.

"Affiliated with approximately 75 other junior college national debating societies, the organization will provide for merit awards in competition with other colleges and in debates within the group itself," said Luckmann.

Slated as opponents are the University of San Francisco, San Francisco State College, and Salinas, Modesto and Sacramento Junior Colleges. The only debate subjects as yet announced are national preparedness and related topics, Luckmann said.

Though not definitely decided it is believed that "short of war" tactics, isolationism, debatable defense measures, new foreign crises, and other important current problems would be discussed.

On Saturday, October 12, the college debate class sent representatives to the first Saturday Monthly Debate Conference held at the University of California. Following the discussion, the debaters were entertained at luncheon by the California debaters. Members of the class to make the trip were Jack McKay, Leland Martin, Myron Dubain and Robert Nossen.

Members of the newly organized Phi Rho Pi are all new to the college debate team but they have had former experience in public speaking. The membership of the organization is as follows: Jack McKay, Natalie Bromberg, Robert Roach, Leland Martin, Myron Dubain, Erwin Sweet, Robert Nossen, Mary Jane Beckes, Ogden Wheeler, Martin Rosenblatt.

S.F. Teachers Association To Tour New Building

Members of the Teacher's Association of San Francisco, and their president, George Learned, principal of Roosevelt Junior High School, will tour the ground and building of the college as guests of the Faculty Association on Monday, October 21, from 3:30 to 5:30, announced Lloyd D. Luckmann.

"On Wednesday, October 23, the faculty of Girls High School and Charles Danforth, their principal, will be our guests. Following the tour of the building they will be entertained at tea in the Cafeteria," Luckmann commented.

"Through the courtesy of Mr. Henry Schrumpf of the floriculture department, the women of the Girls High School faculty will be presented with corsages, as were the women instructors of Galileo, when they were our guests on Monday, October 14," he added.

Club Of Selfish Students Formed

By FRANCIS CHRISMAN

It would seem that this college is soon to be infested with a virulent species of club that will meet every day. According to all indications, this club, which as yet has no suitable title, will hold its confabs in the cafeteria during the noon hour rush, and if indications are to be trusted one of the requisites for membership will be ability as a bridge player.

Only last week several persons who, perhaps, will form the nucleus of this anticipated organization, met in the aforementioned cafeteria. They gathered there, amidst the rush and confusion, for a quiet game of bridge.

It is reported, by onlookers, that for a time all was going well; that is, until several members-to-be were asked to vacate the tables and allow some other students to use them.

Naturally, these members-to-be were rather insulted. After all it isn't every day that one gets up a good bridge game, and to say that our card sharks were highly perturbed is putting it rather mildly.

Gentle persuasion did the trick momentarily, and the horrible monopoly was broken up, much to the relief of those innocent and inconvenienced students.

But this monopolistic species, this virulent form of thoughtless selfishness, may return and all are warned to watch carefully and if witnesses of suspicious activities, to act accordingly.

There's only one way to deal with insects.

Dates For Teas For Seniors Definitely Set

Definite dates for the Associated Women Student's teas honoring high school seniors are Tuesday, November 12 and Thursday, November 14, announced Virginia Hubbert, president of the organization, today.

On Tuesday, November 12 Miss Hamlin's, Galileo, Girl's, Lowell, Lincoln, St. Paul's, Star of the Sea, Presentation and St. Brigid's High Schools will be the guests of the AWS and on Thursday, November 14, Miss Burke's Balboa, Mission, Commerce, Washington, St. Rose's, Notre Dame and Polytechnic High Schools will be received.

Large Attendance Expected

"Because of the large attendance expected, 20 women, accompanied by their advisers, from each of the high schools of the city, approximately 360 guests in all, we found it necessary to give the affair on two separate days," commented Miss Hubbert.

"When the guests arrive they will be conducted on a tour through the building. In previous years we have been able to present only a sketchy view of the college, but now we will be able to present to the future freshmen a complete picture of the college and acquaint them more fully with its workings," she added.

Tea Served In 158

The tea will be served in the sewing room, Room 158, from 3:30 to 5:30 p.m. The room will be decorated by the women on the general committee.

The entertainment committee headed by Anita Welt, plans to have one woman singer and the MacKillop sisters to entertain. Members of this committee are Barbara Delphino and Marjory Louder.

The refreshment committee is headed by Aspasia Vasilatos and is composed of Edith Callaghan, Mary Francis Malone, Jean Arnold, and Barbara Brown.

Women working under Sylvia Fischer on the general committee are Dorothy Daft, Inga Friedman, Ruth Falconer, Helen Wilson, Loretta Egan, Dorothy Trood, Betty MacKillop, June Tamp, Jean Streikaer, Jean Ormond, Jane Riedy, Phyllis Anderson, Margaret Wright, and Shirley Statan.

The full co-operation of all students with the general committee is necessary for the successful innovation of what will be an annual affair, said Miss Hubbard, and everyone should consider himself as a committee-of-one in endeavoring to acquaint the visitors with junior college activities.

While Thinking

While Thinking this issue was written by reporter Francis Chrisman.

ON NOVEMBER 10, unless plans are changed, the official dedication ceremonies for the college will take place. One of the more interesting items planned for this auspicious occasion is to be the unveiling of the hand carved redwood ram, presented to this college by Dudley C. Carter, well known sculptor.

This finely worked piece will reside in the cafeteria where it will no doubt look with great disfavor upon the scenes of confusion which are so much a part of the college noon hour.

Carter, creator of the ram, has informed us that all his works are allergic to superficial carvings and that the ram in particular just doesn't approve of having initials and names etched on his figure. A word to the wise should be sufficient. After all one can't trifle with a ram, can one?

The college should appreciate Carter's friendly gesture. It is an indication that this institution is known to others than ourselves and our friends. Reputation is very important, we should guard ours carefully; you can never tell what we might get.

SPEAKING of getting things, something should be done so that those students using the municipal bus line from the Richmond district can receive better service. If you're one of those unfortunate individuals forced to stand throughout the long trip to classes each morning you can appreciate this call for improvement in the bus system.

DESIRES of many students to the contrary, the length of time allowed between clases will not be increased yet. On the other hand a bell will be rung five minutes before dismissal time so that all concerned may know what time it is. Nothing like knowing what time it is.

PRESIDENT Archibald J. Cloud, who has become quite a traveler of late, may be able to approve some plan in regard to the parking problem that has been bothering everyone in general, now that he has returned from his latest convention in Coronado.

While speaking of the parking situation it may be well to dwell for a moment or two on the present space available for cars. Truthfully speaking there is a limited area, but for this reason alone we cant agree with those owners who insist on parking in the wrong places. Of course, if they don't mind a traffic ticket now and again, then everything is fine; but the great majority who are cooperating by playing safe will help ease the situation by continuing to do so.

High Sophs

First Identification Day Next Monday, October 21

First high sophomore identification day will be Monday, October 21, Alden Thorogood, high sophomore president, announced today.

Two more such days will probably be held before sophomore week, he said.

Purpose of identification day, as announced last Tuesday, will be the registration of high sophomores for special sophomore events, to be held during sophomore week, January 3 to 11.

From 9 to 1 o'clock, Thorogood said, the identification committee, headed by Bob Ogg, will be in Room 155 to register high sophomores. All fourth-term students should bring their associated students cards with them on that day, he added, as the cards will be stamped by the committee for future identification.

Only those registered with the committee will be notified of dates of the high sophomore events Thorogood warned. A properly stamped associated students card will be necessary for identification of students at the affairs it was pointed out.

A special events committee consisting of Hugh Waite, Pete Aydelotte, Bill Minares, and Thorogood, has been set up to plan the high sophomore events, Thorogood said.

Plans for sophomore week, he added, are being rushed by the various committees in charge. The sophomore sweetheart committee, under Elmer Hubacher, is working to complete plans for the soph sweetheart contest.

"There is a great possibility," Thorogood said, "the sophomore formal will be held on a Saturday night. This would be something entirely new in the history of the college." In past semesters the formal has always been held on a week night.

Thorogood also announced the formation of a traditions committee. Muriel Grenelle, Dorothy Trood, and Davitt Cunningham will compose it, he said.

Rosters of the dance and identification committees were released last week.

Class Intervals

Bell System Still In Effect

The system of ringing bells at five minutes before the hour, denoting the end of a class period will probably remain in effect for at least another week, administration sources announced today.

The new system went into effect the first of this week in an attempt to find some solution to the current five minute class interval controversy.

Registrar J. Paul Mohr in commenting upon the situation said "I feel that five minutes between classes is long enough for the students to get from one class to another."

The controversy over the change from the previous 10 minute period arose shortly after the beginning of the semester, when it was discovered that a great many students and faculty members were late to class because of the shortness of the interval.

Interviews with students and editorials in The Guardsman brought the matter to the attention of the Executive Council which went on record as unanimously opposing the present system.

Shortly following the action of the Executive Council, members of the faculty administrative staff of the college met to discuss the problem and determine the best method of solving it.

The plan of ringing bells for class dismissal at five minutes before the hour was decided upon.

This experiment is to be carried out for two weeks, and at the end of that time the administration will again meet to review the situation and take definite and decisive action.

A possible return to the 10 minute interval as is the case in most colleges and universities in the nation, and more especially those of the bay area, was rumored recently from unofficial sources.

NYA Members Should Watch Bulletin Board

Reiterating his statement of last week, Edward H. Redford, college NYA director, declared today that all applications for employment will be placed on a waiting list until openings are found, but that students desirous of NYA jobs should pay strict attention to the bulletin board opposite Room 148.

"Information pertaining to job openings and placements as well as notices regarding the present workers is posted on the board," Redford said.

Students wishing NYA employment may apply at Room 148 and see either Redford or Claude Silva.

According to Redford the majority of NYA workers are engaged in laboratory and stenographic work, while a few are working on poster and lettering assignments under the supervision of Lloyd D. Luckmann, chairman of the faculty association.

"It is well," Redford concluded, "if students coming on NYA have some idea of what type of available work they would like most to do."

A Cappella To Appear Before Lions Club Nov. 26

According to Flossita Badger, college music instructor, the A Cappella Choir has received several invitations to make guest appearances before various organizations.

The first of these appearances will be before members of the Lion's Club at the Sir Francis Drake Hotel on November 26. This is the third invitation the choir has received from the Lion's Club, Miss Badger added.

The choir will also perform on one of a series of programs presented over station KYA by the Second District P.T.A. on December 2, Miss Badger revealed.

Six former music students of the college who are now at State College have been accepted as members of the Madrigal Singers of State College, Miss Badger also said.

"The Madrigal Singers is an exclusive group of 16 singers, so we are very proud that six of them are former students of the college," Miss Badger said.

Those who are in this group are Mario Solomon, Charles Piper, Bill Jackman, Kay Warner, John Ward, and Harold Wochter.

Flying Cadet Glenn Coates Selected For Army Training

By HUGH McDONALD

"Flyin'? Why, just pull back on the stick to go up—an' just push it away from you to get down!"

With this lead, Glenn Coates, enrolled in the aviation class of Captain George D. Richards last semester and recently graduated from Roosevelt Field, San Diego, as a student pilot, failed to convince college fledglings of the easy knack of getting a plane into the air.

Selected for the Army's flight training program, Coates stopped in to heckle Richard's new flying prodigies last Friday, and left after the High Frosh dance for Randolph Field, Texas, and a commission in the Army Air Corps.

Tall, laughing, with the inevitable streamlined ear lobes, Coates displayed a savoir faire which comes only from 60 flying hours, and which Captain Richards informed him will be lost forever when he begins his Randolph training. Both informing and convulsing the assembly of Aviation 1A, Cadet Coates gave a picture of flight-student life reminiscent of West Point and the Inquisition.

To disassemble an airplane engine, and then to disassemble the disassembled parts—that was as easy as reading Braille; and even the harrowing solo flight, Coates informed, was simple once the plane was in the air, for after that all problems of descent are in the hands of gravity and the Almighty.

But food—! There, hissed Coates, lay the rub! Square meals, when every forkful of food moved only at right-angle turns in its trip to the mouth! Air-Raid warnings from upper classmen, when the youngsters had to crouch on floora firma is the messhall, while their dinner disappeared into senior maws! And for dessert—! to get it one must recite a simple poem of two lines before the entire assemblage, and if the mighty were not satisfied with the rhyme-scheme, the poem doubled, and trebled—and quadrupled! To secure a certain luscious piece of lemon meringue pie, Coates recited extempore poetry for thirty-three minutes, every line scanning to a rigid iambic tetrameter, and when he was finally awarded the pie, collapsed, and could only leer at it, all jow-movement blocked by spastic paralysis.

At Randolph Field Coates will undergo intensive training for ten weeks, and after a similar period at Kelly Field, will be commissioned as flight lieutenant in one of the Army's tactical squadrons. He is the first of the college's CAA flight students to be selected by the Army, and his account of that life at Roosevelt Field was of acute interest to present enrollees in Captain Richard's flying classes, many of whom aspire to Army posts—and juicy pieces of lemon meringue pie!

Opportunity

Three Jobs Open In Cafe

A bus boy is wanted to work in the cafeteria on Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays, between 11 and 12 a.m. He will receive his lunch as pay for the work.

There are two other openings in the cafeteria for relief-extra workers. The work will be every day between 11 a.m. and 1 p.m. Any students interested may see Cynthia Richardson, assistant manager of the cafeteria, any day after 9:30.

On October 28, 29, 30, there will be an opportunity for work for men having a car no older than a 1936. Interested students are asked to see Dean Edwin C. Browne.

New Band

Will Play November 11

Madison Devlin, Lowell High School music instructor, under whose leadership the college student band was organized last Friday, enthusiastically announced this week that the group will definitely appear at the Armistice Day football game with Pasadena Junior College.

Disclosing that 32 eager students had shown up last Friday, he exclaimed, "The rehearsal went off so well that I wouldn't be surprised at all if the band may even be ready to play at the October 26 game with U.S.F. Frosh!"

Enthusiasm Great

"The enthusiasm was very great, since this is the first time the students at this college will have a band of their own," he added. "I know there is a great deal of material here, and I am glad to help organize the group."

The band is scheduled to meet this afternoon, and every Friday, at 4:15. However, because the lecture room in the men's gymnasium, where the first meeting was held last week, afforded insufficient space, the rehearsals may be held in the music hall in Room 200 instead, he announced.

Roy Harding, formerly drum major of the Lowell High band, is attending this college and may be student leader for the band, he revealed.

Dean Recruits Band

Recruiting of the student intrumentalists was the work of Edwin C. Browne, dean of men, and the college yell leaders, who had previously suggested having high school bands at the football games.

"For many years we have had to merely hope for a band of our own, because lack of facilities and instructing staff prevented the organization of such a group," Dean Browne commented. "Now that hope is at last coming true, and we shall soon have a first-class band of which we may be proud."

Devlin Praised By Dean

Devlin, whose high school band has played for the college at games, assemblies and rallies, is praised highly by Dean Browne. "He is not a stranger here by any means, as he has a personal acquaintance with many of the students and faculty," he remarked.

"With the group we have at the college now," Devlin said, "the student band may be expected to play at the college's own rallies, assemblies and games."

Paint Students Visit National Lead Company

Students of the paint technology course in the college visited the San Francisco plant of the National Lead Company last Tuesday, Walter D. Forbes, paint technology instructor, announced this week.

"The chief chemist, R. Bowman, took us all over the plant," he said, "and the students saw the making, mixing and grinding of lead paints and color pigments."

Actual cooking of large batches of varnishes was inspected by the visitors, and they also saw the preparation of shellacs.

"We spent a good deal of time at the plant," Forbes commented, "and we greatly appreciate this opportunity given us by the National Lead Company."

New Publication

"Rampages" Will Be Name Of College Yearbook

Rampages has been chosen as the name for the college yearbook, Dorothy Trood, yearbook editor, announced Wednesday.

The contest lasted for three weeks finally coming to an end last week after having been extended several times to allow all those who desired to enter a suggestion for the name of the yearbook to the contest committee, the yearbook editor added.

The contest committee members under the chairmanship of Dan McHugh were President Archibald J. Cloud, Francis J. Colligan, Alden W. Smith, faculty members; Ted Green, business manager; Len Gross, editor of The Guardsman; Dorothy Trood, yearbook editor; Lyle Shultz, Associated Student president. A great deal of deliberation was required to reach a decision in the contest due to the number of suggestions contributed by the students.

The only other publication of this kind in the history of the college was the summary of the first two years from August 26, 1935 to June 18, 1937. This publication was printed in 1937 to give a brief summary of the college record from its founding to that date. It was found inadvisable to continue the publication and it was discontinued after the first issue.

Students are urged to submit photographs to the committee on the photograph contest being conducted to secure pictures for the yearbook. The pictures must be 8 by 10 inches and may be turned in to the student body office, Room 155, Lillian Hoyle, publicity representative, announced. This contest has not been receiving the support that it is felt it should have, Miss Hoyle said. Action shots of football games and other college sports will be accepted for publication. The student who submits the winning photograph will also receive a complimentary copy of the yearbook, Miss Hoyle revealed.

Muriel Grenelle, art editor of the yearbook, asks that all art students interested in doing art work on the yearbook get in touch with her. A competent staff is assisting Miss Grenelle in her art work, but there is a need for more artists, she commented.

Plans for the yearbook are progressing rapidly, Dorothy Trood announced. Definite plans for the organization of the publication have been formulated and work on it can now begin, she said.

Welfare Council Discontinues Co-Op Housing Plans

Announcement by the college welfare council that plans for cooperative housing for students have been discontinued, was made at a meeting of the executive council this Wednesday noon.

"It has been decided," John Mowbray, chairman of the Welfare Council explained, "that because the present situation presents no acute need for such a venture and because, with things as they are, too great an expense would be involved, it would be best to abandon recommendation of the council towards this attempt."

Plans had previously been made for cooperative housing as a convenience and aid to students, but Mowbray's report revealed that the Board of Education does not allow college assistance to students and that any venture of this kind would have to be privately sponsored, without the approval of the welfare council.

Work Ends On Main College Building

Work on the main college building was terminated late last week with the approval of city building inspectors, registrar J. Paul Mohr has announced.

"All installations, including blackboards and necessary fixtures for laboratories and class rooms, have been completed in preparation for the dedication ceremonies on November 10," Mohr explained, "and the front lawns should be entirely ready by that date."

Mohr also noted that, with lights along the pathways leading to the gymnasiums in working order, evening dances may be held in the women's gymnasium at some future time.

Train Excursion

State Capital Invaded Today By 250 College Football Rooters On Ram Special

All aboard for Sacramento! This afternoon more than 250 college football enthusiasts will meet at the Ferry Building at 3:45 preparatory to boarding on a special train which will carry them to Sacramento to view the football game between Sacramento Junior College and the college.

Included in this special entourage will be a dancing car and an observation car. The dancing car will be sufficiently large enough to accommodate all the couples who wish to take part in the dancing, Pete Aydelotte, head of the rally committee, said. Music for the dancing will be furnished by records.

This special train was granted to the college by the Southern Pacific Railroad Co. only on the condition that 200 tickets be sold by October 16.

After the game the college will be guests of Sacramento Junior College at a special post-game dance to be held in the Sacramento Gymnasium. Full details as to which orchestra will furnish the music for dancing or what type of music will be featured were not available by publication time.

All students taking part in the excursion will meet at the Ferry building at 3:45, from there they will proceed to the Oakland Mole and board the train. The followers of the football squad will arrive in Sacramento at approximately 6 o'clock. Kickoff time will be at 8 o'clock which will give the students adequate time to get to the stadium from the station. The stadium is about a mile from the station and it will be up to the students to decide on their own method of transportation to and from the stadium, Aydelotte said.

Students will be back in Oakland by 1:30. All last minute instructions will be given to the students on the train, commented Aydelotte.

Squad Receives Jolt As Nauman Enters Navy

Ram football stock took a sharp dive Thursday morning when it was learned that Al Nauman, star quarterback and spark plug of the college eleven, had been called up for active duty in the U. S. Organized Naval Reserves.

Confirmation, by Nauman's family, of first reports, disclosed that the gridder had been notified Tuesday night, and was required to join his unit on Wednesday morning.

According to Naval Reserve Headquarters of the 12th Naval District, Nauman is at present stationed aboard the Delta Queen, a reserve craft anchored at Yerba Buena Island.

Peace Society To Sponsor Student Opinion Poll

The Peace Society will sponsor a poll within the next few weeks to get a consensus of student opinion on the subjects of war, conscription, civil liberties, and peace, Alta Clisbee, president of the group announced.

Actual questions to be used in the poll are awaiting administrative approval, but it is probable that questions regarding the attitude of the college toward conscription and toward civil liberties and national defense will be asked. No names will be taken during the poll, and all answers to questions asked will be held in strict confidence, Miss Clisbee said.

Method For Taking Poll

Method tentatively agreed upon for taking the poll was outlined briefly by Paul Rosenthal, society vice-president. Each member of the college will be asked to show his blue registration card by roving "questioneers" from the Peace Society. Upon showing his card, the student will be asked the four questions which are to be included in the poll, his answers will be recorded on a mimeographed form, and his card will be checked. In this manner, the Peace Society will be able to question all members of the college, including even the small minority who have not purchased student body cards and still prevent anyone from voting more than once.

Society Awaits Results

Peace Society members under the sponsorship of Glen D. Camp, Gertrude Bolton, and John Horowitz, college instructors, are awaiting the results of the poll so that the group may plan its program in accordance with the wishes of the majority of the students, according to Miss Clisbee.

Dedication

Program Will Be Transcribed

Arrangements are now being completed with the National Broadcasting Company for broadcasting of the college dedication ceremony on November 10, either over Station KPO or KGO, Lloyd D. Luckmann, dedication chairman, revealed this week.

Although the entire ceremony will not be broadcast, a portion covering 15 minutes will be recorded for transcription, he said, Owing to the cost of establishing a land line to the campus, and the fact that NBC officials believe a better audience may be expected in the evening, the dedication will be aired at 8:30 from the studios instead of directly from the college at 1 o'clock, he added.

Tentative Program

Luckmann is scheduled to hold a conference with Jennings Pierce, NBC educational director, and other officials, at which more definite plans will be made. Tentative program, Luckmann said, will probably include statements by the principal speakers, music by the Americal Legion band, Post 233, selections by the college A Cappella choir, excerpts from the radio class program, and a description of the college and its facilities. Marie Weller, instructor in radio production, will aid with the script for this program, Luckmann commented.

Cooperation in the entire dedication is coming from many quarters, Luckmann disclosed. Assistance with the program may be secured from Mayor Angelo Rossi's Committee for National Citizenship Week through the cooperation of George Mullany, public relations director for the Board of Education, he remarked.

Students Aid Committee

Student groups which are cooperating with the dedication committee include a committee headed by Jean Arnold, Associated Students vice-president, which will help ready the grounds. Assisting this group will be the members of the Peace Society, who will organize and manage the flag ceremony following the dedication, at which the American Legion post of the Twin Peaks District, 233, will present the student body with an American flag, Luckmann said.

Thorogood Outlines Job Of Student Coordinator

Recently appointed student government coordinator, Alden Thorogood, high sophomore president today outlined the purposes of his office.

"In the past," he said, "all club activities have revolved around the finance committee. This situation has become increasingly hard on both the committee and the clubs. The coordinator will work with the various committees, with the AMS, the judicial council, and the welfare council.

"Although the office of coordinator is not new," he said, "its functions have been made more essential this semester."

Lyle Shultz, Associated Students president, in announcing the appointment of Thorogood, said last week, "Because as finance chairman Thorogood was in close touch with the problems which will now come under the head of coordination, it was felt that he would be the logical one to fill the position."

Shultz said the increased number of student body members and a more complex system of college social events were deemed responsible for the increased scope of the coordinator's office.

Part of the coordinator's activities will be in preventing overlapping and confliction of the social functions of the various organizations in the college, Shultz added.

Co-Op Venture Started; Student Aid Necessary

FOR many years, it has been the complaint of students that the college had no co-op store similar to those of other institutions. The answer to these complaints was "Wait until we get in the new building."

A co-op store run entirely by students of the college has been started. At present it occupies a small, unpretentious room and is handicapped by a lack of stock.

There is most definitely a need within the college for a business such as this and the humble beginning enhances its value for it will undoubtedly grow as the years pass.

The only difficulty with a co-op store is getting it started. Once this is accomplished it is fairly simple to continue. At the present time the biggest problem confronting the new venture is first the one of getting on its feet and developing from a puny infant into a sprawling child, and later a full-fledged adult.

Many students have evinced an interest in the co-op. Many have expressed the wish that it be successful. Unless students, through their support, can actively help the business, it will probably fall by the wayside in a very short time.

The co-op proposition is a vicious circle. The members need additional stock, but to buy additional stock they must have money from the stock they now have. They cannot get the money from their present stock unless they enlarge it enought to offer the students a variety from which to select. They cannot enlarge it unless they have money.

The entire situation calls for understanding and support from the students if they wish the co-op to succeed.

It will be tough sledding for a while, but if we sincerely and honestly want a student co-op, it is up to us to give it all the encouragement and support in our power.

May's Dismissal Creates Vital Issue For Colleges

DISMISSAL of Kenneth May as teaching assistant in mathematics from the University of California for his active membership in the Communist party brings to notice a polemical problem that portends many ramifications all over the country.

The action by the university's board of regents has naturally developed two sharply divided groups. The student publication at the university, The Daily Californian, editorially opposed the decision of the board of regents, charging it an "ominous" step away from the American tradition "full of the most dangerous implications."

From other sources the cry of "intolerance" and similar expressions have arisen.

On the other side of the fence are those who question the right of existence of a group that avowed—opposes and, from rather reliable sources, would not be loathe to depose our way of living. They also question the wisdom of exposing impressionable, easily-aroused college students to people working indirectly under Joe Stalin.

To put it bluntly, there is no room in state institutions for parties that advocate overthrowal of the present system of government. Let them question, even assail, the manner in which it is administered, but let them not attempt to undermine the fundamentals of that government.

Ideally the editorial columns of a student publication should attempt to present the general feelings of the college, not especially those of the editor or his staff. Whether or not the editorial in The Daily Californian reflected student sentiment there, we don't know.

We feel, however, that the stand this paper takes should be based on the majority opinion of this college. Forming a sincere judgement on this really important question is not simple. Think it over carefully.

The Ram's Horn on this page is the place to express your opinion. Why not take advantage of it? We want your thoughts. Incidentally, the comments of faculty members are not banned from the Ram's Horn.

Five Years Ago . . .

EDITOR'S NOTE: Wonder what was going on five years ago this week at the college? Here's the answer as compiled from Guardsman files by Theodora Wong.

FRIDAY, October 18, 1940—First midterms are long over, cinches received with mingled feelings. Students breath a sigh of some sort or other as they sharpen their pencils, wipe their slates and mend their socks, while pursuing their second grade for their FIRST semester at this new campus at Balboa Park.

The Spectator

HOLLYWOOD can take a bow as far as the quality of its fall releases is concerned. The remakably high standard that has been maintained in motion picture entertainment is evidenced by the fact that out of the 11 films reviewed to date, 10 have called for critical applause and superlative adjectives. Now, a twelfth film, Knute Rockne—All American has come to the nation's screens and necessitates our uncovering a new batch of compliments, words of praise and approbation. Knute Rockne—All American is a magnificent film, rich in human values, powerful in its dramatic unfolding, completely engrossing from the opening scene in the carriage shop of Knute's father in Norway to the final shot of the "Rock's" funeral in the Notre Dame chapel.

Several individuals rate particular bouquets. First, a bow to Scenarist Robert Buckner for a most excellent job. Rockne's life was full of rich material for a film. Buckner had the difficult task of forming a smooth, coherent continuity from that mass of research data contributed by Rockne's wife and friends. He succeeded admirably. The film hits the high-spots of Rockne's meteoric career from postoffice clerk, through his brilliant years at Notre Dame as a student until he finds himself coach of the "Fighting Irish." The story traces his years of triumph, his discovery of the great George Gipp, his discovery of the Rockne shift, his defense against charges of professionalism—all are interwoven skillfully into the story.

There are many other dramatic highlights, too numerous to list here, all tinged with authenticity. The death-bed scene of George Gipp, (splendidly portrayed by Ronald Reagen), deserves mention, however. It was one of the most poignant pieces of cinema ever presented.

Credit director Lloyd Bacon with a masterful job. The film truely ranks with the finest biographies yet produced (Zola, Pasteur, Edison, etc.).

The cast is flawless. Pat O'Brien, endowed with an uncanny make-up by Pere Westmore that recreates Rockne's features to perfection, gives the performance of his fine career. It's Pat's big opportunity and he makes the best of it. In support, Donald Crisp presents a grand interpretation of the kindly "Father Callahan," Gale Page makes Mrs. Rockne soft and sympathetic and Albert Basserman is the old chemistry professor who foresaw Rockne's future success.

Football shots from newsreels are utilized throughout the picture, but they are so neatly interspaced with Bacon's shots, that there is no chance to distinguish between the two.

Knute Rockne—All American rates the highest praise. It's an All American film for everybody.

On The Feminine Side

THERE comes a time in the life of every columnist when he or she suddenly realizes that there is nothing very special about the campus to warrant being written. With horror she discovers that there are no college dances in the immediate future, no local football games, no teas—not even the old stand-by of midterms to lament.

Then, although it may be against the usual policy, there remains nothing to do but to turn to various persons on the campus for subject matter. Hence, this column.

For one thing, we have never seen any one woman with so many completely different polka-dot ensembles as Jean Arnold, Associated Students vice-president. Vivacious Jean numbers among her dresses a lush navy and white polka-dot taffeta formal, a striking navy and white polka-dot street dress, and—that's right—a nicely tailored navy and white polka-dot sports culotte dress. The amazing thing about the whole matter is that one never tires of Jean's passion for polka-dots, probably because they're so crisp and fresh looking.

Under a definite handicap these days is Helen "Jeannie" Wilson who is hobbling around the college with a wicked looking bandage draped about one knee. The reason? Water on the knee, and it's no laughing matter, as far as Jeannie's concerned. Nevertheless, she turns up in her classes smartly dressed at all times, sometimes in her pet outfit of a long beige jacket worn with a long sleeved white shirt and one strand of pearls. An odd-green colored skirt completes the outfit.

Freshman student Jeanne Gregery has one of the smartest sports dreses we've seen this semester. In a muted blue corduroy, the dress sports a novelty belt made of very authentic looking slates held together by a bright colored cord. The lines of the dress are simple and classic, serving as a perfect background for the belt.

Another rather unusual touch seen recently on the campus is a two-strand necklace made of natural colored bamboo. Worn with a bright yellow sweater, the necklace is definitely fashion "news", Its lightweight appearance is extremely attractive, too.

An outfit emphasizing smart simplicity has caught more than one eye around the college. It is a two piece suit of narrow-wale corduroy in an odd Chinese-dragon blue. Worn without jewelry or any relieving touches the beauty of the suit depends upon its flawless lines and the vivid red hair of its wearer.

Freshman Inga Friedman wears a classic outfit with a definitely high fashion rating. It consists of a soft plaid skirt in dusky pink and blue shades, worn with a pale blue twin sweater set and pearls. With matching ankle socks, which are incidentally one of the campus musts at present, Inga was very nicely turned-out.

A heavy knit sweater is being worn by Betty McKinnon, sophomore student, with a blue tweed suit and a white shirt. Very collegiate and very smart in the opinion of the onlooker. Matching socks again, please note.

These are but a few of the numerous good-looking outfits we've seen this week.

Quotable Quotes

Women, throw aside your novel and take to detective stories for good reading these days. That's the advice of Dr. Louise Pound of University of Nebraska English department.

"Crime stories are the only ones which retain a plot," Dr. Pound said. As a result most people are pasing up the totalitarian or socialized novel, a product of the present social order, she said.

Shots At RAMdom . . .

AN OLD ADAGE

by that astute and dipsomanical scholar Otineb Giwselhic states in numerous uncertain terms that he who attends an art gallery goes best alone. (For this column we are wavering on the wild assumption that at least one of our readers "from the ocean to the mountain" does visit those halls where silence and profundity bewilderingly reign.)

We have had many a sad, albeit illuminating, experience with friends in these cosy galleries where the person who doesn't know enough to back 10 feet from a picture is judged an out and in Philistine who undoubtedly staggered in by mistake.

PRACTICALLY INSUFFERABLE

is the half-baked connoiseur who somehow knows that Picasso had a couple of vividly colored periods in his life, after which he degenerated horribly. He also knows that Peter Paul Rubens handled a "robust" brush. It is this person that insists on making every visit to those hallowed halls a personally conducted guide tour.

Many times his presence is embarrassing. Invariably, on entering a gallery, he will utter a sacrilegious yell, followed by "See that painting down there; it's by El Nicko." Whereupon he will violently sieze you by the wrist and drag you to the painting to prove his prophecy. The fact that he is usually wrong is a mere bagetelle. He passes his error off with, "Well, Fulano de Tal painted in the same school as El Nicko," and rushes you off to another room before you can quip, "So, they had old school ties in Spain too, huh?"

THE YOUNG THING

who always wants to sit this gallery out at least breaks the monotony. Besides she usually prefers etchings to the plebian oils.

THE HUMORIST

also breaks the monotony, in a shattering sort of way. His comments usually run from "I've seen better things in Esquire," to "How about a hamburger and a coke." We'd like to quote more but—, the censor board on this rag is terrific with a capital "rif."

Abstract paintings are the humorist's "meat." If some simple abstractionist foolishly happened to title his work with the simple name "Composition" or "Abstraction" his doom is sealed. From then on our humorist takes over. The result is usually such drolleries as Fried Eggs in the Days of Pericles, Prometheus Gazes on A Cigarette Lighter, Superman Meets Flash Gordon, etc.

You may see now why we are the leading disciple of the Giwselhician school in this country.

Faults Of Gossip Column Enumerated

• 'Air Raid'—Jump!!
Editor, The Guardsman:

It has been noticed that the new traditions are coming along nicely. For instance Powell Streeters and even some of the new students have been observed making a pointed effort to keep the grounds and building clean.

One method used is to pick up a piece of paper or other debris dropped by an offender and hand it to him.

"You dropped something old man."

The second time it is usually deposited in a suitable receptacle.

Another thing is the blowing of horns during class hours by students lounging in parked autos. These students as well as those creating a disturbance in the halls are politely reminded that classes are in session. Most people are only too glad to cooperate.

This is the laudable type of tradition, the tradition to be encouraged rather than making life unpleasant for freshman. A typical example is a recent cartoon in The Guardsman depicting life in a Southwestern University where freshmen are required to fall flat on the ground or dive for a nearby bush when an upper-classman (who should be helping make the newcomer welcome) shouts "AIR RAID."

• Protest Against Gossip
Editor, The Guardsman:

I noticed in a previous issue of The Guardsman a complaint from a student about the lack of a gossip column in the paper.

I do not agree with their point of view at all. As I recall in high school, the gossip column only mentioned over and over agin those prominent students of the college that were always doing something or other. This is all well and good but the majority of the students did not know these people at all and were therefore forced to read something about perfect strangers.

Then there is also the point of gossip hurting someone's feelings. This is quite true in many cases for although the comments may be made in a spirit of fun, someone usually gets hurt by the cracks of the gossip columnist.

Another thing I don't like about the gossip column is the way it sticks its nose into the private affairs of some of the students. I don't see where it is anyone's business who is dating who or even worse who was jilted by who, and comments of that type.

The gossip columnist usually minds everyone's business but his own. I'd rather we kept the snooping of some journalistic busy body out of the college paper. If some students want publicity, let them get it somewhere else.

Sports Ed. Still Writing Open Letters, BouKeis!

DEAR Mom: If the Sacramento trip is as good as the trip to Los Angeles, we wish we were twins. Not that we're blaming you, Mom, but we would be able to enjoy it twice as much, that's all. The 30 or more players and managers who made the trip really had their fun. They stayed in the Rosslyn Hotel. What with half the kids staying up half the night, playing cards, and the other half coming home in time for breakfast, the hotel will never forget the men of this college.

Attention! Rally Committee

We would like to call attention to the rally committee, because it is always looking for talent. The double quartet of Jim Honnert, Clark Johnson, Bill Garry and Johnny Blakemore, with Dean Edwin Browne, Malcolm Fraser (he's secretary to the Mayor), Mr. DeGohn, So. Pac. agent, and yours very truly tore the whole half-car apart with Sweet Adeline, Down By the Old Mill Stream, and a beautiful harmonizing job called Home On the Range.

Cavortings On the Car

Speaking of talent, Themis Nicolas' little ditty kept the whole car alive with laughs, and Jimmy Honnert's various sundry jokes in the back of the car—Mr. and Mrs. Lee Eisan and Mr. and Mrs. Jack Gaddy were on the train—were as stimulating as the Swiss fight chant. Visa Visa Visa Sa! Hey! Sahara!

Men Doing All Right

Dutch Danielson, the towering college center, dropped off at Santa Barbara for some fresh air and picked up a bit of the freshest airs that walked on heels. The men did all right for themselves. Chanting the war song, the team, in chain gang style, walked through the whole cars—as they passed little "chicks," the gang lost men—favorite catch line—"Tell us a story."

BouKeis For Ken

Ken Hagen, the Beetle-bug, played one of the best games ever in his position at end. His flat pass from Nauman he sprinted down the side-lines for some 30 yards. Defensively he played a beaut, and we think Lee has a good man—no end. (?)

Soccer Team Will Meet U.S.F. Dons Tomorrow In Fourth Tilt

Resuming league play tomorrow morning when they meet the U.S.F. Dons in their fourth soccer tilt, Coach Joseph Lantagne's boys are in top shape to attempt to take their second league win, Lantagne announced this week.

Though the locals lost a hard-fought battle to California last week end, the team morale is high and the boys are meeting the Dons on even terms, Lantagne said.

Stars for the Rams in the last two shin-kicking encounters have been Bert Korn, speedy right wing, Nick Desdevich, goalie, Bill Fairfield, fullback, and many others, Lantagne added.

Desdevich, because of his brilliant defense work in both the San Mateo and Cal encounters has been the outstanding player on the team. His quick kicks, time and again, have removed the ball from threatening territory. California players were unanimous in their praise of the excellent work of Desdevich. One of them said that the score would have been much greater (in favor of Cal) had Desdevich not been the goalie.

Not much is known about the Dons. They, also, are new to this league, and very little is known about their method of play. However, Lantagne feels that they won't be a soft touch for anybody. If their football teams are any indication of their athletic ability, a hard-fighting team should take the field against the Rams tomorrow morning.

While giving credit to all of the local boys who have sparked the play in the league contests, no mention was given to the goat of the team. Ted Theodus, president of the Associated Men's Students, has been in there plugging in every game, yet seems to get the blame for everything that goes wrong with the Ram attack.

Theodus will be exempt from the blame from now on, he has just been declared ineligible. He told The Guardsman so himself.

Track Plans Tentative; Pits, Field Take Shape

There has been nothing definite as yet in the realm of track activities, Russ Sweet, college track and field coach, announced this week.

"For the present, we have to be content with getting the track into shape and the pits installed before we schedule any outside practice meets," he said.

The track, at the present, is being put into shape to give the college speedsters a chance to limber-up. Measurements are now being made to give the distances for the various events. The 220 is expected to be a straight away race and the 440 will have two turns on the local track.

Women's Athletics

Splash Date Nears As Team Entrants Pour In; Big Turnout

All women's organizations of the college are urged to enter teams as soon as possible for the speed and form swimming intramural events of the coming Women's Athletic Association intramural splash party to be held October 24, at the YWCA on Sutter Street, Barbara Smith, WAA president, said this week.

Already entered in the form swimming and stunt intramural competition is a women's faculty team composed of Mary Perry, Edna Denhart, Miriam Gatley, Aileen Kinkel, and Bertha Mae Keller. White caps will be worn by the group, according to Miss Keller, and almost any style of bathing suit.

"We are out to win the intramurals, regardless of the young women of the college who compete against us," Miss Keller said.

Wearing navy blue bathing caps, team members including Barbara Gunn, Jane Visalli, Jeanne Arnold, Barbara Smith and Jezebel Winningham, will represent the Physical Education Majors club of the college in the speed and form swimming intramurals.

Ruth Hobson, June Hobson, Madeline McConnell, Milicent McConnell, Barbara Riffe, Joan Shafsky, Betty Moore and Antoinette Campagno will form an intramural team, sponsored by the ice skating club of the college.

More Teams Needed For Meet

"Many more teams are needed if the intramural splash meet is to be carried out successfully," Barbara Smith said.

"In most colleges, collegiate sororities make their initiates participate in the intramural-sports events. Since this is the initial women's intramural swimming contest, we urge the support of every women's organization of the college," Miss Keller said.

Only requirements for entering a team, is that the team be composed of five or six members, and that a definite color of bathing cap be selected for wearing during the intramural events, Miss Smith said. "Navy blue, red, and white bathing caps have already been chosen, but there are unlimited colors, and color combinations of bathing caps left, for other women's organizations to choose for representative purposes," she added.

Following the running off of intramural competition in speed and form swimming contests, as well as stunt swimming in balloon, teaspoon and lighted candle racing, open swimming for all those present will be held.

All Women Invited To Affair

All women of the college, and all women faculty members are invited to the affair. Tickets, selling for 25c may soon be purchased at the YWCA office, Miss Smith said.

Committees for the affair include: entertainment, Irene Weed; arrangements, Jane Visalli; hostess and invitations, Marie Richardson; decorations, Eleanore Leitner; rearrangements, Elma Oddstead; publicity, Wanda Simpson; refreshments, Antoinette Compagno, and games, Physical Education Majors Club.

Donna Smith Is Hostess Of Horselover's Luncheon

Scheduled for Sunday, October 27, is a horse ride and luncheon, to which members of the riding classes of this college have invited the riding classes of Sacramento Junior College, Laurine Bergin, physical education instructor, said recently.

Students from the coeducational riding classes of both colleges will ride along the beach and back through the sand dunes, Miss Bergin said.

Luncheon, provided by the women members of the group, will be served at the home of Donna Smith. In lieu of providing food, the men will do the dishes, she promised.

Marie Richardson Elected Cheer Leader

Elected to the office of cheerleader of the Women's Athletic Association is Marie Richardson, Barbara Smith, WAA president, announced this week.

Because no women appeared at the recent WAA council meeting to try out for the office of cheerleader, Miss Richardson who is a member of the WAA council, was elected unanimously to the office.

Her duties will consist mainly in leading WAA members in singing songs at various social functions.

Track Meet For Women Indoors October 25, 3 To 5

On October 25, from 3:30 to 5 p.m., an indoor track meet, to which members of the Galileo High School Girl's Athletic Association have been invited, will be held in the women's gymnasium of the college, according to Women's Athletic Association officials.

Main events of the day will be an indoor version of the broad jump, hurdles, relays, discus throw, and pole vault, Barbara Smith, WAA president said.

Program chairman for the event, Virginia Coker, horseshoe club manager, announced that no refreshments will be served in the gymnasium following the affair, but will be distributed to WAA members and guests outside the gymnasium at the close of the indoor track meet.

Hockey, Tennis Playdays Rescheduled For Former Date

Hockey and tennis playdays of the northern section of the Women's Athletic Association, have been rescheduled for November 2, and November 16, respectively, because they had been previously scheduled for the same day, Barbara Smith, WAA president announced.

Marin To Hold Badminton Tourney For Near Colleges

College badminton teams made up of members from the Women's Athletic Association and badminton classes, will journey to Marin Junior College on October 26, where they will compete in a badminton sports day, Bertha Mae Keller, physical education instructor, said this week.

Other teams participating in the sports day will be those representing San Mateo, Santa Rosa, Salinas, and Marin junior colleges, as well as San Francisco, and San Jose State colleges.

Women who are planning to go to the Marin playday are asked to pay 30 cents for luncheon, to Versa Cullen or Miss Keller by this afternoon, so that the money may be sent to Marin by Monday.

Registration for the sports event will be held from 9 to 9:20 a.m., after which a short sports rally will be held, Miss Keller said. Then the sports day will officially begin at Marin's Kentfield gymnasium, continuing until 1:30 p.m.

Each college will enter four singles and five doubles teams for competition. Selection of the teams to represent the college will be facilitated through the outcome of tournaments among members of both the WAA badminton club and badminton classes, Miss Keller announced.

Intramural

Games Swing On As Golf Gets In Stride

With most intramural sports well under way, one more, golf, starts tomorrow at Ingleside, Captain Fred C. McFarland announced this week.

Students interested in competing in the golf tournament are advised to see either McFarland, or the intramural managers, Bob Bush and Paul Postler for information concerning the actual playing time of the matches.

Six Basketball Teams Left

Basketball started last Friday with the elemination of several teams. If one team loses, it is automatically eliminated from further competition. Twelve teams started a week ago, and six of them were dropped then, Bush said.

Results of last Friday's tourneys are as follows: Chinese Students 47, Alpha Delta Epsilon 10; Hotel Division 19, Beta Tau 12; Mowlbrays Maulers 40, Beta Phi Beta 14; U.S. All Americans 45, Japanese Students 20; Police Training 30, Plumbers 10; The Eds 32, Spooks 21.

Referees for the games were Coach John Brady, Bob Schlesinger, and Ben Krinkler. Timekeepers and scorers were Bob Bush, Paul Postler, and Bob Hoffman.

Softball Narrowed Down

Softball is well underway at the present time, Bush announced. Several teams have been eliminated because of failure to appear at the scheduled time, and the race has narrowed down to about four clubs.

Teams Standings

Meanwhile, the intramural softball schedule is being played at a rapid rate. Following are the standings of the teams.

		Won	Lost
1.	The Eds	3	0
2.	Phi Mu Gamma	2	0
3.	Police Training	2	1
4.	Beta Phi Beta	2	1
5.	Tri Epsilon	2	2
6.	Japanese Students	2	2
7.	Beta Tau	1	1
8.	Lurgies	1	1
9.	Rifle Club	0	2

A point which should be brought out is the fact that the Ramblers, Newman Club, Block Society, and Foresters have been eliminated from further competition because of their failure to show up at their games, Bush said.

The first round of the tennis intramurals ended last Wednesday, the second is scheduled to start early next week, Postler announced.

Boxing, though not officially underway, will be the next sport to start, Joseph Lantagne, boxing coach, said this week. He sent out a call for boxing managers last Tuesday, and it was expected that several likely managers would turn out.

Lantagne asked that students interested in competing in the boxing intramurals wait to see him, or his managers, until the announcement is given concerning the boxing program.

Managers Like Reaction

Though spirit for the intramural program was slow to rise, the managers, Bush and Postler, are pleased with the enthusiasm which has been shown for this new program.

The managers requested that all students interested in the various intramural sports watch the bulletin board to the north of the main entrance for changes in schedules, and results of past activities.

McFarland Lauds Team's Ability As Season Nears

Captain Fred McFarland, rifle team coach, is very pleased over the team's showing in practice to date. McFarland says they are shooting in mid-season form already with the season weeks away.

Charles North, team captain, led the team in practice with a score of 189. Others shooting well were Templeton 185, Reichart 185, Pack 184, Gilette 188, and several others were in the one-seventies.

McFarland says this is very good shooting for so early in the season. McFarland set a mark for the boys to shoot at when he scored 195. He says that if any of the boys beat it he is willing to bend over and let them take a paddle to him.

Studies at Kent State University indicate that students from cities are healthier than those from rural areas. grades.

Both Colleges Open League Tonight In Memorial Stadium

Striding into their first conference game of the season after successful attempts at practice games, the college Rams face a desperate Sacramento Panther tonight at the Municipal Stadium at 8 p.m.

With a win over the strong Los Angeles City College last week despite a tiring trip, the Rams will jaunt to the Capital City favored two to one, or even with six points to their favor.

Hack Applequist, head keeper of the Panthers, has one tie to Sacramento Athletic Club, and lost to Stockton Junior College and to Chico State in three starts.

Rams Only One Loss

The Rams, however, have but one loss, the first game of the season, to Placer by a lopsided 7 to 0, but came back to bounce a cocky San Francisco State 19 to 13, beat Cal Frosh for the first time by a 6 to 0 score and last week, traveled 470 miles to Los Angeles and came back with the lean meat of the bacon, 7 points to 6.

From the publicity release from Sacramento came some information regarding the Panthers. Blocking, the sole important factor in offense, is one of the Cats' weakest points. Once past the line of scrimmage, the release said, the Panthers have a potential threat in Harry Terrel, halfback. Bob Libee and Bud Beustad at quarter and full respectively, and Bill Lee or Al Hulbert will compose the backfield.

Panther Has Threats

Terrell, according to Harry Wrinkle, publicity director, sprinted 34 yards to score the Panther's only six points of the season. Threats were revealed in the flank positions when Jack McClure, former Sacramento High star, and Don Dean of Michell, Nebraska continually broke in to nail Chico State's backfield.

The 6 to 0 score by which Chico State defeated the Panthers does not reveal the game, Wrinkle said. Their score came luckily when an offside penalty brought the Staters to Sacramento's one yard line, from where, with four plunges, Chico scored its one and only score.

Eisan's Team Smooth

Lee Eisan, Ram mentor, in the meanwhile, is working the team into a smoother working machine, concentrating mainly on offense. However, with his new system of a five and seven man line still in its embryo stage, perfection on defense is also being investigated.

Jim Honnert, star of last week's game when he converted for his winning score, will probably be in shape for the game, providing his hand is taped well to prevent further injury, the team doctor said. With Honnert starting at full, the Rams have a potential blocker and one of the best line plungers in the league.

Backfield Remains Same

Al Nauman, spark of every game so far, will be back at quarter, with Luke Lowell and Dave Cunningham, acting captain for the last two games, in inside and outside halves respectively.

The line will probably be the same as that of the Los Angeles game, namely, Herb Taylor and Ken Hagen at ends, Bill Windeler and Johnny Blakemore at tackles, Clark Johnson and Al Larracou at guards and Dick Wilson at center.

Greenhorns Win Respect

Coach Eisan has molded these men from inexperienced greenhorns to one of the most respected junior college elevens in the league. With the opening of the league games, power plays may predominate for the Rams, making the games more colorful than those of unimportant games, where razzle-dazzle plays have been used.

The excursion train will leave the ferry at 3:45 and reach the Capital city around 6 p.m., Pete Aydelotte, excursion charman said.

Basketball

More Cuts In Cage Squad

Having once cut the cage squad already, Tom Wilson, college basketball coach, announced that a further cut of the aspirants was in the offing.

As it now stands, there are about 65 men still out for the sport, Wilson plans to eliminate about 20 of these. He expects to have between 40 and 45 men on the squad when he is through.

Wilson expects to put a team on the floor that will average over six feet. Among the men he has in mind are Joe Popvich, Bob Staynor, and Bob Dudman. These men are all over six feet and, according to Wilson, fast on their feet.

Short Team Possible

Another possibility that Wilson has in mind is to put a short team into action. As the situation now stands, Wilson could put a team of any size, shape, or form on the field. All of these teams would have about the same amount of ability, he indicated.

When the final member has been dropped from the squad, Wilson plans to convert the squad into two units, A and B. According to him there will be no jayvee team this year. The members of the B unit will be under Wilson's eye and will be watched for any improvement.

No Comment On Mosler

Wilson made no comment on the news that George Mosler, last season's letterman, would not return to the basketball wars. Wilson admitted that he could use him if he turned out, but was not terrifically in need of the veteran.

Wilson promised to have a league schedule for next season's games ready for the next issue of The Guardsman.

Possible Block For Skiers; Probe Continued By Ogg

Bob Ogg, college ski team captain, last week conferred with Dave Gebbs, ski team captain of Salinas Junior College, concerning the progress of skiing in the various junior colleges. Discussion was about the results of the college meet last March, plans for the continuation of the annual meet, and of the future skiing prospects.

Skiing at Salinas will soon become an official block letter sport as it is in Sacramento and Placer Junior Colleges, Ogg reported.

The college ski team is one of the better teams in the state and has good prospects for the coming season, Ogg said. The team has the best chances of taking a place in the Pacific Coast Intercollegiate Championships, but as yet is not a recognized sport, Ogg announced.

A team election was held which found Stanley Ward defeating Pat Bourland for the office of vice-president vacated by Lu Antonicelli. Jim "Ducky" Morrison won a substantial victory over Art Chamberlain in filling the executive committee office vacated by Foster Jessup.

The next meeting of the team will take place within two weeks, Ogg announced.

Ice Carnival Date Still Tentative As Viola Miles Assumes Presidency Vacated By Champion Bill Hart

Although no date has been set for the second Ice Carnival to be sponsored by the college Ice Skating Club, the event will definitely be held at the end of the semester, Joseph Williams, advisor of the group, announced this week.

Among the highlights of this forthcoming carnival, as revealed by clubs, will be an original duet exhibition by Viola Miles, vice-president, and Peggy Egan, which features a double arabesque spin. Also on the list of events will be demonstrations on ice of the waltz, the fox-trot, the fourteen-step, and the tango, it was announced.

Scheduled to precede the carnival is a skating contest for couples, officers of the club revealed. Following the carnival, the skate club will sponsor a dancing competition for members, they added.

Because Bill Hart, president of the skating group, cannot attend meetings owing to his class schedule, Miss Miles will preside at them in his place, Williams said.

Club Advisory Board

Sixteen Clubs Approved; Six Temporarily Suspended

Sixteen college organizations were granted renewal of charters and two were put on a year's probation prior to receiving charters by the Club Advisory Board at its meeting last Tuesday, while at the same time six clubs were suspended.

Clubs in good standing now number twenty-six, including those whose applications for renewals were approved at the previous meeting of October 1. They are listed by Bob Ogg, CAB president, as follows:

Alpha Delta Epsilon, Alpha Gamma Sigma, Alpha Lambda Chi, Army and Navy Club, Astronomy Club, Beta Tau, Chinese Students' Club, Foresters' Fraternity, Forum Club, Home Economics Association, Hotel and Restaurant Management Society, Japanese Students' Club, Music Club, Newman Club, Nu Epsilon Sigma, Peace Society, Phi Alpha Omega, Phi Beta Rho, Phi Rho Pi, Physical Education and Recreation Majors' Club, Pick and Hammer Club, Pi Mu Gamma, Rifle and Pistol Club, Ski Club, Tri Epsilon, and Women's Service Society.

Two On Probation

Of this list, one of the clubs, Alpha Gamma Sigma, college honor society, had been ousted last semester for failure to file charter applications during two consecutive semesters. Another group, Phi Rho Pi, debating honor society, was suspended at the same time because it had failed to do this for the one term. Both clubs, according to their advisers, have been reorganized, the latter with an entirely new membership, and are operating under CAB probation.

Clubs now in suspension are those which failed to meet the charter application deadline of Tuesday, and are named by Marion Schrick, CAB vice-president and membership chairman, as follows:

Alpha Phi Omega, Beta Phi Beta, Block Society, National Collegiate Flying Club, San Francisco Junior College Chapter, Omicron Phi Pi, and Skating Club.

May Regain Standing

Any of these may be removed from suspension upon filing of charter application before the end of the semester and upon the subsequent approval of the membership committee, Ogg said. It is expected that most of these organizations will do so, as happened last semester when all but one of the clubs classed as inactive regained their good standing.

However, a former officer of the flying club revealed this week that this group has been dissolved because most of the aeronautics students who had comprised the membership have been called to serve with the naval air force.

Funds Accounted For

Ward Nichols, college comptroller, appeared at this last meeting of the Club Advisory Board to explain the accounting of student funds. According to administrative ruling, all club dues and other incoming funds should be deposited at the college bank, Nichols announced. For expenditures of $2 or more, a purchase order describing services to be obtained and goods to be received, and signed by the faculty sponsor and club president, must be presented. An approved invoice may then be secured and money rendered. In the case of a purchase amounting to less than $2, the student must make a cash sale and present, at the bank, a sales receipt approved by the adviser, and funds will be rendered, he said.

Barn Dance Orchestra To Be Chosen This Week

An orchestra for the Associated Men Students barn dance to be held Saturday, November 16, at Alvarado's Barn will be chosen this week, Ted Theodus, AMS president, announced.

"There will be hotdogs for 1000 persons, 50 gallons of cider, and plenty of buns," he promised.

Definite plans for the barn dance are now underway and will be completed by the end of this week, Theodus said.

News Broadcast

Students Look Behind Scenes

A program depicting the behind-the-scenes action preceding the airing of news broadcasts, will be viewed by students of college radio classes in Room 100 on Monday, October 28, when Wayne Miller, director for one of the daily news broadcasts, will appear at the college, Lloyd D. Luckmann, college faculty member said.

Through presentation of the program, Miller will show how material for news broadcasts is gathered, how it is edited, and how it is composed for relaying on the air waves. Principles of the "sport-broadcast" and flash bulletins will also be explained.

From October 28 to November 1, the program which will see its intial presentation here, will be enjoyed by students of the various colleges in the bay area, Luckmann revealed.

Also invited to view the program on October 28, in addition to students enrolled in radio technique courses, are all other students of the college who are interested in the workings of radio and are free at 3 p.m., Luckmann said.

Teachers' Association Invited Here October 21

Guests of the Faculty Association on Monday, October 21, from 3:30 to 5:30 p.m. will be the members of the Teachers' Association of San Francisco, and their president, George Learned, principal of Roosevelt Junior High School, Lloyd D. Luckmann, president of the Faculty Association, said this week.

"On Monday, October 28, the faculty of Girls High School and Charles Danforth, the principal, will be guests of the college. After a tour of the building they will be served tea in the college cafeteria," he commented.

Women members of the Girls High School faculty will be presented with corsages. This is through the courtesy of Henry Schrumpf of the floriculture department, he added.

Clark Chittick Advances In Hotel Management Work

Mrs. Hilda Watson, chairman of the Hotel and Restaurant division of the college, has announced the advancement of another graduate of her division.

He is Clark Chittick, who attended the college several semesters ago, and was formerly employed as a clerk at Yosemite Lodge in Yosemite National Park.

Chittick has been made Room Clerk of the Del Monte Lodge in Pebble Beach.

October 23 Last Day To Drop Courses

Last day for students to drop courses is Wednesday, October 23, Mary Jane Learnard, assistant registrar, announced this week.

"All students who feel it advisable for them to lighten their program by dropping a class or classes should consult immediately with their advisers, so that this change may be made before October 23," she said.

"Any student who withdraws from a class after this date will receive an F final for the course," Miss Learnard warned.

U.C. Debaters Invite Meet With Luckmann's Group

Invitation has been received by the debaters of the college to participate in discussions with the freshman debating groups of the University of California and Saint Mary's College, Lloyd D. Luckmann, coach of the college debaters announced today.

Date for the encounter with California is Wednesday, November 6, at 4 p.m., in Wheeler Hall. The topic for the discussion will be Resolved: That the United States should give aid, short of war, to Great Britain. Martin Rosenblatt and Erwin Swett will prepare the affirmative argument while Robert Nossen and Leland Martin will speak for the negative. There will be a class rehearsal on October 29.

To Meet Moraga

On Tuesday, November 26, at 3:30 p.m. the college debaters will meet representatives from Saint Mary's, at Moraga and will argue the negative side of the question, Resolved: That the United States should retire completely from the Orient. Robert Roach and Myron Du Bain will uphold the affirmative side of the question opposing Jack McKay and Ogden Wheeler in the clas rehearsal scheduled for November 12.

"Both debates are home and home affairs, that is the questions will be discussed once away from home and once here on our own campus," Luckmann commented. "The debates are non-decision," he added.

Among 22 other representatives from Central California colleges to attend the first Saturday Monthly Debate Conference at the University of California were Jack McKay and Robert Nossen. Discussion on the question, That the Western Hemisphere should form a permanent alliance or union for defense against foreign aggression, took place from 10 to 12 a.m. and from 1 to 3 p.m. The representatives were guests of the California debaters at luncheon.

Debaters To Judge

Students of the debating class of the college have been requested by R. Raisner of Denman Junior High School to act as judges for the Junior High School Debate Tournament to be held December 3, 4, 5, and 6, Luckmann revealed. The judges will be chosen from the roster of the Phi Rho Pi Debating Honor Society.

Winter Problem Adds To Cafe Ills

With conditions in the college cafeteria presenting a definite problem and with the threat of winter weather increasing the proportions of the problem the judiciary committee has come forward with suggestions as to how to alleviate the present situation.

Last Sunday the above mentioned committee held a meeting at the home of one of its members, Edward Hardies, in order to establish some plan in regard to the cafeteria's dilemma.

This week, as an aftermath, another meeting was held with Dean Edwin C. Browne, in which certain pertinent facts were discussed and certain other decisions made.

As a result of this meeting Dean Browne revealed the following: The college judiciary committee believes that the overcrowded condition of the cafeteria during the noon hours is a result of the lack of courtesy and consideration on the part of the students, and further, the committee believes that immediate action should be taken to remedy the situation.

Suggestions of the various members have been considered and in a short time the following will be the operating method of the cafeteria:

In the larger room only those students using the tables for lunching will be allowed, while the smaller room will be set off for the convenience of others wishing merely to have a place to pass the time between classes.

Co-Op

Association May Soon Be Incorporated

Plans to incorporate the recently organized Junior College Cooperative Association which operates the co-op located on Lee and Ocean Avenues are now under consideration, Hal Simpson, president of the group, revealed this week.

Whether or not this step will be taken will be decided when two meetings are held at the store today, one at 11 o'clock and another at 12, Simpson announced. Two meetings are scheduled so that those who have a class at the earlier hour may attend later.

Students Invited To Meetings

All students who are interested in the business of the co-op are invited to attend, he said, but only members may vote on any decisions that may come up.

Incorporation of the association will protect the individual members should any suit of libel be instigated against the store, officers of the group asserted in recommending this action.

Lecture Notes Now Available

Beginning today, the co-op will regularly supply notes for all lectures in biology 11a, zoology 21a, and psychology 21a, Jack McKay, general manager, disclosed. Notes for sociology 11a, anatomy 2a, and bacteriology 12 will also be available from Monday on, he added.

Opening of the co-op circulating library with a supply of 1938-39 fiction and non-fiction works was also announced. Library service will be free to members, while non-members will be charged 10 cents for the first week for the use of a book and 1 cent a day thereafter, McKay said.

All of the books are outstanding modern work, according to Ruth Hobson, librarian. Among these is a collection of Hitlerisms illustrated with cartoons, which is entitled Lunacy Becomes Us.

Group To Sponsor Socials

Among the activities of the co-op association will be recreational and social function, and dances, parties, and outings will be scheduled for the coming months, Simpson disclosed. Members are also looking forward to the completion of a cooperative camp in the Pine Crest area, 10 miles from Yosemite and near Strawberry Lake, he further revealed.

The group is at present affiliated with the Associated Cooperatives of Northern California and the Cooperative League of the United States, he said.

"We must emphasize that our co-op is more than merely a commercial venture," Simpson commented. "We are also seeking to be active socially and educationally."

Neither the co-op nor the association under which it functions is sponsored by or in any way connected with the college faculty or administration, since it is contrary to the policy of the public schools to enter the commercial field, it was announced.

No Parking On Hillsides North, South Of Building

With most of the prohibited areas now cleared of parked cars, the next step in eliminating traffic hazards about the campus will be that of clearing the hillsides north and south of the building, Edwin C. Browne, dean of men, announced this week.

"This step is necessary because of two factors," Dean Browne remarked. "The first is the danger in hillside parking in cramped quarters. The second is the undignified and offensive appearance of irregular parking, which is of course an unnecessary eyesore, because there is sufficient room on level grounds both on and off campus."

Areas in which parking is prohibited includes, besides the hillside sections, the paved surface in front of the main building, leading to, but not including Phelan Avenue, and the level ground behind the building, which is used as a loading zone by workmen.

Sufficient space may be found for parking on Phelan Avenue, and the level area to the north and south of the building, beyond the hilly grounds, Dean Browne indicated.

"It is anticipated that continued sympathetic cooperation will influence the drivers in making our campus present an orderly appearance," he added.

Junior College Council

First Meeting To Feature Lecture By Dr. M. E. Hill

For its first session of the semester, the Junior College Council will meet on Monday evening, October 21, at 8 o'clock, in Room 136, Claude A. Shull, president of the council announced recently.

"Main speaker of the evening will be Doctor Merton E. Hill, Director of Admissions at the University of California," he said.

Dr. Hill is known as one of the foremost men interested in the problems of the junior college and its place in the community. He will speak relative to the latter subject at the council meeting.

Was Coordinator

When this college first started in 1935, Hill acted as a coordinator between the University of California and the college itself. He worked with the organizers of this college and helped in its development.

Teaching at two campuses, the University at Berkeley, and the University of California at Los Angeles, Hill commutes during the week from one campus to the other. His courses consist, in some part, of the principles of the junior college and school administration.

Dr. Hill was formerly the principal of Chaffee High School and later president of the junior college, which has erected a hall in his honor.

Champions Junior Colleges

In his capacity as Director of Admissions at the University at Berkeley, Hill heads the committee which passes on the transcripts which are received from students wishing to enter. Relative to entering students, Hill believes that students who have transferred from junior colleges do as well as the students who have been in the university for their first two years of college training.

Championing the junior college and its place in the educational system, Hill is highly regarded throughout the state.

"We hope that many of the parents will come to the meeting to hear this fine speaker," Shull further said, "and also to take a tour around the new building."

Music By Badger

Special music by the A Cappella choir of the college, under the supervision of Flossita Badger, will be another of the highlights of the program. The songs to be rendered are as follows: A Joyous Christmas Song, by Gaveart; Jesu Priceless Treasure, by Bach; Listen to the Lambs, by Dett; and Scotland's Burning, by Schaefer. Words of greeting to the mothers and fathers will be extended by President Cloud and Mrs. George Hearst, President of Second District PTA.

"The council is a branch of the PTA," Shull concluded, "and we would like it to be one of the best in the state. If we can get a great number of the parents to join this meeting, we will be very happy.

While Thinking

COLLEGE

IN a recent issue of The Guardsman, this column casually mentioned that "The Executive Council is the same as ever (nuff sed)."

Since then, there have been several objections to this section from annoyed student officers. Perhaps it would be well to explain.

The council actually is still the same. Ever since the writer can recall, it has been composed of 10 members, two-thirds of them the strong, silent type, who sit there and say nothing. The other third does all the talking, all the work, and suggests all the motions or amendments concerning the various subjects that come up for discussion.

This semester, the group has hit a new low. Two-thirds of the members, in addition to saying nothing and doing nothing, give themselves a perfect score by not even taking the trouble to vote.

One can console himself with the fact that this is true with most governing bodies in existence today, but this is small consolation when one considers that the Executive Council is theoretically supposed to handle and adequately solve the problems concerning the welfare of the college.

What can we expect of future groups that have the welfare of more than just a college at stake, if this is the attitude adopted by the young student leaders of today?

Students who are interested in watching their government in action might do well to drop in at Ex Council meeting any Wednesday at 12 M in Room 254. It will prove very enlightening, to say the least.

SPEAKING of the Ex Council, there is a rumor about that the head of one of the student activities has threatened to resign unless he is given a free hand in handling and arranging the affairs of his organization.

The party in question evidently has not heard of the old adage about two heads being better than one, because he seems to resent help from any source. Perhaps someone should tell him that mutual cooperation is the best way to make anything succeed.

A ROUND of applause to the members of the Rally Committee for doing such an excellent job handling the Sacramento excursion. The committee worked very hard and the results certainly showed it, for the trip was one of the best of its kind ever undertaken by the students.

MOST interesting and widely discussed question among the student body at present seems to be, "What is the welfare council doing?"

Last semester, the group, after stumbling about a bit, got on its feet and conducted a survey of student opinion on extra curricular activities.

This semester, after looking into the yearbook problem which was then turned over to an entirely separate committee, the welfare council has done nothing.

In The Guardsman was a story to the effect that plans for cooperative dormitories had been abandoned. What plans, other than some discussion at meetings were made?

Surely this, our first semester in a new campus, must give some problems of student welfare for the council to work on. What about the bus situation for the rainy season? What about an investigation of the class interval system? What about investigating the new co-op store that has opened and perhaps lending it a helping hand?

What about all these things, Welfare Council?

FACULTY

A WEEK ago Jack Benny on his Sunday night radio program used the words "puerile" and "banal" to evoke laughs.

Recently a faculty member used these same words in describing college publications, only they weren't used for humor.

This wouldn't be the first time The Guardsman itself might have been called names, but we are surprised that a faculty member lacks the originality and ingenuity of contriving his own uncomplimentary remarks but instead has to borrow them from one of our best comedians.

It is surprising how many people one will find in the world that consider themselves authorities on subjects with which they are unfamiliar. Then too, it is also interesting to note the many people who have a little knowledge on a subject and then attempt to pass themselves off as thoroughly versed in it.

It does seem a little presumptuous that someone who is superior in his field should examine one not even closely allied and be confident that he knows all whereof he speaks.

Richfield Reporter

Newscasters Show Radio Technique

How the popular newscasts of the Richfield Reporter are presented and compiled for the nightly program will be demonstrated by its editor and his staff to college radio classes and any other students interested, Monday, October 28 from 3 to 3:30 p.m. in Room 100, Lloyd D. Luckmann, faculty member, announced.

The program will be presented through the cooperation of Jennings Pierce, director of educational broadcasts for the National Broadcasting Company.

"We appreciate the opportunity to present this educational public service demonstration before your college, in the interest of journalism, public speaking, and the best in radio technique," Pierce said in a communication to President Archibald J. Cloud.

All the demonstrating will be conducted by Wayne Miller, editor of the news program, and John Wald and Don Forbes, the reporters.

They will describe how they collect and edit the news, how they reduce the enormous amount of news received daily to their 15 minute program, how they treat controversial news and propaganda.

"These young men are very personable, enthusiastic, accurate, and are splendid examples of top-flight newscasters," Pierce commented.

It is estimated that these men speak to an audience of two million every night. The Richfield Reporter is now in its tenth year on the air.

Tomorrow Is Last Day To Drop Courses

Tomorrow will definitely be the last day to drop classes, Mary Jane Learnard, assistant registrar, warned this week.

After tomorrow, all students who drop a class will receive an F final for the course, Miss Learnard said.

"I would advise any student who feels he is carrying too many units to see his adviser immediately so that he can make the change before tomorrow," she added.

"I would also advise any student who has received a cinch notice, to decide whether he is able to do better work. If not, he had better drop the course officially before tomorrow," she said.

WSS To Hold Week-End Excursion October 25, 26

All members are invited to the Women's Service Society's week end excursion to be held at Alpine Lodge on October 25 and 26, Mildred Bartosiewski, announced.

Plans have been completed for the trip and all those going are to meet at the Mill Valley station at 10:30 a.m., she added.

According to Miss Bartosiewski, the excursion is to honor the new members. She urges that all the old members come to welcome them into the society.

While there the girls will do all their own work, such as cooking and keeping the lodge clean.

The price per person will be 75 cents. This fee will cover transportation to the lodge from the Mill Valley station.

Peace Society Schedules Dance, Invites College

A dance sponsored by the Peace Society will be held on Thursday, October 24, Alta Clisbee, president of the group, announced.

This dance will be open to the whole student body and will be free, she added.

Professional entertainment will be furnished by the American Peace Mobilization Society, Miss Clisbee said, and that entertainment will consist of singers and dancers.

A raffle of a record album of Victor Herbert melodies will be the feature of the evening, the club plans indicated.

Refreshments will be free and games and records will be played. The latter include some Paul Robeson and some Trinidad calipso records, Miss Clisbee said.

Yearbook Name

Irwin Emery Wins Prize

Irwin Emery submitted the prize-winning title, Rampages, for the college yearbook, Dorothy Trood, editor of the book, announced yesterday. Emery will receive a complimentary copy of Rampages as an award for naming the publication.

Tickets for the yearbook will go on sale shortly, Lillian Hoyle, publicity representative, revealed. The price of the book has definitely been set at $1.50 and it will be paid in installments. The initial charge will be 25 cents for a booklet and thereafter 25 cents will be paid for stamps to be sold every two weeks on stamp-selling days. These stamps will be pasted in the booklet until the book is entirely paid for, Miss Hoyle said.

More photographs are needed for the contest to get pictures of football and other sports for publication. The photographs must be 8 by 10 and must be action shots. Beverly Pasqualetti is the photography adviser for Rampages. The student who submits the winning picture will also receive a complimentary copy of the yearbook. A minor sports photography contest is also being conducted, Miss Hoyle said.

The dummy for the yearbook is being planned by Miss Trood and her staff and work on the publication is progressing rapidly. Muriel Grenelle, art editor, still needs more artists on her staff, Miss Hoyle added.

Low Soph Hotel Night Planned For November 20

Wholesale invasion of the St. Francis' Mural Room by the college on low sophomore night is planned for Wednesday, November 20, Ogden Wheeler, low sophomore publicity chairman disclosed today.

Falling on the eve of the Thanksgiving holidays, the sophomore semi-formal will feature the music of Freddy Martin's orchestra, Wheeler said, adding that Martin has been contacted and has promised to cater especially to the college on that night.

Bids $1.66

Price of bids to the affair has been set at $1.66. This is considered extremely low for a dance of this type, Wheeler said, adding that price is expected to produce a large attendance.

"It is traditional for the low sophomores to hold some sort of large function each semester," he said. "This fall we have decided to have something which the whole student body can enjoy, and therefore, we've picked an affair and location that will be worthy of the students' attendance.

"Since the dance will be held just before a four day holiday, and the price is so low there is no reason why everyone can't attend. The price of $1.66 plus Freddy Martin's music makes a chance no one can afford to miss."

More Dancers, More Room

The greater the attendance, the greater will be the room reserved for the college, Wheeler pointed out. Dancing will begin at 9 o'clock, he said.

The committee in charge of the dance, according to Wheeler, consists of Bill Williams, low soph president; Anita Welt, low soph secretary; Jean Arnold, social committee chairman, and Wheeler.

The committee is going to exert every effort, Wheeler said, to insure the success of the dance. "We would like to make the semi-formal something that we hope will become a tradition as well as show the St. Francis that when the college puts on an affair it can really do a 'bang-up' job of it."

College Floriculture Class Does Unique Work For Exhibits

By NORA BAKER

Those striking basket and bowl arrangements of the autumn shades of chrysanthemums, scarlet begonia corsages, and carnation football corsages, which have graced the interiors of the display cases in the main hall of the college for the past few weeks were not concocted by professional florists—professional-looking as the arrangements have been, they were completed here in this college by members of the floriculture class under the direction of Henry Schrumpf, faculty adviser.

Especially indicative of the type of work being accomplished by the group, is the bridal arrangement of flowers, which was placed in the display case just outside the college cafeteria.

Unique, was the word for the football corsages which occcupied the limelight in the display cases in the main hall of the college. White carnations with a red chenille letter "S" bound together with a little wire was a representative football corsage of Stanford University. The color theme of St. Mary's was successfully carried out by a football corsage composed of eight red carnations letterd with an "S" and "M" in blue chenille.

With 14 years of experience in the industry behind him, Schrumpf has set up as his goal for instruction in the course that of really unique arrangements of flowers in all phases and types of arrangements.

Strangely enough this is not the first semester that a course in commercial flower arrangement has been given in the college. Hidden away last semester in the Galileo Cafeteria, students in the course produced some of the same flower masterpieces that have been on display this semester for the benefit of all the students of the college.

Flower workshop of those students of the college who are responsible for the present beautification of the halls is located on the third floor of the building in Room 322. Upon entering the room, the casual observer is amazed by the professional florist atmosphere that the class room takes on, as students bend over colorful sprays of flowers and with deft motions of their fingers, and pieces of wires and ribbons, actually produce something that might have emerged from a local flower shop.

According to Schrumpf the opportunities for employment in the flower industry for trained young men is almost unlimited. Men of the college who are looking toward future fields of employment might enroll next semester in this outstanding terminal course which is being given by the college in floriculture.

Rallies

New Policies Outlined For Efficiency

In an attempt to create more efficient and better rallies, a committee of four faculty members, appointed by President Archibald J. Cloud, has drawn up a series of policies classifying college assemblages into three separate groups—namely, rallies, college meetings, and student business meetings.

Members of the committee are Alden W. Smith, chairman, Marie Weller, Claude Shull, and Louis G. Conlan.

If this plan works out weekly assemblies may become a part of college activities and outside speakers of unusual interest would be introduced to the student body. Rallies would be put on a more official standing, Smith said. The powers of the student committee will not be infringed upon by the faculty group, he added.

Athletic rallies will be governed by the Rally Commissioner, according to the policy, college meetings by the college president, and Associated Students' meetings by the student president.

Any conflicts arising from the above arrangement will be adjusted by the Executive Council, and any meeting which involves two or more of the defined purposes will also be adjusted by the Executive Council.

The plan proposes that the first meeting of the semester shall be a college meeting, and an official college calendar shall include all dates of gatherings indicating the type of meeting.

Visiting speakers must be approved by the college president before the speaker may appear on the campus.

Members of the faculty who wish to promote a student meeting must seek a blank provided for that purpose from Conlan. After receiving Conlan's signature the petitioner must next get the approval of Edward H. Redford for a meeting place. When the blank is completely filled out, it must be taken to the president's committee on College Assemblies and Meetings, where it would be checked to make sure that the kind of meeting and its purpose conformed to the rulings of the Associated Students and of the committee.

Members of the Associated Students who wish to promote a student meeting should also go through the above mentioned procedure.

The types of meetings were classified as follows in the committee's report;

Section 2: Any general meeting of the Student Body, the purpose of

Scholastic Council

New Group Gets Under Way To Boost Scholarship

Tentative plans for the semester's activities of the scholastic council were recently outlined by Mary Frances Malone, chairman of the group.

"Although the other two members of the council have not been appointed as yet, I am being helped at present by Lyle Shultz, Associated Student president, and Alden Thorogood, coordinator of student activities, in laying these plans," Miss Malone declared.

Possibility of instituting a plaque to be inscribed with the name of the graduating student with the highest scholastic rating is being discussed, she said. The idea has met with favorable comment from faculty members and administration members.

"We are also planning to unite the various honor societies in the college into a body interested in scholastic activities," Miss Malone remarked. "With such a unified group it would be possible to institute a coaching staff to assist students desiring help in particular subjects and to put on an assembly this semester. The cooperation of all societies would be very necessry to carry out these plans successfully."

The scholastic council is acting to increase an interest in academic activity at the college and to sponsor a wider interest in scholarship, she said.

"We may also cooperate with Alpha Gamma Sigma in awarding scholarship pins which are awarded at commencement exercises each year," Miss Malone said.

Further details concerning the scholastic council will be available in the next issue of The Guardsman at which time two new members of the committee will have been appointed, she promised.

"If there are any students who are interested in the problem of furthering an interest in scholastic activities on the campus, their suggestions and ideas will be most gratefully accepted," Miss Malone commented.

Continuing in her explanation of the scholastic council's object, she said, "We hope to make the scholastic group's influence felt on the campus. Moreover, there is no reason for students in honor societies to be confined to dry, uninteresting activities. We mean to offer not only serviceful activities but also enjoyable ones to the students in those various honor groups."

NYA Needs 1000 Men For National Defense

One thousand young men between the ages of 18 and 24 inclusive are wanted by the NYA outside of college for National Defense training, Edward H. Redford, college NYA director has announced.

This training, as outlined by Redford, will include various types of work with heavy machine tools and trades relating to national defense.

Any student desiring to enroll in this program, Redford said, must be taking no more than 12 units of college work, and must be a citizen of the United States.

Application may be made at the NYA offices at 1182 Market Street or by contacting either Redford or Claude T. Silva in Room 148.

College Women

Egan, Hubbert In USF Play

Loretta Egan and Virginia Hubbert have been cast in the latest production of the College Players of the University of San Francisco, You Can't Take It With You, scheduled for presentation October 22, 23, and 24.

Miss Egan has been cast in the leading romantic role. She is enrolled in the dramatic school of the evening division, and is declared by director James J. Gill to be excellent in the part of the sane member of the Vanderhoff family who falls in love with the son of a wealthy capitalist.

The play is to be given from the stage of the little theater on the university campus.

The Kaufman and Hart vehicle is a Pulitzer prize play, and the second Pulitzer winner to be presented on the Don stage in the past year.

Other prominent stars in the play include veteran actors Al Coenan, Jim Herning, Ed Marron, Warren White, and Alberta Dixon.

You Can't Take It With You has been professionally staged in this city and other parts of the country. The screen play was also quite popular.

Aid To Britain, Far East Policy Up For Debate Team

College debaters will participate in debates with the University of California and St. Mary's College during the month of November, declared Lloyd D. Luckmann, debating team coach.

The encounter with California will take place on Wednesday, November 6, at 4 p.m. in Wheeler Hall. The topic for discussion will be Resolved: That the United States should give aid, short of war, to Great Britain. Martin Rosenblatt and Erwin Swett will prepare the affirmative argument while Robert Nossen and Leland Martin will speak on the negative. There will be a class rehearsal on October 29.

On Tuesday, November 26, at 3:30 p.m. college debaters will meet Saint Mary's debaters at Moraga. The question, Resolved: That the United States should retire completely from the Orient. Robert Roach and Myron Dubain will uphold the negative side of the question opposing Jack McKay and Ogden Wheeler in the class rehearsal scheduled for November 12.

"Both debates are home and home affairs, that is the questions will be discussed once away from home and once here on our own campus," Luckmann commented. "The debates are non-decision," he added.

Dual Rally With San Mateo Scheduled Here Oct. 31

Carrying out the annual tradition of holding a joint rally, the rally committees of San Mateo Junior College and the college will sponsor a dual rally in the center quad on Thursday, October 31 at 12 noon.

The rally committee of San Mateo Junior College will travel to this college to take over half the program, Pete Aydelotte, rally committee chairman said. The following day Aydelotte and his assistants will visit the Matean's campus to take part in a similar rally.

"After much difficulty we managed to secure a piano for the entertainment in future rallies," Aydelotte said. "The joint rally will give us our first opportunity to use a piano and I am sure it will give an improving touch to our rallies."

The program for the rally has not been arranged yet but varied forms of entertainment were promised by Aydelotte.

Library Students From U.C. Visit College Library

An advanced class in junior college librarianship at the University of California under the direction of Edith M. Coulter, assistant director of the library school at the university, visited the college library last week.

Students came to look around the library and to study library technique as it is used here. Their visit is indicative of a high interest in the junior college and its library which has expanded since the college has become the second largest of the state junior colleges, Marcus Skarstedt, librarian, said.

Miss Coulter, leader of the group, is one of the best known authorities on librarianship in the state, Skarstedt added.

Fire Drills Necessary To Banish Current Doubts

WITH the amazing amount of bell ringing that continually breaks into the already hectic lives of the students, the question of what actually would happen if someone desired to inform the college of either a fire drill or the real thing becomes serious.

Up to the present time no fire drills have been conducted in the college.

Now that directions for clearing the building have been placed in the classrooms, a fire drill held tomorrow would not be too soon.

Unfortunately though, a fire drill held tomorrow would probably not gain much response, for a warning bell, with which the students have not yet been made acquainted, would quite possibly be taken with the same gestures of despair and bewilderment as have been the other multifold and inexplicable bells of the college.

The situation is comparable to the old fable of the young shepherd and the sheep. If you'll recall, this particular individual decided to play a joke on his friends by calling, "Wolf, wolf" to entice them to the scene. After a number of such deceiving incidents, his friends became disgusted and no longer answered the pleas. Thus when real wolves attacked the sheep, his frantic cries went unanswered. In the same vein, students would become skeptical of the school bells and fail to respond properly when a serious emergency should arise.

Last week during a class interval, smoke was observed filtering through the main floor corridor. Simultaneously the mysterious bells were heard. This combination elicited varied comments from the students. Many had the vague notion that a fire drill might be in progress, thinking that perhaps the smoke was to build up spirit for it. The point, however, is that until students actually learn the tone of the warning signal and have experienced a fire drill, it cannot be said that the safest measures have been taken.

To repeat, a fire drill held tomorrow would not be too soon.

Formation of Scholarship Society Encouraging Sign

THE inclusion of a scholastic council in the student administrative scheme is another real step forward for the college.

The council was created last semester when former Associated Student President Al Williams attempted to streamline the various students councils and departments by amending the constitution. One of the few new measures adopted was the formation of the scholastic council.

While the council is not yet on a working basis, it should become active within the next few weeks, as soon as college officials approve its scheduled plans.

Briefly, the scholastic council was created to promote scholarship, to make student conscious of the value of good grades.

The council will also endeavor to make more scholarships available to worthy students. At the present time, relatively few scholarships are offered to junior college students.

It is to be hoped that this new college department will effectively perform its duties, for its value to the college is readily patent.

Strangely enough, a scholarship is often relegated to minor position in some colleges, making something of a paradox in an educational institution.

The fact that this college has organized a council for the promotion of better scholarship is encouraging. Let us hope that it succeeds in a task very necessary to this college.

Scientific careers have "gripped the imaginations of the younger generation to a greater degree than ever."

That is the conclusion of the Very Rev. Dr. Edward J. Walsh, president of St. John's University, in connection with a checkup following the universitys offer of major degrees in the pure sciences for the first itme.

In a Borough hall division of the college of arts and sciences, Dean Charles E. Groves reported, 40 per cent of all new registrants were attracted to the pure sciences.

"Like father, like son"—and the old adage holds for intelligence, too.

That's the conclusion of the University of Michigan's Prof. Walter B. Pillsbury, who has just concluded a study of the hereditary intelligence of Michigan.

He has discovered that there is almost as much correlation between the marks of father and son as there is between the marks a student receives in high school and college.

Because there is such conclusive evidence, "one might even use membership in a family with a good scholastic record as a basis of admission to the university," the Michigan psychologist concludes.

Professor Pillsbury also found a similarity between the intelligence of children in the same family—that is even closer than that of parent and offspring. He insists that his research shows that this correlation is mainly the result of inherited ability, and is not due to a similarity of home and school environment.

The Spectator

Today's column was written by Barbara Budd.

CHARLES LAUGHTON has long rated tops as an actor, but his subtle characterization of Tony Patucci, the Italian Vineyardist, in They Knew What They Wanted, proves him a greater artist than ever. Never has he portrayed less of the Laughton personality and more of the Laughton genius. The Laughton self is completely submerged in this penetrating character study of Tony, the lovable Italian, in the screen adaption of the 1924 Pulitzer Prize Play by Sidney Howard.

Carole Lombard displays her usual fire and feminine charm as Amy Peters, the waitress, who is tired of never seeing the sun. William Gargon does a good job in the rather unsympathetic role of Joe, Tony's foreman. Father McKee, the priest, is admirably portrayed by Frank Fay. Harry Carey interprets the role of a country doctor, who is rich in the wisdom born of a vast human experience.

The setting is a vineyard ranch at the Beringer Vineyards in our own beautiful Napa Valley. The characterization is stronger than the story, which radiates around Tony, who is sometimes braggadoccio, and always elemental, but whose heart is made of the purity of the sun and the stars that watch over him by day and by night, and bring growth to his fields and riches and comfort into his life.

Simple events often turn the tide of fate with the force of a magnet pulling at steel. In Tony's life it took but a pair of shining, stylish shoes, taken off in a restaurant because they hurt his feet, and eventually returned him on a platter by Amy, a waitress. Like a miracle his life was pulled by the threads of Fate into a catalyptic upheaval of emotion. He took one look at Amy and fell fanatically in love, not with the girl, but with a vision. She became the symbol of all that was lacking in his life; of all that he now needed and passionately desired. She became the dreamy representation of a wife and children to perpetuate his name and to partake of his material possessions. His land and the abundant sunshine would make them strong like himself.

With glowing determination he pursued this vision that would help to make his life a poem of perfection. In cunning desperation he enlisted the help of Joe, his foreman, bringing to the situation a series of complications. Tony was injured at the marriage fiesta party while attempting to prove his prowess as a man. With stubborn earthy strength he recovered, and again pursued his vision, only to be temporarily interrupted by Amy's confession of having succumbed to Joe. Tony's instinctive reaction to the dramatically human situation was as simple and direct as his own faith in the flowers and stars and of God in heaven.

They Knew What They Wanted is truly the story of the noble character of a man. Tony is the man. He is one of those basically unselfish mortals, in whose philosophy of faith and love is found a wisdom of understanding that is rarely attained by other men. It is a theme of simple goodness in the heart of a simple man, and therein lies its importance.

What's Your I.Q.?

This column was written by Theodora Wong.

OCTOBER sneaked in on foggy feet—like cats, you know. But as long as some sunny days sneaked in with it, we don't mind. Here are some of the more obscure but nevertheless memorable causes for celebration this month—also some not so obscure. Don't guess—we'll tell all! Elaborations on Page 4.

1. October 1—This day could be designated National Post Card Day on a certain well-known island.
2. October 4—This is the day for nature lovers to "get away from it all" and repair to some sunny, green nook far from the tumult and the yelping. But it being a Friday this year, and a not very sunny day anyhow, unfortunately 'twas not possible.
3. October 6 — Pennsylvanians celebrate, but not on account of the Nazis.
4. October 12—Somebody discovered something; could someone tell us?

October 15—Important day for Latin classes, also for Edward Gibbon, remember him?

6. October 16—A day to bear with those who never grow tired of talking about their operations.
7. October 17—Crossword puzzle fans and journalists, their day of thanksgiving.
8. October 26—This would be a good day for someone to throw a yachting party.
9. October 27—In observance of a most noteworthy event which happened in New York in the year 1904 A.D., and but for which countless inhabitants would find their lives unbearably unexciting, sardines should be served on this day.
10. October 28—For those who mourn the conquest of France by Germany, a day to observe.
11. October 31—Ghosts gather on this night.
12. What special traditional significance has the month of October in England? In Japan?

On The Feminine Side

EVER increasing is the stock of novelties from which college women can choose to augment their own wardrobes.

One of the most unusual of all is the fad started in the East and on its way to being adopted here. What is it? Women's heavy leather gloves looking for all the world like small-sized editions of men's boxing gloves. Lined as they are in thick woolen fleece, they're just about the warmest things imaginable and are perfect for all those too frequent nippy days and nights. They come in a smart neutral shade, too, and can be worn with practically any color.

Speaking of mannish clothes, by the way, the influence of men's clothes on campus fashions is really astounding this season. Last year we adopted long jakets and more definitely tailored sports clothes, to be sure, but this year our theft (of ideas) has come right out into the open. We're referring to the fashion of wearing men's tweed and gabardine jackets on campus—not imitations but the real thing. With a strictly mannish-tailored shirt and a plain skirt, the jackets do lend an undeniably masculine air. However, there is something rather unbecoming about carrying the idea to an extreme, as far as we are concerned. Men's clothes are, after all, men's clothes and weren't styled or made to fit a feminine figure. Striking as they may be on a well-groomed woman, they don't add very much in the way of feminine style, at least in our opinion.

One fashion that owes its inspiration to the masculine influence is that of wearing long cardigans and blouses with skirts. Those neat two piece jersey dresses with incredibly long grosgrain-bound blouses are really news, and their long sleeves can be pushed up in the best collegiate approved style.

Two piece dresses are getting tremendously popular from all indications. Pastel corduroys in heavenly pinks, blues, and golds as well as the more vital autumn colors are unbelievably attractive in exactly matching skirts and tops. If you have several of each, the color combinations are wonderfully varied and unusual. Two piece jerseys in both the long and short sleeved styles are also very practical and smart, as far as mixing tops and bottoms is concerned.

Incidentally, those huge new plaid bags are ideal for carrying about all the things that a woman needs at college. We mean those foot-long bags in the bright tartans which may or may not match your outfit and which look as though they can literally "hold the kitchen sink." An innovation on the same style is the giant-sized plain cloth or leather bag in smooth leathers or brilliant monotones; lined in the same gay plaids, they're really lush and practical as well. In fact, there is one woman on the campus who is known to carry a small binder and note-book in hers without crowding her other impedimenta one bit.

Oh, one last item now. It is the remarkable appearance of knee-high stockings on the campus for colder weather. Although we had just about given it up as a lost cause, there were plenty in evidence last week in dark and bright shades. They're especially good with short jumper dresses and above-the-knee skirts and caused lots of comment.

All in all, Miss Junior College is coming to the fore in fashion consciousness with tremendous results.

Shots At RAMdom . . .

OF THE THOUSAND and one feature or human interest stories that emerged from last week's R-Day, one story, the story that we have scooped from under the Willkiefied noses of every metropolitan daily, stands out. It is the story of one Gerald Lippswitch, age 32.

Mr. Lippswitch first astounded the registrar's in his polling booth when he unhesitatingly delivered in sharp, clear accents the exact color of his eyes. When asked for his middle name, Mr. Lippswitch neither had to draw his Social Security card nor call his wife to verify that stigma of every two-fisted man.

Even our roving reporter, when questioning Mr. Lippswitch after his registration, was amazed, gross soul that he is, when he learned that Mr. L. was not the first person to register at his precinct. Our man clutched for a telephone pole when Mr. L. calmly noted that he was in no special hurry to register and that he was not having United Airlines hold up their schedules for him.

He left our man glassy-eyed when he remarked that his mother did not run his polling place.

A LESSER MAN than our agent would have run from this human enigma, but "Scoop" Swizel remembered the traditions of The Guardsman and stuck to his post.

On inquiring further, Swizel coaxed from Mr. L. the admissions that he had never been tagged by the Man on the Street; that though he is an outstanding lawyer, he does not read amazing stories for relaxation but rather prefers Spenser's Faerie Queene; that God Bless America nauseates him; that double bills leave him cold; that though a man of means, he does not wear a Willkie button; that he has convinced his secretary that his wife does not misunderstand him; that he does not feel every German is a descendant of Attila; that he has not read a "best-seller" in years; and that he'd just as soon eat Argentine beef as Middle Western beef.

"SCOOP" SWIZEL told us that he hastened away before Mr. L. became physically violent after those last remarks. When "Scoop" last saw Mr. L., he was quietly waiting for a stop signal to change before he crossed the street.

• A Thank-You Note
Editor, The Guardsman:

The Accommodation Committee for the Sacramento trip wishes to express its gratitude to The Guardsman staff for the splendid support and publicity given the Excursion by the staff.

One must realize that this was not a college activity, but one taken up by loyal supporters of a great football team. The Guardsman staff cooperated in every way possible. We, the committee feel that it was due to its support that the trip was a success.

Sincerely yours,
B. Ferrari, Chairman
Accommodations Committee

• Class Interval Too Brief
Editor, The Guardsman:

In a recent issue of your mediocre, yet adequate rag, I noted that you attempted to have the class intervals changed to 10 minutes. In a later issue I learned of the attempt to solve the unbearable situation.

Bluntly speaking, I think the plan is a failure. The idea that if we were released from captivity at exactly five minutes to the hour we could make our next class on time just doesn't work. In fact many of my instructors let their classes out from seven to eight minutes before the hour.

As I see it, along with a lot of my friends, no compromise will work.

Ten minutes is absolutely necessary, if we are not to be rushed to death. Besides, the interval only makes us late to classes and the extra five minutes of the class period doesn't do any good.

Roland Persiflage

Editor's Note: We agree, Mr. Persiflage. We are doing out best to satisfy the majority of the student and faculty who think as you do.

• Why No Conscription News?
Editor, The Guardsman:

I am interested in knowing why The Guardsman made no mention of R-Day or told how many of the students were eligible for registration. While I am not eligible myself, I would be interested in knowing these facts.

Even though the paper is a college publication I feel there is enough student interest in the draft to warrant the printing of the college angle.

In regard to the consensus of opinion on the draft in last Tuesday's issue, I thought it was a very interesting commentary and would welcome more material on just what other colleges feel about vital national issues.

I for one feel, as every American must, that the draft is quite warranted in view of the whole international situation. Hourly the necessity for complete American preparedness becomes more apparent.

N.C.

Editor's Note: Since the proportion of persons eligible for conscription is small, we did not deem it advisable to get the college data on R--Day because it would necessitate going through the files in the Registrar's office and checking each student for their birth date. This is a tedious job at best and we find that we have enough to do and no reporters to spare in publishing our regular two issues a week.

Glad you like consensus of opinion on the draft. We hope other students will take this opportunity to express their opinions.

Women's Athletics

Splash Party This Thursday To Feature Intramural Events

Complete program of the intramural events which will highlight the Women's Athletic Association splash party October 24, at the YWCA on Sutter Street, from 7:30 to 9:30 o'clock, was released this week by Jane McKinnon, games chairman of the affair.

Initial race of the evening will be that of a lighted candle relay, she said. Participants in the relay will hold lighted candles in one hand while swimming across the pool.

Porpoise Race Featured

Second novelty event will be the intramural porpoise race. Contestants will be required to do shallow surface dives of two feet or so, rise to the top of the water, take two or three strokes and then submerge themselves again for another shallow dive. These maneuvers must be carried out until the pool is crossed.

Spoon and ping-pong ball relaying will be the third intramural event of the evening. As explained by Miss McKinnon, entrants in this race will hold a spoon in which there will be placed a ping-pong ball, in one hand while swimming.

When the last member of each team has completed her trek across the pool, she must climb out of the pool and blow up the balloon until it bursts.

"The team winning each race will be awarded a certain number of points in relation to the difficulty of the race won," Miss McKinnon said.

"That garnering the most points will then be awarded a prize, the nature of which has not been revealed," she added.

Contestant Lists Due

All women's and CAB organizations of the college which have been contacted by Eleanore Haliber, chairman of the arrangements committee for the affair, are requested to turn in a list of team members to Jane McKinnon, Aileen Kinkel, physical education instructor, or Miss Haliber, as soon as possible.

Mary Perry, Edna Denhard, Miriam Gatley, Bertha Mae Keller, and Aileen Kinkel, will comprise the women's faculty team and will wear white bathing caps.

Members of the Physical Education Majors Club intramural swimming team are Barbara Gunn, Jane Visalli, Jeanne Arnold, Barbara Smith and Jezebel Winningham. Navy blue bathing caps will be worn by them.

Red Caps For Ice

Red bathing caps will designate the ice skating club team, which will be composed of Ruth Hobson, June McConnell, Madeliene McConnell, Barbara Riffe, Joan Shafsky, Betty Moore and Antoinette Compagno.

All women of the college and especially women members of the faculty are invited to attend the WAA splash party. Admission to the affair is 25 cents, which will include bathing suit and towel. Swimmers must bring their own caps however.

Following the running off of intramurals, open swimming for all present will be held.

Badminton Teams For Marin Playday October 26 Named

Selection of teams to represent the college at the Women's Athletic Association badminton playday, to be held at Marin Junior College from 9:30 a.m. to 1:30 p.m. October 26, has been completed, Versa Cullen, badminton club manager, said.

Blanche Noyes, Betty Teter, Barbara Smith, and Rita Weiman have been selected for the four singles teams, according to Miss Cullen.

Personnel of the five doubles teams, she added, consists of Ruth Esmond, Lola Coset, Ruth Messner, Virginia Bopp, Rita McDonald, Pat Greenly, Stella Golica, Clair Rowe, Versa Cullen, and Bernice Strube.

Representatives from the college will compete with teams from San Francisco and San Jose State Colleges, Salinas, San Mateo and Santa Rosa Junior Colleges, it was announced.

Registration for the badminton sports day will be held from 9 to 9:20 a.m. October 26, after which there will be a short rally, WAA officials said.

May Spotlight Splash

Helen Crlenkovich, college diving champion, may appear in the WAA Splash Party next Thursday in the YWCA pool, it was rumored by officials today. Miss Crlenkovich is the holder of the National Ten Foot Indoor Diving Championship.

Signups For Volleyball, Horseshoe Posted In Gym

Signup lists for Women's Athletic Association volleyball and horseshoe pitching have been posted in the corridor near the office on the second floor of the women's gymnasium, Barbara Smith, WAA president announced last week. All women interested in either of these sports are urged to sign up for participation in them, Miss Smith said.

Since horseshoe pitching is the newest sport to be sponsored by the WAA, a large signup by women students is desired, she added. Members who sign up for the WAA horseshoe club are scheduled to meet on Mondays at 4:30 p.m. for an hour's instruction in pitching technique. Adviser for the group is Bertha Mae Keller, and Virginia Coker is the horseshoe club manager.

WAA, Galileo Indoor Track Meet Friday

Women's Athletic Association version of an indoor track meet will be presented on October 25, from 3:30 to 5 p.m., when WAA members of this college will play hostesses to members of the Galileo Girl's Athletic Association, Barbara Smith, WAA president announced.

Chief diversions of the afternoon will be a novel indoor version of the broad jump, hurdles, relays, discus throw, and pole vault, she said.

"Galileans have been invited to compete with us in the indoor track meet because we want to make recompense in some way for the semesters that the women of this college have used the gymnasium facilities of Galileo High School," Miss Smith commented.

Hockey Group Practices For Playday At Mills

Following the marking off of hockey fields and the sinking of cages last Friday, practice by members of the Women's Athletic Association hockey club has begun in preparation for the playday to be held by the Northern California Hockey Association at Mills College on November 2, Blanche Noyes, WAA vice-president said.

"All those who are signed up for WAA hockey and who are interested in becoming eligible for appointment to the hockey team representing this college, are urged to come out and practice on Mondays, Wednesdays, or Fridays at 11 a.m., she added.

College Riflers Shoulder Arms Today For First Match

Opening its first competition of the semester, the college rifle team will be matched against the San Francisco Surf Rifle Club today in the college shooting gallery in Room 31, Captain Fred McFarland, rifle coach, announced this week.

Although the team roster was not complete at the time of this writing, seven men have been assigned positions, according to McFarland, who named Charles Gillet, Charles North, Homer Pack, Bob Reichart, Arthur Templeton, and Aki Uyeda. In line for the positions which are open are William Bartholomew, Jack Hewitt, Byron Pierce, and Jack Rath, the coach said.

Besides the regularly scheduled matches, McFarland revealed that the team intends to enter the State Gallery championships, the National Intercollegiate, Napa, and Invitational matchds, as well as compete against Stanford, California, and the University of San Francisco.

Two teams, one designated as A and the other as B, will be used, and therefore eighteen of the present twenty-five candidates will compete this week, McFarland commented.

More Intramural Sports Slated To Open Soon

With the softball, tennis, and basketball already under way, the golf, cross-country, and horseshoe competition are slated to get under way shortly, Paul Postler, assistant student manager of the intramural program, announced.

Saturday, the golf tournament will begin at the Ingleside course, Postler said. The contestants must be there by 7:30 on the morning of the 26th, ready to play, he added. All men in the college are eligible and can sign up for the competition before Thursday at 5 p.m. in the afternoon.

The tennis competition is well under way and going into the second round, Postler noted. The winners of the first round were J. Effinar, Leon Kalinos, Joe Greeley, Rich Miller, Bill Hong, George America, R. Jones, Grant Clarton, J. Baker, J. Friday, Dick Jack, Robert Erwin, S. Spears, Al Ornas, Bud Gallagher, Ed Cavellini, Norm Gray, Ed Johnstone, and G. Sinitzin.

The second round of the tourney, which will eliminate half of these men, will begin sometime this week, the manager announced. He declared that the dates and the individual matches and where they were to take place would be posted on the bulletin board.

The basketball competition is also in its second round, Postler revealed. The winners will be entered into the second round and the losers have been eliminated. Last week, the scores were Goats 88, Block Society 15; Chinese Students 47, Alpha Delta Epsilon 16; Hotel Students 19, Beta Tau 12; Police Training 39, Plumbers 10; U.S. All Stars 45, Japanese Students 20; The Eds 32, Spooks 21; Mowbray's Maulers 40, Beta Phi Beta 14; Jeffersonians 39, Kangaroos 31.

The second round will begin this afternoon with the Chinese Students engaging Mowbray's Maulers and the Hotel Division meeting the Eds, Postler said.

For those interested in golf, Postler released the rules under which the tourney is to be played off. They are as follows: (1) Eligibility—all men enrolled in the college are eligible; (2) 32 men are to play 18 holes; (3) There will be 8 foursomes; (4) Each contestant will keep his opponent's score; (5) Lowest scoring man wins; (6) In case of tie, playoff will be held no later than Sunday morning, October 27.

So far as cost is concerned, the actual cost of playing in the matches will be posted on the bulletin board before Friday, Postler declared.

The horseshoe tournament will receive no more entries after Wednesday, October 30, Postler warned. The awards for this competition are in the intramural showcase now, he remarked.

The place of playing will be published in The Guardsman of Friday, November 1. They will also be posted on the intramural bulletin board before that time, he said.

All men wishing to try out for the cross-country should see Postler to sign up for the event. The course will be two and a quarter miles long and, according to the managers, plenty tough.

Ice Skating Group Wants Accredited Gym Course

Negotiations are under way to make ice skating acceptable as a men's sport, Joseph Williams, faculty sponsor, announced last week.

"The women are receiving credit for ice skating," Williams said, "and we hope to work out some method whereby men will also receive gym credit. A plan is up before Louis "Dutch" Conlan, head of the physical education department, at the present time to make skating an accepted gym course."

Meanwhile members of the figure skating class are working towards the Ice Carnival, to be held around the middle of next January, Williams disclosed.

He named several promising figure skaters, who will make their debut in the carnival, Ingeborg Lubahn, Lydia Lamekovski, Virginia McLaughlan, and ex-president Bill Hart have been hard at work learning intricate routines for the show, Williams revealed.

Three separate classes are being conducted at Winterland every Friday afternoon, Williams announced. The women's skating class, under Aileen Kinkel, is progressing nicely, Williams said. Also Miss Kinkel is busy instructing members of the Women's Athletic Association in the art of remaining erect.

Boxing Signups Taken Today And Tomorrow

All students interested in boxing are urged to signup today and tomorrow afternoon between 2 and 3:15 o'clock at the main gym for the fall boxing program, Joseph Lantagne, boxing coach, announced this week.

"This boxing program is designed for the benefit of the students," Lantagne disclosed. "We want it understood beforehand, that no student will be injured in any bout." Lantagne explained that the program, getting under way this week, is to be a combination of intramural and Associated Men Student bouts. All weight divisions will be represented.

Managers Named

Ted Green and Ben Krinsky have been named student managers for the boxing program, Lantagne revealed. Both Green and Krinsky will assist in the signups this week, and later will be on hand to assist Lantagne in the various activities.

All students entered in the boxing event will be given a thorough medical examination before starting training for the big show next December. If a student is found to be physically unfit for the strenuous boxing workouts, he will not be allowed to compete in the matches, Lantagne said.

Training Begins

Training for the boxing matches will start immediately, Lantagne said. Practice will be held every afternoon except Friday in the gym, and all students interested in boxing are asked to report. "You don't have to know how to box," Lantagne said. "We want everybody to come out. We will be glad to teach you how to box. Who knows, you might develop into a really good fighter."

Lantagne wishes to make it clear that every student must sign up either today or tomorrow. No student will be accepted if he fails to register at once with the boxing managers. Students are requested to bring their gym equipment with them. Gloves will be furnished by the physical education department.

Actual boxing practice will start after the physical examinations, Lantagne explained. Preliminary matches for the big matches will be held the first week in December. The finals will then be held in the Coliseum Bowl, and winners in their respective weight divisions will receive gold medals.

Sports Writers' Yarn-Spun Legends Win Story Contest

BLOOMINGTON, IND.—(ACP)—Yarns spun into legends by sports writers, foreign correspondents and the "back shop", won top honors in the national Tall Story contest sponsored by the Indiana University chapter of Sigma Delta Chi, honorary journalism fraternity.

The ten winners, announced at the chapter's annual Gridiron banquet, represent seven states and the District of Columbia.

Grand champion honors went to David Velie of Monroe, Wis., free lance writer and former Milwaukee Sentinel and Chicago Tribune reporter. Second place was won by Ed F. Smith of the Jackson (Mich.) Citizen Patriot, and third by Basil L. Walters, editor of the Minneapolis Star-Journal.

The winning "tall story," selected by judges Irvin S. Cobb, Arthur Robb, editor of Editor and Publisher, and Lowell Thomas, follows:

When Jack Crain, stellar backfield man of the University of Texas football team last fall, made a last-minute dash through the entire Arkansas University team for a touchdown, and the Texans kicked goal for a 14-13 victory, a Dallas writer submitted this lead:

"God and Jack Crain today defeated the Arkansas Razorbacks by a score of 14-13."

The Dallas managing editor quickly shot back this memo:

"Please check on the rumor that Coach Fred Thomsen of Arkansas has protested the game. He feels that God is ineligible in the Southwest conference under the freshman rule."

Nauman Gets Leave From Navy But Rams Drop League Opener

SACRAMENTO JUNIOR COLLEGE STADIUM, Oct. 18—The United States Government Naval Reserves released a potential dynamo against a Panther and watched a duel to the death. Through an unexpected lucky lunge, the Cat obtained a vice-like grip on the driving mechanism and stubbornly refused to let go.

Al Nauman, star tailback for the Rams obtained a leave from the Naval Reserves and probably terminated his college career as a gridiron caesar when the college Rams took the loop in a 6 to 0 score against the Sacramento Panthers.

Rams Win—Statistically

Statistically, the Rams were superior on land as well as in the air. Nauman's passes to Ken Hagen, Herb Taylor and Jack Medrano scored 43 yards while the Panthers netted none. Dave Cunningham, Joe Johnson, Jim Honnert, Medrano, and Nauman totaled 123 by land as compared to 110 for the Cats. Yet, late in the final quarter the breaks swung and the Ram rooters found a 6 tallied for the Sacramentans.

The lone score of the game came suddenly during the closing minutes of the game while the college was making its last powerful attempt to break a scoreless deadlock. After a series of punts, Johnny Blakemore booted a 60 yard kick where Honnert pounced on it on the Panther 2. Carl Chapman of Sac'to dropped back and dropped one to Nauman who ran it back to the Cat 28.

Fatal Pass Upsets All

Sustained drives by Cunningham, Nauman and Honnert brought the ball to the 10 yard line with third down and 6 to go for a first down, or 10 to promised land. Then Nauman faded back and fired a pass intended for Medrano, but rushed it into George Jensen, tackle for Sacramento, who rambled 85 yards to a touchdown. Blocking was necessary only for the tailback, who was neatly clipped out of the way and the Panther rambled on to score.

The first quarter was definitely a punting duel between Blakemore and Chapman. Blakemore's punts moved the ball farther and farther into enemy territory, and at the end of the first period, the Panthers were shoved back to their goal line, within their own 10.

Chapman booted to safety to the Ram 48, where a fumble on the Ram's first play was recovered by Jack McLure. George Rainone carried the mail four times in succession and netted to the 29. On a reverse from Rainone, Harry Terril at right half scooted tackle and reversed his field to the Ram 13 on a 16 yard gallop. Bill Windeler dumped Terril for 4, and two more plays netted nil, so Rainone attempted a field goal from the 10. The ball was wide and to the left.

Rams Goal Line Stand

Three plays later, the Rams again confronted a growling Panther deep in their territory. Blakemore's punt was stopped dead on the return by Taylor. Terril made 5, and again, Rainone broke lose and scampered 43 yards to the Ram 9 where Nauman eluded two blockers and dragged down the fleeting powerhouse.

First down and a goal to go. But the stubborn Ram line of Ken Hagen, Blakemore, Merle McFarlane, Al Larracou, Windeler and Taylor with Honnert and Dick Wilson backing up the line refused to give an inch. Three plays gave them nothing. Again Rainone dropped back for a placement—again the ball failed to sail—this time the whole Ram line surged in to stop the damage.

Second Half Is Rams

The Rams had their bid in the third and fourth quarters. Led by "Navy Al" Nauman, the Rams drove from their own 35 yard line down to the Panther 27, where the Applequisters rallied and the Ram attack bogged down. Blakemore was forced to kick, failed to get the coffin corner and the Panthers began on the 20, met a stubborn defense and elected to kick out to safety.

With 10 minutes of play remaining, the Rams found themselves on their own 12. Nauman broke away on a wide sweep down to the 35. Joe Johnson made 9 and Nauman whammed the line for a first down. Fading back to pass on the next play, the referee interfered and Nauman was dumped back on the 36.

Drive Starts

Blakemore kicked safely to the 8 and Chapman booted back to Nauman on the 44 who ran it back 7. A pass failed. Two more line plunges gained nothing, so Blakemore was called again. This time, Chapman's return kick went only to the 28, and the Rams roared into action.

Plunges by the backfield netted 20 yards, first down and a goal to go. Honnert's off-tackle plunge made one, and then "Navy Al" swung wide to his left, dropped back to his own 24. Leaking through the left and came Panther Jensen, who suddenly found himself with the ball, and bewilderedly ran.

Nauman was the only man left to take the frightened Jensen, and he was cleanly clipped by McLure who had also seeped in. As usual the placement by Rainone was wide.

Nishi Threat Fruitless

On the return kickoff, another threat loomed when Nick Nishi was hit on his 20 and a Panther picked up a fumble and ran into pay dirt, but the play was called back, and ruled Panthers' ball. The new desperate Rams fought and steadily drove back the Panther line, but time prevented another Ram attack.

Standout for the college was Nauman, despite the week of practice which he lost while in the Naval Reserves. Ends Taylor and Hagen, and tackles Windeler and Blakemore also saw much action.

McLure Stars For Panthers.

McLure, of the Panthers, however, stole obvious honors at end with his constant charging and breaking through. Libee and Rainone were also standouts for the hosts.

The Rams meet a strong and highly favored U.S.F. frosh this Friday, the same team that defeated the Santa Clara Bronco yearlings 7 to 6 last Sunday at Kezar.

Soccer

Rams Tie Dons; Menlo Next

Tieing its second league game last Saturday, the Ram soccer team returned from the U.S.F. Don tilt deadlocked 1 to 1.

The game was played on a wet, slippery field, and it was hard for either team to show any speed in maneuvering the ball into scoring territory. Next Ram opponent will be Menlo. The game is scheduled for next Saturday, October 26, on Crocker-Amazon Playground, on Geneva Avenue.

Joseph Lantagne, local soccer mentor, felt that his boys had put up a good fight during the contest, but that they were hampered by the slippery field.

Rams Take Early Lead

The damp field soon made the ball soggy, and it made long kicks difficult, but the Rams definitely held a first half edge. The first score came after about four minutes of play, when Clarence Waddington, left wing for the Rams, took a pass from his teammates and pushed it through for the score.

After the first quick scoring thrust, the game evened slightly, with both teams making frequent scoring attempts. To impartial observers it appeared that the Rams had a definite advantage in the first half of play. Score at half time favored the locals, 1 to 0.

Dons Rally, Tie Score

With the beginning of the second half, a rejuvenated Don eleven took the ball and worked it towards the Ram goal. In a mixup of players scrambling for the ball, someone kicked the ball through the uprights. Goalie Frank Schneider made a frantic dive for the ball but the damp sphere slithered off of his hands for the tieing tally.

The locals rallied in the closing minutes of play, but were unable to push over a winning score. The game ended with the ball in midfield.

Korn, Desdevich Outstanding

Outstanding players for the Rams were Bert Korn, right wing, who sparked all of the Ram rallies; Nick Desdevich, who replaced Ted Theodus in the center of the forward wall; Bill Fairfield, left fullback, who played the full game, and John Lazar.

Lantagne, though sorry to not have won, was pleased with the showing of the team. After playing disorganized ball against California, the Rams really played together, and might have won, had they had the breaks.

Even though the locals have won only one conference start this season, they are still in a position to win the conference title. The season record shows that the boys now have a .500 average, losing one, winning one, and tieing two games.

Dedication

Transcription Of Ceremony Will Be Broadcast Nov. 10 At 8:30

Transcription of the college dedication of Sunday, November 10, will be heard over radio station KGO from 8:30 to 8:45 that evening, Lloyd D. Luckmann, dedication chairman, announced this week following conferences with Jennings Pierce, educational director at National Broadcasting Company.

Because of the limited time, not all of the two ceremonies to be held that day will be included, Luckmann said, but the activities on the campus will be condensed to include a description of the grounds, the crowds, and the atmosphere by an NBC announcer, and interviews, through the cooperation of the Honorable Richard Doyle of the Board of Education, of the chief speakers at the formal dedication ceremony: Mayor Angelo J. Rossi, Honorable Harold C. Caulfield president of the Board of Education, Superintendent of Schools Joseph P. Nourse, and Archibald J. Cloud, college president.

The ceremony at which Post 233 of the American Legion will present a flag to the Associated Students following the dedication, will also be described, Luckmann said.

Music for the program is to be provided by the college A Capella Choir.

"We are very grateful to Jennings Pierce for his generous cooperation in securing the radio time and the help of the technicians," Luckmann commented.

Coming at the beginning of National Education Week, the dedication of the college will highlight the week's events, he added, and its recording over the radio is being sponsored by Mayor Rossi's committee for the various public activities.

Chairman of the committee is Jesse E. Colman, who, according to Luckmann, is vitally interested in the civil service training which the college offers.

Among those under Colman's group are members of the college faculty and administration, who are listed as follows: President Archibald J. Cloud, Kenneth Hobbs, Dr. Robert Parker, Frank Colligan, and Mozelle Milliken.

Organization

College YMCA Unit Begun

Organization of a college Young Men's Christian Association similar to the Hi-Y clubs in the high schools is now in progress, according to Claude A. Shull, who has been assigned as faculty adviser for the group by Edwin C. Browne, dean of men.

Students who are active workers in the San Francisco YMCA's or who have been members of a Hi-Y group are now being sought to form the nucleus of the college organization, Shull said.

A meeting will be held next Tuesday at 4 o'clock in Room 210 to make final plans, he announced, adding that any student formerly connected with the Hi-Y movement or are in YMCA work who have not been contacted should attend if interested in organizing a college group.

Dr. Shull conferred this week with several YMCA representatives prior to forming definite plans, among them R. W. Sincock, executive Boy's Division at the Central YMCA, John Titsworth, executive at the Golden West YMCA, Earl Yusa, member of a committee in charge of college YMCA's, and Ted Green, worker at the Central YMCA and student at this college.

"The group to be formed here will be a service organization to be affiliated with both the college and the San Francisco YMCA," Green commented.

Music

Band Gets Into Full "Swing"

Members of the college football team and participants in intramural sports in the men's gymnasium have been hearing strange sounds emitting from the direction of one of the lecture rooms in the gymnasium. They admit, however that the noises are not "hard on the ears", but on the contrary rather pleasant.

After several queries interested students have discovered that the melodic waves which have been assailing their ears have been the result of the but recently formed college band under the direction of Madison Devlin, Lowell High School music instructor, who has consented to meet with music aspirants each Friday afternoon and to aid in the organization of a full-fledged college band.

Devlin has previously expressed his enthusiasm in the college band saying that great strides in cooperation have been made, and has declared that the group might even be ready to play at the U. S. F. freshman game on October 28.

"This musical contingent contains 22 members by the latest count and all have greatest interest in the venture," Devlin said, "students of the college ought to have great pride in the organization."

Devlin has been assured that students have.

Arnold Appoints Committee For Frosh Mixer Dance

Jean Arnold, Associated Students vice president, announced this week appointment of a committee to take charge of the freshman mixer dance, which, she said, will probably be scheduled for some Friday afternoon in the future and will be open to the college.

Named to this committee were Jim Honnert and John Mowbray, low and high frosh presidents respectively, and Bob Dolman, with Miss Arnold acting as ex-officio member. Other freshman class officers will also serve with the committee, she said.

With the installation of lights in the college gymnasiums completed, one of these two locations will be selected for the mixer, she added.

By fostering closer acquaintance among the students, the class sponsors of the mixer hope to strengthen the spirit of the college, Miss Arnold declared, adding, "The purpose of the dance will be to further acquaintance among the students. We hope this affair will help the new students to get acquainted with others in the college."

So that new students may be easily recognized, they will be asked to wear red and white frosh buttons, she said.

Hotel Division To Serve Luncheon To Calif. HEA

Members of the Hotel and Restaurant Management division of the college, under the direction of Hilda Watson, chairman of the division, will prepare and serve a luncheon for the Bay Section of the California Home Economics Association on Saturday, October 26, Mrs. Watson announced today.

"The luncheon will be held in the college cafeteria, and an attendance of 100 to 150 is expected," Mrs. Watson said.

In a circular sent by the association to its members due credit is given to the Hotel and Restaurant Management division.

CAB

Organizations May Still Renew Charters

College organizations which were suspended from the Club Advisory Board at its meeting last Tuesday may still regain their good standing this semester by filing application for renewal of charters, Bob Ogg, CAB president, said this week.

Those clubs voted suspended are as follows: Alpha Phi Omega, Beta Phi Beta, Block Society, National Intercollegiate Flying Club, San Francisco Junior College Chapter, Omicron Phi Pi, and Skating Club.

To present a satisfactory application, these clubs should include a copy of their constitutions and, if classed as "unrestricted," a complete list of names and addresses of members, Ogg announced.

Should clubs fail to renew their charters, they may be dropped from the list of active organizations next semester and outlawed from college extra-curricular activities, he added.

Clubs which now hold charters for the semester are listed as follows: Alpha Delta Epsilon, Alpha Lambda Chi, Army and Navy Club, Astronomy Club, Beta Tau, Chinese Students' Club, Foresters' Fraternity, Forum Club, Home Economics Association, Hotel and Restaurant Management Society, Japanese Students' Club, Music Club, Newman Club, Nu Epsilon Sigma, Peace Society, Phi Alpha Omega, Phi Beta Rho, Phi Rho Pi, Physical Education and Recreation Majors' Club, Pick and Hammer Club, Pi Mu Gamma, Rifle and Pistol Club, Ski Club, Tri Epsilon, and Women's Service Society.

Alpha Gamma Sigma, college honor society, has been put on probation prior to receiving charter. The organization had formerly been active in the CAB, but was dropped last semester for failure to file application for renewal of charter.

Several clubs had been suspended last semester following the deadline for charter applications, but nearly all regained good standing at subsequent meetings after submitting the necessary forms. Probably all of the clubs suspended at present will recover their status of active organizations also, Ogg commented.

Complete staff for Cabby, Club Advisory Board Bulletin, was announced by Ogg, as follows: Theodora Wong, editor; Burton Wines, assistant editor; Marion MacKillop, staff artist, and Jack Smyth, circulation manager.

F. G. Marsh To Address Am. Vocational Assoc.

F. Grant Marsh, chairman of the college business department, has received an invitation from Professor Paul H. Hystrom of Columbia University, to speak on the program for the Business Education Section of the American Vocational Association meeting to be held in San Francisco, December 16, 17, and 18.

The present Status and Outlook for Business Education in the Office Occupations will be the subject of his address, Marsh announced.

Other speakers on the program will be as follows: Jack Milligan, Chief of the Business Education Division of the State Board of Control for Vocational Education of Michigan; Lawrence Ellis, President of Weinstock, U.S. Office of Education; Dr. Lloyd King, State Superintendent of Public Instruction of the State of Missouri.

Hygiene Classes Required To See Movies This Week

All men and women enrolled in the course in personal hygiene must attend one showing of the moving picture to be shown in Room 136 this week. The pictures will be shown twice daily except Friday at 3 o'clock and 4 o'clock, Verrel Weber, hygiene instructor, announced last week.

The subject of the picture is the Nervous System and Digestion, a film that has been found very helpful in presenting to the students a better understanding of the subject, Miss Weber said.

Aero Students Take To The Air

By HUGH McDONALD

When Walter Brand, college aviation student, took to the air last Tuesday afternoon at Curtiss-Wright Field, San Mateo, the flight program entered its most important phase.

In a Piper Cub officially designated for student training, Brand became the first cadet in Capt. George D. Richards' flying courses to put in practice the weeks of theoretical and ground-school instruction, and the first to inaugurate actual flight.

Displaying none of the naive exhilarations which might be expected of first-flight students, Brand was most impressed with the technical aspects of the flight, and his comments were confined to "keeping the nose of the ship up" and "aligning her wings with the horizon."

In the past week, all others enrolled in the flight courses, including Helen Crlenkovich, sole woman student flyer, have begun their actual flight, and the serious and earnest attitudes with which instructions are accepted render proof to the value of ground-school training preliminary to taking to the air.

All enrollees in the course have specified flight hour-quotas, and this is pursued with concurrent theoretical instruction. Solo flights are but a matter of weeks, and the course has lost all of its first-stage feverish activitites, superseded by a new, veteran-like attitude on the part of all students.

In the course of flight, parachutes are worn by all students, and safety precautions both on ground and in the air are emphasized with each class.

Hillside Parking Still Under Enforcement Fire

Enforcement of parking regulations is now concentrated on the sloping grounds south of the college building, Edwin C. Browne, dean of men, revealed this week.

Both the paved area in front of the building and the grounds to the rear, which are used as a loading zone, have been cleared of cars, Dean Browne said, and to a good extent this is also true of the hilly section to the north, he added.

"Besides the elimination of most of the traffic hazards which had been present before strict enforcement of parking regulations, there is the improvement in the appearance of the campus which has been gained by the removal of cars from these places," be commented. "Although prohibiting of this area for parking limits drivers to Phelan Avenue and the level ground north and south of the college building, it is felt that sufficient space is to be had nevertheless. Students who were here in previous semesters can probably remember when parking space was formerly more at a premium, especially at the Powell Street Extension."

NYA Time Schedules Due November 6

NYA time schedules for the month of October will be due no later than November 6, Edward H. Redford, college NYA director, announced today.

The director pointed out that a strict rule has been established by the main offices which provides that any errors made in the filing of cards will result in penalties.

Cooperative Will Not Be Incorporated

Indicating that they wished incorporation sometime in the future, but not at the present, members of the Junior College Cooperative Association voted against taking this step at two meetings held last Friday morning.

A vote was taken at an 11 o'clock meeting, and repeated at 12 for those who could not attend at the earlier hour.

"Incorporation would protect the individual members should any legal complications, such as lawsuits, arise, but since the members do not desire to take this step, perhaps it is just as well to defer it, as we do not anticipate any legal difficulties."

Membership in the cooperative association is open to all students, Simpson announced, and the only requirement is payment of a 50 cent semesterly fee. Purchasers at the store automatically become members through subtraction of this sum from rebates, he added.

Visitors are also welcome at co-op meetings which will be scheduled at least once a month and probably oftener, he revealed, but only members may vote on any decisions to be made.

Aside from the educational and business functions of the association, the group will also sponsor parties and outings, Simpson commented. Among those scheduled is a folk-dancing party on Saturday, November 2, which will be open to both members. "The first folk-dancing party, which was held October 12, was a great success, and we have been asked to repeat such an affair," he said.

According to the JCCA constitution, co-op profits will be disposed at the end of the semester as follows: one-half of the sum is to be rebated to student patrons in proportion to the amount of purchases with membership fee subtracted; one-fourth is to be used for cooperative education; and one-fourth is to be set aside as a reserve for expansion.

Each member and purchaser is given a rebate number and all purchases charged to an account corresponding to that number, Jack McKay, manager of the store, explained. In this way, accurate records will be made on which rebates will be based.

Available now at the co-op are lecture notes in the following subjects, according to McKay: Anatomy 2a, bacteriology 12, biology 11a, psychology 21a, sociology 11a and zoology 21a. Also in stock is a new line of art supplies, he added.

Fiction and non-fiction works of 1938-39 may be secured at the circulating library which the store operates, McKay indicated. Library service is free to members, while non-members are charged 10 cents for the use of a book during the first week and 1 cent for each day thereafter.

Membership of the JCCA is listed as follows:

Ted Aarons, Isaac Abrams, Ruth Adamson, Wanda Beach, Ione Bennett, Richard Bianci, Fred Burke, John Cafiso, Barbara Coyne, Cecilia Dettmer, John Dettmer, Keith Groswird, Armen Hagopian, Bill Hewitt, June Hobson, Ruth Hobson, Lillian Hoyle, Jimmy Jones, Norman Jones, Paula Levick, Jane Lippert, Alexander Maisin, Bob Mason, Louis Mazer, Rita McDonald, McKay, Harriet Ralston, Jo Reyburn, John Ricohermoso, Bill Roberts, Paul Rosenthal, Simpson, and Anastasia Tjovenos.

Down at Sam Houston State College, Huntsville, Texas, there's a man who's really busy. Earl Huffor, head of the speech department. In 23 years he's been responsible for forming the college's first band, organization of a department of public service and a department of speech arts, starting the college print shop, and organization of four clubs.

He has directed the town's Methodist choir for 23 years in addition to coaching debate, sponsoring various clubs, leading a civic organization, directing lyceums for the college, writing and poetry and playing golf.

We don't know anything about Professor Huffor's dietary habits, but he brings to mind the observation by the University of Missouri's Professor Mullet: "IT'S ALWAYS BEEN AMAZING TO ME THAT A MAN WHO LIVED ON BAKED POTATOS AND BUTTERMILK COULD DO THE THINGS BRIGHAM YOUNG DID."

BOSTON, MASS.—(ACP)—American colleges and universities should abolish textbooks and substitute the study of 100 of the world's greatest books, according to Dr. Mortimer J. Adler, author of "How to Read a Book."

As a model for such a move he suggested St. John's at Annapolis, where the teachers lead discussions on the great thinkers like Homer, Plato, Galen, Hegel, Marx and Freud.

Adler says that learning requires reading and that one must read the great works to be able to read. He doubts whether more than a few students—or even teachers—really know how to read a book.

He added that smaller schools must lead in any change because "the larger ones are so top-heavy with water-tight compartments of so-called fields of learning."

Newscasters Demonstrate Today

Richfield News Staff To Talk In Lecture Hall

How to meet the challenge of serving an audience of two million each night will be told by the personnel of The Richfield Reporter staff, newscasters John Wald, Don Forbes, and the editor Wayne Miller, in a demonstration in Room 100 on October 28, 1940.

This news was learned in a recent communication from Jennings Pierce, National Broadcasting director to President Archibald J. Cloud.

Demonstration Is Open To All

The task of collecting the "daily take" of fifty to sixty thousand words of copy and the subsequent reduction to the three thousand squeezed into the 15 minute nightly broadcast, the treatment of controversial news reports, and the handling of propaganda items will all be included in their demonstration.

Press services covering all corners of the globe, send in reports of a varying nature, these must be edited and compiled in such a manner that a complete and authentic coverage is presented. So precisely are these dispatches presented that one need only to listen to a news broadcast to get the most important news of the day.

Program Popular

Survey responses indicate an enthusiastic reaction, as in the last year 50 per cent more people have made it a habit to listen in on news broadcasts on the Pacific Coast than ever before and the Richfield Reporter enjoys a greater over-all listening audience than any other similar program heard in the west, Pierce revealed.

Their appearance should warrant a great deal of interest and should lend the familiar words, "and a good, good evening" and "that's 30 for tonight" a special significance to all who witness them, Pierce said.

Walter C. Eells Of Junior College Assoc. Visits Campus

Dr. Walter C. Eells, executive secretary of the American Association of Junior Colleges, was a visitor here last Monday as the guest of President Archibald J. Cloud.

Speaking of the college, which is a member of the Junior College Association, the doctor said, "I was surprised to find such a great improvement here as compared with the situation of a year ago."

Dr. Eells is making a tour of the Junior colleges throughout the nation and is conducting meetings regarding terminal instruction.

"Terminal instruction," the doctor revealed, "is training completed in a two year course, such as may be given at a junior college."

In answer to questions concerning college institutions in other states, he explained that there are about 350 private junior colleges in America and only about 250 which are public, but that the enrollment in the public colleges is much greater.

"Incidentally," Dr. Eells commented, "there are considerably more public than private junior colleges here in California."

The association, of which he is executive secretary, boasts more than 500 members, the doctor declared, and also publishes the Junior College Journal, of which he is editor.

Over the last weekend Dr. Eells spoke at a conference at Stanford University which was attended by many of the members of the college faculty.

Sophs Ask Opinion On Formal; Hold More Identification Days

Identification

To enable the complete registration of the high sophomore class for the special events of sophomore week, an identification day will be held once a week, Alden Thorogood, class president said today.

Every Monday, from 9 to 1 o'clock, the identification committee will be in Room 155 to register fourth-term students, Thorogood said. "All students should bring their associated student cards with them when they register," he said, "as the cards will be stamped by the committee for future identification."

Card Must Be Stamped

Only those registered with the committee will be notified of the dates of the high sophomore special events which are being planned for sophomore week, Thorogood warned. A properly stamped card will be necessary to secure admittance to the affairs he said.

Last Monday's initial identification day saw the registration of approximately 80 high sophomores according to Thorogood. He said that, inasmuch as many of the students may not have known about Monday's registration, it was decided to hold a similar day every week.

Week To Be Outstanding

Hugh Waite, chairman of the special events committee, said his committee has already formulated plans for high sophomore week. "We are going to make the special events of this semester a feature that will make Sophomore Week the most outstanding in the history of the college. We have tenatively planned a two and a half hour rally, and a Sophomore day, when everyone will come dressed in the same kind of costume." Dates of the affair will be announced later he said.

The committee is composed of Pete Aydelotte, Bill Minares, Thorogdoo, and Waite.

Formal

Students are asked to express their opinions on whether Friday or Saturday night would be more desirable for the High Sophomore Formal, the committee on arrangements announced today.

It has been said that Friday is a bad night because those with late classes have difficulty in getting ready in time, that some have to work on Saturday morning, and that it makes an extra trip for those living across the bay. On the other hand, it is said, Friday is proper because it is considered junior college night almost everywhere.

The proponents of Saturday night claim that Saturday is best because no one has to get up early on Sunday and they would have more time to get ready in the afternoon.

Those against Saturday night state that it cuts into the middle of the week-end, which is more important than usual at the time of the dance (January 10 or 11) because finals begin on the following Monday.

The High Sophomore Formal is traditionally held at a country club, and the committee announces that a country club can be had either Friday or Saturday night for the same price, so that it only remains for the students to express their opinions by checking their choice in the box provided.

Vote On Formal Date

Tear out this ballot form and turn it in to the Associated Student's office, Room 155, as soon as possible. The ballot need not be signed.

Mural Room May Be Reserved For Low Sophs

Possibility of the Hotel St. Francis reserving its Mural room exclusively for the college on November 26 Low Sophomore night, was expressed today by Ogden Wheeler, Low Sophomore vice-president.

"If we get reservations for 250 couples we can take over the Mural Room for dancing on that night," he said. "The hotel has promised to exclude all but dinner parties from the Mural Room if enough students attend."

Reservations for the affair are now on sale at $1.66 per couple he said, adding that they may be secured from Bill Williams, Anita Welt, Betty Sinschiemer, or Wheeler.

"At such a low price, no one can afford to miss the dance," Wheeler said. "Freddy Martin's orchestra will play for the dance and he has promised to cater to the college in his selections."

Since the dance will be held the Wednesday before the Thanksgiving holidays, Thanksgiving will be the theme of the affair, Williams, class president said.

"The St. Francis is cooperating fully with the college in putting over this dance," Wheeler added.

Mixer Date Still Mystery; 'Some Friday' Hinted

Date of the freshman mixer has not yet been settled beyond the probability that it will be held on a Friday afternoon, social chairman, Jean Arnold, said today.

The committee for the mixer, consisting of Jim Honnert, low frosh president, John Mowbray, high frosh president, Bob Dolman, and Miss Arnold was appointed last week by Miss Arnold. Other freshman class officers will also serve with the committee she said.

With the installation of lights in the college gymnasiums completed, one of these two locations will be selected for the mixer, she added.

By fostering closer acquaintance among the students, the sponsors of the affair hope to strengthen the spirit of the college, Miss Arnold declared, adding, "The purpose of the dance will be to further acquaintance among the students."

The mixer will be open to the entire college, although it is a freshman class activity, she said.

So that new students may be easily recognized, they will be asked to wear red and white frosh buttons, she said.

Better Transportation Seen

Possibility of improved transportation on both the Municipal bus and the K car was voiced yesterday by Dean Edwin C. Browne.

He commented that an attempt was being made to continue the route of the K car line up to Phelan Avenue. This plan now hinges on the Market Street Railway Company which controls the tracks beyond the point where the K car turns off Ocean Avenue.

Rerouting of the 10th Avenue bus to the door of the science building was seen as an imminent possibility by Dean Browne.

Additional buses, however, are doubtful prospects at the present time.

Check Room Information

Checking facilities will only be open from 8:30 a.m. to 4 p.m., Margaret Dougherty, dean of women, announced.

Belongings should not be left overnight, she requested.

Bus Problem

Questionnaire Given To 1400 Students

In answer to the many requests to investigate the bus and street car difficulties which face the students, several hundred questionnaires have been filled out by students in order to determine the extent of inconvenience, Dean Edwin C. Browne indicated today.

Questionnaire Given Monday

The questionnaire was given Monday morning to 1400 students. The blanks were handed out by the instructors at the beginning of some of the early classes.

The results are now being compiled and analyzed by Harold Leuenberger, psychology instructor and when the survey is completed the results will be turned over to the administration for further action. The results will be sent to the two street car companies in the city, Browne announced.

"Of course we don't know what the street car companies will do to aid us in this situation, but we will present the facts to them and do everything in our power to aid the students," Browne said.

Parking Still Problem

In addition to this problem, there is still the problem of parking, Browne added. "Although the situation is greatly improved, there are still those who persist in parking on the center driveway in front of the building," he said. "We will continue to issue pink tags to drivers who park in the area," Browne warned.

According to Browne, seven tags were issued this week, and, if necessary, more will be issued until students realize the seriousness of this situation.

Browne also requests students not to walk or sit on the lawns in front of the college. This request is necessary for beauty of the campus, Browne added.

WSS To Go On Week End Tamalpais Excursion

Tomorrow the Women's Service Society will make a week end excursion to Alpine Lodge on the side of Mt. Tamalpias, Mildred Bartosiewski, president of the group, announced.

This trip will honor the new members and welcome the old members not attending the college now, she added. She also asks that all the present members attend so the others will feel welcome.

According to Miss Bartosiewski, other groups have tried this type of entertainment but have not been successful in their attempt.

"I feel sure that this excursion will be successful because the plans are arranged to the last detail. The girls will do their own cooking while there," she said.

At least 20 persons must attend and the price per person will be 75 cents.

All those who attend are to meet at the Mill Valley station at 10:30 Saturday morning where cars will be waiting to take them the rest of the way to the lodge.

Miss Bartosiewski announced that Verrel Weber has consented to be the chaperon.

Barn Dance Orchestra To Be Chosen Soon

No orchestra has been chosen as yet for the Associated Men Students barn dance at Alvarado Barn on November 16, acording to Ted Theodus, AMS president.

"We expect to make a definite choice some time in the immediate future," Theodus declared. "However, any announcements which we would make at present would be premature."

"According to our tentative plans we will start festivities at about 4:30 o'clock in the afternoon, and refreshments are to be served at approximately 5:30," Theodus said.

"We are providing enough food for 1000 students who are expected to be at the barn during the afternoon," Theodus announced. "However, an attendance of at least 2500 students is expected for the barn dance."

He reminded the students that the barn dance is traditionally informal, featuring cotton dresses for women and jeans for men.

New College Band May Play At USF Football Game Tonight

If there is a sufficiently large turnout at this afternoon's rehearsal, the college band may possibly play at the USF Frosh game tonight at Seals Stadium, Madison Devlin, leader and organizer of the group, revealed last Wednesday.

Though rehearsals had begun only two weeks ago, the band is now in fine shape and ready for a public appearance, Devlin declared. Because of lack of uniforms, however, he said the students will not march around the field if they should show up at the game.

Tryouts In Room 200

Tryouts for a student leader to conduct at games and rallies will be held this afternoon in Room 200, where the band meets every Friday at 4:15, Devlin announced, adding, "I always appoint a student to lead the band; I don't do it myself, although I am there at the games. It is good practice, and emphasizes the fact that the band is a student band."

He named Roy Harding, former drum major at Lowell High School, to act in this capacity with the college band.

Equipment Furnished

"The band is doing very well for the short time it has rehearsed together," Devlin commented. "The students are all greatly enthusiastic and eagerly waiting to make a first appearance at the games. We are getting new equipment also, including music stands."

Organization of a student band this semester is the first endeavor of its kind in the college. Previous efforts had been impossible because of lack of facilities and teaching staff, according to Edwin C. Browne, dean of men, through whose cooperation the student instrumentalists had been recruited.

May Play Tonight

"With the rehearsals going so well, it is hoped that the band will be in shape to play at tonight's game," Dean Browne declared. "The material is in the school, and if it is possible, students in the future may sign up for the band at the time of registration and arrange their program accordingly."

Although only about 20 students were present at the last rehearsal, it is expected that more will show up this afternoon, as twice that number has signed up.

Devlin is music instructor at Lowell, and his high school band has often played at college games and assemblies in the past. Of him Dean Browne commented, "Mr. Devlin is volunteering his time to organize our group here, and his services are greatly appreciated."

Class Interval

Interval To Be Ten Minutes

Beginning next week, the time between classes will be lengthened to 10 minutes, administration officials announced today.

This action was decided upon in an administrative meeting last Wednesday, when the college leaders voted unanimously to return to the 10 minute class interval period.

Main reason given for the change was that the rainy season will overcrowd the halls considerably, and it was felt that the students should have more time in which to clear the halls.

Change Effective Next Week

The change will go into effect as soon as the bells can be changed, probably sometime next week.

Administration officials felt that it was only fair to give the present five minute system a chance to work but that this chance had been given, and "although the system may have eventually worked out, at the present time it has proved itself somewhat impractical."

The system of five minutes between classes was a new one for the college and was on trial this semester to see if it would work. In the past the college, along with other universities and colleges throughout the nation had 10 minutes between class.

Student Officers Grateful

Student officers upon hearing the news commented that "they were very grateful to the administrative staff for their cooperation and helpful and friendly attitude concerning the matter, and appreciated the sincere efforts of the administration to work out a solution."

The class interval controversy brought forth much discussion from both students and faculty alike who felt that five minutes was too short a time to get from one class to another on time.

The administration also announced that the return to 10 minutes will definitely not involve any addition to the college year, but that the number of days of instruction would remain the same.

Students Exhibit Huge Appetite For Sodas, Shakes

By Francis Chrisman

Students of this college may not realize it, but from the standpoint of commodities consumed, they are veritable gluttons.

This fact may be verified by close observation of the soda fountain in the college cafeteria. Here one may see and understand why the love of ice cream and milkshakes has created this suspicion of gluttony within these walls.

Surrounded by towers of ice cream cones, by mountains of cups and glasses, with gallons of supplies within easy reach and faced by clamoring students, the so-called "soda slinger" stands behind his or her counter and concocts various and sundry mixtures for the delight of all who are recipients.

With the expression of one who does not expect to be believed, the individual behind the scoop confesses that, for a semester outfit, the students of the college are more than holding their own.

And "holding their own" includes the following:

Consumption, by connoisseurs of frozen delights, of 15 gallons of ice milk for those now famous milkshakes.

The daily disappearance of more than 200 of the above mentioned milkshakes.

The disappearance, also daily, of hundreds of ice cream cones, which are now decidedly more popular than at the beginning of the semester—reason being that now one receives not one but two scoops for no extra cost. This, of course, is indicative of the economic soundness of our institution.

And lastly, "holding one's own" means that several hundred coca-colas pass each day down the throats of several hundred thirsty men and women, which adds up to about 20,000 aids to that tired-thirsty feeling during the course of a 20 week semester.

If such figures prove something, students along with that great number of cokes mentioned before, also put away 1500 gallons of ice milk a semester—more than 20,000 milkshakes and more than 20,000 ice cream cones in a single half year of instruction.

This has caused many truly unconcerned observers to mention that perhaps the young men and women of today come to college to eat rather than to study, but students deny this.

With confusion swarming about them and the threat of a shortage of materials omnipresent, the "soda slingers" of the college are bravely carrying on, and, from all indications, will continue to do so for years to come.

Change Shows Faculty Student Cooperation

THE return of the class interval period to 10 minutes is an excellent example of the type of cooperation that exists between the administration and the students of the college.

When one realizes that there are many institutions where such cooperation does not exist, it makes him doubly thankful that he is a part of this college.

The attitude of the administration throughout the entire controversy over the class interval has been one of cooperation and kindliness. The administration more than met the students half way on the subject, and was time and again willing to discuss the issues of the affair with student leaders.

Examples such as we have in this college make one feel that, contrary to some schools of thought, the present system of education and some of the present day educators make the job of going to college well worth while.

Dedication Day Time To 'Show Off' Campus

IF you have been waiting for an opportunity to show off the campus to your friends and relatives, dedication day, November 10, is the day.

Visitors can expect to see more than just the college building and grounds; the various college departments are cooperating fully by presenting displays of their work in the show cases around the halls. Exhibits by the floriculture, geology, and life sciences departments, to name a few, can already be seen. Other departments are organizing displays in their respective classrooms.

Remember, students and their parents are especially invited to the ceremony; it is they who will help to make is a success.

Education, Business Meet Except In Terms

DR. FRANKLIN BLISS SNYDER, president of Northwestern University, and Paul Hollister, Macy executive, have recently commented concerning the state of education in this country, showing the academic and business opinions. Interest in the opinions lies in the indication that there is less difference in ultimate viewpoint thin in manner of expression.

Dr. Snyder has said:

"No one will deny that the world today presents a sorry spectacle of international turmoil and domestic uncertainty. But to conclude that we who believe in education and religion are victims of a pleasant delusion, seems to me quite unwarranted. Rather should I say that in the past neither education nor religion has had a fair chance to show what it could accomplish for human welfare, and that in the future we shall need more rather than less than both. I say this because the disease from which humanity is suffering seems to me to be one which only education and religion can ever hope to cure."

Mr. Hollister, who "doesn't think the world is going to beat a path to education's door," has said:

"I hold with Archibald MacLeish in believing that unless the lag between university scholarship, research, and education, and their application to the urgent and foreboding political and social problems of our democracy, is greatly shortened, we shall see our democratic institutions seriously shaken, if not destroyed. I believe that American education forces as a whole owe something to American advertising for having found out how to communicate swiftly, graphically, wholesomely and stimulatingly to the nations as a whole."

Put the two together, and perhaps the "lag" will be shortened by the "fair chance."

Impersonally Speaking

SINCE the first day of instruction, we have had the rather sadistic pleasure of watching the unfortunates as they have toiled up the precipice that connects the Science Building and the gyms.

As they have stumbled to the top, panting and exhausted, they have bemoaned the fate that forces them to scale those heights that surpass those of the much vaunted Mount Everest.

Allowing a 10 minute rest, while they recover enough breath to carry on a conversation, we have interviewed several (of the better-looking women).

Out of these interviews has come only one plan that is even remotely deserving of mention, that of a commonly advocated escalator.

We have dismissed this as being unworthy of the college, too complicated, too expensive, and impractical.

This decision was the product of deep, sober thought and not merely a snap judgment on our part.

Not being merely a destructive critic, our fertile brain has concocted no less than four, count 'em, four ways of relieving the arduous toil of the hill climbing expedition.

Since the college offers a physical education course in riding and these classes are consistently over-crowded, to the exclusion of some, our first plan is to station mules at the summit and foot of the grade.

This would relieve the over-crowded condition and give everyone enrolled in physical education a chance to learn riding.

Our second mode of relief from the horrible rigors of the "last mile," as it is known to the hike-haters of the college, is to provide a ski-lift.

This would give the college skiers a chance to practice going uphill as well as just down. We feel that a good skier should be able to cut as fine a figure on the ascent as on the descent

This scheme would also prove an impetus to winter sports. Students would become skilled at ascending and would start for the snow-country to practice, and become proficient at descending.

Our third contribution to humanity and civilization is a cable-car system. The cars would use the force of gravity for locomotion, the heavier car going down would pull the other car up.

Since San Francisco is the city of hills and is so proud of her antiquated cable-railway systems, we place our tacit approval on this idea of a cable-car transport.

Our fourth deathless plot, that will cause our name to be long remembered after we have departed from this earth, is a breeches buoy. Our sea-going instincts are responsible for this method of eliminating the terrible journey from the gym.

The breeches-buoy is used for rescue work from a sinking ship. Since the foreign situation grows steadily worse and war looms as a definite possibility, this plan would be in keeping with national defense interests of the nation at large.

Suppose that a troop transport were to be sunk. Everyone is ignorant of the proper procedure in using a breeches-buoy. That is, everyone except students of the college, who have had training in its use. Much valuable time and scores of lives are saved by their action.

The Spectator

HITLER had a lot to do with the production of Down Argentine Way, Darryl F. Zanuck's latest entry in the field of musicals. Although, this may be a surprising manner in which to begin a review, the statement is true. Because of the Fueher's little European jaunts, the foreign markets are practically a closed book as far as Hollywood is concerned. So wary-eyed producers are turning their attention toward the lucrative South American field. Every attempt will be made to transform the South American populace into the avid consumers of the Hollywood product.

The United States Government smiles benevolently on this scheme. Certainly the chief aim of Washington at the moment is to strengthen the relations between the continents of the Western Hemisphere. The movies, more than any other agency can co-operate by making pictures that will create a friendly, neighborly spirit between the lands. So for financial and defensive measures, (thanks to Adolph), the screens of the country will shortly be deluged by a landslide of films with a decidedly Latin flavor.—Down Chile Way, Nights Over Peru, Romance of the Andes, and an endless number in addition.

Down Argentine Way is the forerunner of this new cycle. Unfortunately, any effect it might produce to reaffirm solidarity will be a negligible one, for this technicolor opus is one of the weakest musicals we have ever seen.

That old "debbil," plot trouble, rears its ugly head in most auspicious fashion. In fact, there doesn't seem to be any plot at all. Don Ameche is the dashing, romantic hero from South of the Border, who comes to Manhattan to sell some of his father's horses. Betty Grable, a spoiled society darling, tries to purchase one of the animals only to find her way blocked by an old feud between her family's and Don's. Then the locale shifts to Argentine, as Betty heads south. From this point on, we gave up trying to analyze the putrid story and concentrated on the musical numbers, the one redeeming feature of the picture.

Director Irving Cummings did as well as he could with the weak material handed him. His spacing of the songs was poor, however. In the early portion of the film, one song follows another in such rapid succession that the film takes on the semblance of a vaudeville review.

Ameche, in the male romantic lead, has an opportunity to be gay and charming after a series of sour, grim roles. He does all right although he's not one of our particular favorites. Betty Grable, fresh from a Broadway hit, has an opportunity to dance, sing (very poorly), and mouth her lines in mechanical mediocrity. Betty certainly is easy on the eyes. Other than her gorgeous beauty, she has litttle to add to the film in the way of entertainment.

The supporting cast walk off easily with all honors. Charlotte Greenwood and Leonid Kinskey as a comical team give the film an occassional lift.

On the credit side of the ledger, we have Carmen Miranda's socko singing, a sensational dance routine by the Nicholas Brothers that drew applause, and a good musical score by Gordon and Warren. And a bow to the lush, technicolor tints and lavish settings. But as first rate entertainment, the film falls sadly flat.

"That's Thirty Tonight" By Sullivan

On The Feminine Side

COLLEGE women are being served up a wide variety of styles from which to choose. Not only do these novelties extend to the realm of clothes, but they also include assorted articles dear to the feminine heart.

One of the trickiest gadgets we have seen is a porous, sponge-like powder puff which comes in its own oiled-silk container to insure the neatness of the inside of one's purse. Novelty about the puff is the fact that it can be opened through the middle to disclose a cavity into which powder can be poured. At least 10 day's powder supply can be guaranteed in the puff, and the marvelous smooth way in which one's powder goes on is certainly enough to put a sponge-puff on one's cosmetic "Must Have" list.

For those women who prefer to stick to the tried-and-true compact styles, we saw a lush alligator one only last week. The case is really huge and is capable of holding enough powder for several days. It is almost pancake like in appearance and can be monogrammed with three initials by one of the local stores. We like the way it can make up a set with your alligator shoes and bag.

Monograms, And Monograms

Speaking of monograms, as we were a moment ago, they're definitely getting to be the rage on this campus. Cardigan sweater with huge initials scrawled across their pockets . . . woolen jackets with or without matching skirts sporting contrasting monograms on their pockets, too . . . brightly-colored ankle socks with the wearer's initials embroidered in gay colors to contrast with or match the whole outfit . . . even woolen dresses have succumbed to the lure of the personal touch as produced by having one's very own initials on one's clothing.

One rather amusing touch is the scarlet "RX" emblazoned on a well-tailored black and white check dress which one of the college women is wearing this semester. Persons passing by ventured guesses such as "Ruth Xerxes" until the wearer explained that the initials were there only for novelty's sake and none other.

Compacts, cigarette cases, and comb cases have also been taken over by the craze. Those smart compacts we mentioned awhile ago are quite unusual with gold handwriting spread across their surface.

Stars And Stripes Forever

Patriotic novelties have gone beyond the fad stage. The American and British flags which were formerly unusual have taken on an almost standard smartness and are seen everywhere. They're up-to-the-minute on suit lapels and fastened on one's coat, especially on the brighter red and blue jackets.

Latest patriotic novelty to gain favor with the women at the college are the jeweled and enameled American eagles which look very jaunty when perched upon a tailored jacket. Huge pins fashioned to resemble the hat worn by Uncle Sam in red, white, and blue stones are also being flaunted by those "in the know". They're especially good for wear with one's street clothes, especially on trim blacks.

One of the smarter dresses for classes comes in a brilliant lipstick red woolen. It features a fly-front and two littleflap pockets near its narrow belt and is extremely well-made. Interest in the dress comes from the fact that its small breast pocket is made of an American flag in felt applique. Unusual is hardly the word.

Then there is the medium of the bright red or blue shawl which can be worn on the campus. With a navy blue skirt and a long-sleeved white shirt and a scarlet shawl slung across one's shoulder—well, need we say more?

WHILE THE football team battles at Modesto, news of its progress is relayed by wire to the Associated Students' Dance at the Palace Hotel and broadcast throughout the evening. Five years ago.

Shots At RAMdom . . .

THAT INCREASING NIP in this October air just warms our heart no end. For us, this omen of rain and various types of ominous weather means that that time of the year when some overly ambitious and healthy member of the family suddenly decides on a glorious Sunday morning that it is—we quote—". . . a swell day for a picnic," is happily drawing to a close.

In a weak moment we consented to go on a picnic last week-end. For five hours we waited for a thunderstorm to dispell our bucolic subsidary of Dante's Inferno. It was a cozy little group, rivaling that happy little party in Strange Cargo.

As usual there was a practical joker. There's one in every family; you just can't breed them out.

One member of our madding crowd under the greenwood trees foolishly attempted to catch some sleep that had been eluding her for the whole week-end. Our practical joker—anyone will tell you that Victor is a perfect scream and ought to do it on the radio—soon snatched her from the arms of Morpheus with some well-placed ice cubes. The worst part of the whole episode was that Morpheus, timid soul that he is, didn't even protest.

Of course we had a bonfire, only a bonfire is one of those things that looks much better on a magazine cover. You know, you warm your feet and blister your face while your hinterland suffers from a mild case of ague.

BUGS AND INSECTS the traditional horrors of these rustic combinations of track meets and pie-eating contests, usually don't bother us. It's only when some insensate person hovers about our plate with a folded newspaper, fulminating direly about what he'll do to the next fly that alights on our potato salad, that we worry about our six and eight legged friends.

Once we thought we had eluded the fellow who wanted to start a race up a 40 degree hillside, that is until he spotted a foot that we had forgotten to drag completely under the car.

We finally decamped, leaving an assorted collection of censored cans, great and little scraps of paper, and a brightly-burning fire.

ON THE WAY HOME an unfortunate person pointed out a thoroughly inaccessible gully, overgrown with decrepit verdure, temerariously uttering, "What a swell place for a picnic next week-end!"

So far as we know he is still chained to a tree in the aforementioned gully meditating upon his folly.

WHILE LOOKING UP the spell of "picnic," we discovered that for one thing, it came from the French. We wish we could pass is on to Esperanto.

The definition began "A pleasure party the food for which . . ."

In answer to which we can only mumble, "It's a lie!"

Editor, The Guardsman:

Your paper is all right on the whole, but I have a few comments to make about that so-called feature page. What in the world are you trying to put over on your readers?

First, that Cowie, the writer of the Spectator, must be a disguised Hollywood press-agent. Never in the world have I read such a variety of compliments and plugs in my life. All he does is praise, praise, praise. It's getting tiresome. Let's have some real criticism of that tripe turned out by Hollywood.

That Hyman gets me also. He must puff on a opium "rag" before composing his column. He's way over my head with his sly humor and ten-letter words. Let's have something less complicated in Shots At Ramdom.

Malone's column gets my o.k. (My girl-friend likes it)

Editor's note: Hyman and Cowie are sitting in the corner, blushing with shame, while Miss Malone flits gleefully around the publications office. Seriously, however, a column is no easy thing to write. Perhaps H. F. will contribute some method in column-writing.

Editor, The Guardsman:

Germany is trying to cure England of land ownership, not by curing the disease, but by shooting the victim. America cannot fight both Germany and Japan. America should try to cooperate with those nations, she has interfered with before—as by monetary destruction and high tariffs. The recent conscription statute may scare Hitler but like all precious attempts to prepare for war, the men in high places have never yet failed to blunder into darkness. The World War of 1917 left an ironical armistice of twenty-five million people who have died, and a world depression resulting today. Our democracy is formed without the substance. It permits men to starve in that midst of plenty, to go homeless in the maze of vacant hotels, forbids medical care for the poor, and makes tramps out of honest men.

Why all the paradoxes? Because capitalism developed our resources. The transition now, via dictatorships, will pave the way to socialism, which in a modified form, trade unions now attempt. But the emphasis in the future will be upon planning—on a world scale. Americans are such adolescents, waving their prejudices around and stampeding any one in their way daring to stand up for right. They pretend to be wise, but are ignorant and worst of all intolerant of those differing from them. The test of truth is consistency. Men need LIGHT today more than ever before. They deprive anyone, they don't under-

Ram Squad Faces Midterm Tonight At U.S.F. Tussle

By Kei Hori

TONIGHT'S game with "Los Muchachos" (that's Spanish for boys, which are little Don Senores or something) is a sort of a midterm exam for the Rams. Losing their first conference game, the big horned quadruped must face this tussle with a foot in the grave. Although the rumor of Navy Al Nauman's staying until next midterm is unconfirmed, and won't be until the game starts, if not later, Lee Eisan has done some shifting around (again) in the squad. Herb Taylor will probably swing into the flanking back, and Bill Ross will probably fill his spot. So don't be surprise when you see a 46 carrying the ball instead of a 77. It's only Taylor, And "Navy Al" is somewhere scrubbing a deck or something. (If Al is in the college, we're just kidding).

Incidentally "Los Muchachos" have defeated the Bucking Bronco Colts by the width of a shadow last Sunday. They seem a d——n sight better in placement kicking than we are. Although the Colts managed two touchdowns, one was called back on a clipping penalty. But the thing is, they beat 'em 7 to 6. Come on, you Rams, for a victory!

BouKei's For Gory Plays

From the looks of things, we gotta give another bouKei to Joe Lantagne. Seems to be doing all right with that Missouri-Mule-kick-the-guy-and-try-to-kill-him team of his. As we see it, the object is to see how many guys you can kill so as you can have more men on your side to make points. So far, Froggie Schneider seems to have high score with four manslaughter charges against him. What a gory game, eh Glamorous? Hear tell they don't call time out for a guy even if he is dragging half his bloody body down on the field. Won't stop until the ball dies. And it doesn't die half as much as the players do.

Aquachamps Revealed

Helen Crlenkovich tells us that we have four—yes—4 Far Western Diving Champions. Helen, of course, holds the springboard and platform championships, and then there is Jack Lowery who holds the platform title and Bill Lucas and Emmet Cashin also hold their own. What with all these hidden champions running around the college, 'twouldn't be surprising to find that the Editor—Heil—probably holds some kind of title too. Something like All American typist in hunt-and-peck style.

Editors Carry Pigskin Too

The Guardsman staff of men have composed a touch football team and claim to have had their first practice session at Kezar. Hear tell that George Cowie, the Spectator or something, made 10 touchdowns on end runs around Lou Goldstone and Editor L. Benjamin Gross. B. Irwin Hyman, the Ramdom shooter, did not show up. For shame, B. Irwin.

Intramural

Rifle Signups Close October 30; Pierce Named Manager

Another intramural activity made its appearance last Monday to augment the near dozen now in progress, that of rifle shooting.

All men wishing to participate in this sport may sign up with Myron Pierce, intramural rifle manager, before October 30, at which time the entries will close.

Contestants are required to shoot twenty shots off hand at a distance of fifty feet, which is considered more difficult than a forty foot putt on a rough green, Capt. Fred McFarland, intramural adviser, announced.

Meanwhile, the softball tournament is rapidly nearing completion and is expected to end sometime next week. There are only three games remaining to be played. On Monday, The Eds vs. Beta Tau, and on Wednesday, Beta Tau vs. Police Training, and The Eds face Phi Mu Gamma. Records show the game between The Eds and Phi Mu Gamma will undoubtedly decide the championship, for both teams are undefeated in league competition. Here is a list of the present standing of the teams.

	Won	Lost
Phi Mu Gamma	8	0
The Eds	7	0
Tri Epsilon	7	2
Police Training	7	2
Beta Phi Bet	7	2
Japanese Students	7	3
Lurgies	7	3
Beta Tau	5	3

The basketball tournament has reached the semi-finals and only one game remains to be played before the finals commence. This afternoon The Goats play the U.S. All Americans. The Goats appear to have a decided edge in class over its opponents and is expected to win the league, Paul Postler, assistant intramural manager, announced.

Tomorrow morning at 7:30, the Golf Championships will be held at the Ingleside Golf Links. All men who have not signed up for this sport may compete in the tournament, simply by showing up at the Ingleside Golf Links. Following is a list of the men who already have signed up: Harry Hilp, George Mossler, Terry McCarthy, Joe Wiss, John Cunningham, Beorge Batle, Bob Epley, Paul Pabst, Emmet Cashin, Hal Silverstein, Bob Barkley, and Otto Oshida.

When the sports now in progress have been completed, other activities such as volleyball, free throwing, cross country run, and boxing will start immediately.

Entries are being accepted by the intramural managers, Bob Bush and Paul Postler in Room 30.

Schrick Leads Candidates For Women's Rifle Team

With practice to begin soon the Junior College Women's team candidates have been partially selected according to Captain Fred McFarland, rifle adviser. The selection was made on the basis of scores registered so far this season.

Led by Marion Schrick, who placed twenty-fourth in the Intercollegiates last spring, the team is as follows: Margaret Yeager, Mary Haley, Irene Greenbaum, Josephine Bowler, Marleen McCray, Julia Bradshaw, Muriel Grenelle, and Betty Barless.

Last year's team, which placed fourth in the Intercollegiates, has graduated almost en masse. The greatest loss was Marion Murphy who won the individual honors in the meet. McFarland said the outlook was not too dark as spring is a long way off.

Postal competition with various other women's teams throughout the nation will be engaged in according to McFarland. These matches are run in practice with the five leading scores sent to the opposing team and the winner is found by the comparison of the scores.

A definite time has not been set as yet for the meeting of the team but McFarland says that he will put up a notice concerning it. McFarland placed Marion Schrick in charge of the team and she can be consulted about the meeting, also.

Culminating the season next spring will be the Intercollegiate Rifle Contest. Last year the college placed fourth behind the University of Washington. The team scored 2453 points out of a possible 3000 to be the only junior college to place very high in the match, according to McFarland.

Multimillionaire Paul Mellon, already a graduate of Yale and Clare college of Cambridge University, has registered as a freshman at St. John's College, Annapolis, Maryland.

Women's Athletics

Fifty Galileo GAA'ers Invited To Track Meet This Afternoon

Fifty women from the Galileo High School Girl's Athletic Association, will be the guests of the Women's Athletic Association of this college at an indoor track meet to be held this afternoon from 3 to 5 in the women's gymnasium, according to Jeanne Arnold, secretary of the WAA.

Featured at the track meet will be an indoor version of such sports as the broad jump, hurdles, relays, discus throw, and pole vault, she said.

Teams composed of members from both this institution and Galileo will be formed for participation in the meet. Then teams composed of members from both institutions will be organized, and one member from each team will represent her team in each event of the day.

Elma Oddstead, Jane McKinnon, Versa Cullen and Betty Teter will be in charge of the organization of teams, which will be done by the passing out of various colors of ribbon as each woman enters the gym. Those who happen to receive the same color of ribbon will be on the same team.

Check room to be used for the stowing away of binders and books of students will be located on the second floor of the gymnasium, and will be operated by Eleanore Haliber.

Badminton Team To Compete In Marin Playday Tomorrow

Journeying to Marin Junior College tomorrow will be representative badminton teams from the Women's Athletic Association which will participate in the badminton playday which will be held there from 9:20 a.m. to 1:30 p.m., Bertha Mae Keller, physical education instructor, announced.

Singles team representing the college will be composed of Betty Teter, Blanche Noyes, Barbara Smith and Rita Weiman.

Team representatives of the college who will compose the five doubles teams are: Ruth Esmond, Lola Coset, Ruth Messner, Virginia Bopp, Rita McDonald, Pat Greenly, Stella Golica, Claire Rowe, Versa Cullen and Bernice Strube.

Intramural Water Relays Highlight Splash Party; Faculty Team Features Old-Fashioned Costumes

Inauguration of the initial program of intramural water competition for women students of the college was held last night, at the traditional Women's Athletic Association Splash Party, the scene of which was the YWCA on Sutter Street.

Highlight of the evening was the intramural relays in lighted candle racing, porpoise racing, and spoon and ping-pong ball racing. Participating teams in those races included members of the faculty team, composed of Mary Perry, Edna Denhard, Miriam Gatley, Bertha Mae Keller, and Aileen Kinkel.

Another team was that of the Physical Education Majors Club which included Barbara Gunn, Jane Visalli, Jeanne Arnold, Barbara Smith and Jezebel Winningham. The Ice Skating Club team was represented by Ruth Hobson, June McConnell, Madeliene McConnell, Barbara Riffe, Joan Shafsky, Betty Moore and Antoinette Compagno.

Personnel of the Dance Club intramural team were Eleanore Halineer, Peggy Buchanan, Val Leonoff, Dorothy Miller, Leona Schaefer, Veronica Long, Pat Greenly, Inge Lubahn, Betty Nasiel, Claire Codigan, Laura Friel, and Eleanor Haliber.

Members of the Badminton Club intramural team were Ruth Esmond, Claire Rowe, Stella Galicia, and Rita Weiman.

Most novel feature of the evening was the costume-bathing suits worn by members of the faculty intramural team. Old fashioned suits in all the glory of their long skirts, stocking to match, bonnets, and even matching parasols, were displayed by faculty members. According to Aileen Kinkel, physical education instructor, the city was scoured for passe outfits, which would stun spectators at the Splash.

Sports Recruits Must Take Physical Exams This Week

All women members of the various Women's Athletic Association clubs who have not yet had their physical examinations from Dr. Alice Potter are urged to do so as soon as possible, Blanche Noyes, WAA vice-president, announced this week.

Examinations will be given for the convenience of WAA members, from 9 to 12 on Friday, she said.

"In order that women may participate in competitive sports activities, it is necessary that they be in good physical condition. The state of health of each woman may be ascertained by the health examination which will be given by Dr. Potter," she said.

Horsewomen Cancel Ride And Luncheon With Sac'to

Because members of the Sacramento Junior College riding class are unable to appear here on October 27, the horse ride and luncheon formerly planned by the horse riding group of this college on that day, has been called off, Laurine Bergin, physical education instructor, said.

Contents of a letter received from Sacramento declining the invitation said that "since only four students would be able to come on October 27, it would be impossible to accept the invitation."

Former plans now cancelled, were for a ride on the beach and a luncheon.

Soccer

Shinkickers Meet Menlo Tomorrow

Resuming league play tomorrow when they meet Menlo, Coach Joseph Lantagne's Ram soccermen, are gunning for their second league win. The game is scheduled for 10 a.m. on the Crocker-Amazon Playground, on Geneva Avenue.

The boys have practiced all week for this encounter, and are hoping for victory. According to Lantagne very little is known about Menlo, and they might surprise. If past records have any bearing, the Rams should finish with a victory.

At present the local soccer team is resting in the middle of the league standings with a .500 average. They lost to California, defeated Cal Aggies and tied both San Mateo and U.S.F.

The locals have shown better teamwork in their last game and during this week's practice, Lantagne said. If the field is a fast one tomorrow, the faster boys like Bert Korn, Nick Dezdevich, and Bill Fairfield will show the Menlo lads some fast soccer.

Nick Dezdevich, "The little man with big stuff" who changed from goalie to the forward line, showed a little of the speed which has made him so successful as a goalie last Saturday on the soggy field of the U.S.F. tilt. If the field is dry tomorrow, the Dezdevich-Korn combination promises to show some speedy play.

All home games for the Rams will be played on the Crocker-Amazon field. Location of visiting fields is not generally known until a day or two before the game is due to be played.

Track Men Must Train For Grueling Intramural

With the intramural cross-country run coming two weeks from today, Russ Sweet, local track coach, is concentrating on the affair.

All students who wish to turn out for the event are advised to contact Sweet. The course, which is to be four miles long, is too tough, in Sweet's opinion, to allow untrained men to attempt to run.

At least eight days prior to the meet, students who wish to run should report to Sweet for practice, the coach said.

The course will be around the campus and will be four miles of hills and dales, valleys and glens, Sweet said. The meet will be held on Friday, November 8, at 3 in the afternoon, he said.

Medals are offered for the first three places, Sweet said. The winner will receive a gold medal, the second place man will get a silver medal, and the man who takes third place will get a bronze medal.

These medals, with the other intramural medals, can be seen in the intramural showcase on the main floor of the Science Building.

Ski Team Seeks Official Recognition In Sports

Members of the ski team today increased their efforts to obtain official recognition as a minor sport within the college, Bob Ogg, ski team captain announced.

The Men's Athletic Council is to meet in the near future to discuss the request, Ogg revealed.

The ski team in past semesters has been very active and has won several places in ski meets in competition against students from the University of Washington, Oregon State, UCLA, and the University of California.

"We feel that skiing should be recognized as a minor sport because it is definitely a college team."

The rifle team was last semester recognized as a minor sport and its members awarded circle blocks for achievements in that field.

Final Slash In Casaba Ranks Promised Soon

Another, and probably final cut, is in store for the local cagers, Tom Wilson, college basketball coach, announced this week.

This cut will put the squad down to where it can be easily handled, he said. The squad will then consist of two varsity squads. These squads will be known as units, Wilson explained.

The men on Unit A will be the starting players and those in Unit B will be the reserves, he added. There will be no Jayvees this semester and all men retained on the squad will be listed as varsity men. These units may be interchangeable, Wilson said.

Los Muchachos

Rams Meet Strong Don Frosh Tonight Back On Home Ground

Back into the practice sessions after a defeat by the Sacramento Panthers, the college Rams face one of the strongest teams the University of San Francisco Freshmen have turned out.

With power concentrated on the line and ends, the passing attack has also been perfected by Bob Kleckner, coach of Los Muchachos. In defeating the Santa Clara Colts, the pass from Jim Sheridan to Mert Dilley planted the seed to the touchdown.

In Hal Mattson and Jim Sheridan, Los Muchachos have two of the strongest and fastest of backfield men. Applying of the Notre Dame system, which is man for man, the plays are made so that when perfected, each play is destined for a touchdown.

With this system, and the Notre Dame shift, the frosh, with a fast and shifty backfield, loom as one of the biggest obstacles of the Ram schedule.

The Rams, however, have their system concentrated on short gains with only one or two plays perfected for touchdowns. Power plays off tackle and guards will predominate in the Ram game.

With the probable absence of Al Nauman, now in the United States Naval Reserves, a new system of attack may be formed by Coach Lee Eisan. Herb Taylor, former end, has been practicing at the half and full positions with Jim Honnert at quarter, and Jack Medrano and Dave Cunningham at halves.

The line will probably be the same as that of former games, namely, Ken Hagen and Bill Ross, replacing Taylor, at ends, John Blakemore and Bill Windeler at tackles, Pinky Larracou and Clark Johnson at the guard positions and Dick Wilson at the pivot position.

Last Friday's encounter with the Panthers also illustrated the necessity of blocking for the ball carrier in order to move the team down field. Interference for Nauman was one of the weakest the college has ever shown this season. It was not until the last quarter that ended in the intercepted pass that the Rams really showed offensive power.

With Taylor in the backfield, the Rams now have one of the best kickers in the junior college league. During practices he has averaged about 40 to 45 yards per kick. Honnert, on the other hand, has been considered one of the best open field runners during his prey school career and has shown much in that field at the college.

Signups

Warnings Ring For Boxing

Last chance to sign up for boxing is next Monday or Tuesday afternoon, Joseph Lantagne, boxing coach, warned this week. Though the deadline for signing up was yesterday, Lantagne feels that many students might not have heard about the earlier signup.

Lantagne wants it understood that no student will be allowed to compete in the boxing activities if they have failed to sign up. Before actual training begins, each student must undergo a strict physical examination, he revealed.

The boxing program will terminate this December, when the best boxing stars will compete in the finals for the college intramural championship, Lantagne said.

"Whether the student knows anything about the fine art of self defense, or not," Lantagne disclosed, "he is asked to report to me. We will be glad to teach students how to box, and if they show talent, we will match them for the fights at the end of the semester."

Lantagne revealed that no student will be allowed to box against an opponent until he has satisfied the instructors that he knows how to defend himself. This will eliminate any injuries that might occur through mismatching of the boys, Lantagne said.

"Many student don't know this, but boxing is one of the safest college sports," Lantagne added. "Records show that fewer accidents and serious injuries have occured in boxing than in any other college competitive activity."

Boxers will be given stringent training for the next month, then elimination bouts will be held to determine the boxers for the final bouts which are scheduled for the Coliseum Bowl in the middle of December.

The Season--So Far

In looking into the games played so far by the squad, the team, now in midseason has upheld its colors thusly.

S.F.J.C.—0 Placer—6

With the loss of George Meyers at tackle, the Ram machine bogged down with fumbles, etc. Chidester and Ostrom carried the ball to the 2, where the former leaned over to score. Al Nauman and Jack Medrano stood out.

S.F.J.C.—19 S.F. State—13

Rejuvenated, the Rams rolled over the Gators with power plays and sweeping end runs. Nauman had a field day with 3 touchdowns, Luke Lowell kicked like a mule. Reade and Verducci shone for State.

S.F.J.C.—6 Cal Frosh—0

For the first time since the college opened, the Rams defeated Cal. A pass from Nauman to Lowell scores after a strong defensive 5-3-2-1 is inaugurated. Bill Reinhart is their troublemaker.

S.F.J.C.—7 L.A.C.C.—6

The fourth win in six games brings the Rams back from L.A. in high spirits. Honnert, with a lame leg and torn hand booms over guard and converts the winning score, Jack Fellows scores for the Cubs.

S.F.J.C.—0* Sacramento—6

Statistically winning the game, the Rams lost when a drive to the 10 yard line was stopped by an intercepted pass by a tackle, who ran 84 yards. This game was the Rams' first conference game.

Future Games and Their Outlook

() denotes last year's score, * denotes conference games.

S.F.J.C.—(7) U.S.F.—(14)

Both teams have a fighting chance. Slight edge goes to U.S.F. with their win over Santa Clara last week. Rams may be rejuvenated because of possibility of Nauman's not playing.

S.F.J.C.—(0)* San Mateo—(7)

A kicking duel last year; the Bulldogs took advantage of the hot weather and glaring sun and passed down field, with sweeping end runs. Another team which is always a threat. Rams have a fighting chance.

S.F.J.C.—(6) Pasadena—(7)

Always a threat, the Rose Bowlers are dark this season, which is more of threat than before because of not knowing what type of offense or defense to use. Bulldogs have team of returning veterans.

S.F.J.C.—(7)* Modesto (7)

Valley team with plenty of punch and good coach, formerly of U.S.C.'s wonder team. Bob Erskin and Lee Eisan are rivals even during coaching periods. Lee is from Cal. Prospects are good, but can't tell.

Dedication

Site Changed To Men's Gym; Plans Progressing Swiftly

Location for the college dedication ceremony on Sunday, November 10, which will be held at 1 o'clock, has been changed from the women's gymnasium to the men's gymnasium, which affords more space, Llord D. Luckmann, dedication chairman, announced this week.

Because the dedication date is also the beginning of American Education Week, plans are being coordinated with the public schools program for the week, he said.

Transcription of the dedication over Station KGO Sunday evening, from 8:30 to 8:45, will begin a series of radio broadcasts to be produced in the interest of education, and will be sponsored by Mayor Angelo J. Rossi's committee for the week's activities, Luckmann revealed.

Highlights To Be Transcribed

Because of the limited time, the complete dedication program and the flag ceremony which follows at 2 o'clock will not be broadcast in their entirety, Luckmann added, but will be condensed to include interviews of the chief speakers and a description of the grounds, the crowds, and the atmosphere.

Through the cooperation of Honorable Richard Doyle of the Board of Education, who acts as chairman at the formal dedication, arrangements have been made to have an NBC announcer interview the following, according to Luckmann: Mayor Angelo J. Rossi, Honorable Harold C. Caulfield, president of the Board of Education, Joseph P. Nourse, Superintendent of Public Schools, and Archibald J. Cloud, college president.

Other Dedications

According to a public schools bulletin, the following units will also be dedicated during American Education Week: George Washington High athletic plant and auditorium, James Denman Junior High, and Francis Scott Key Auditorium.

Colleges Must Train

Theme of American Education Week is Education For the Common Defense. "The junior college must necessarily assume a heavy responsibility for leadership in training young men and women for the present emergency," Luckmann declared. "American colleges and schools must act vigorously so that we can confidently expect intelligent action from the future citizens whom we are preparing through our cultural and practical courses. It is the aim of this college, and we hope to convey this aim in our dedication program, to contribute to the community individuals who will be alert to the task of perpetuating individual liberties."

Redford Makes NYA Checkup In Room 148

Requesting that all students who have made application for NYA employment report to Room 148 as soon as possible, Edward H. Redford, college NYA director, explained that this does not mean that there are openings available but that a checkup is being made which necessitates the request.

Redford also declared that hereafter time schedules will not be accepted unless they are made out in ink and the time compiled in tenths and hundredths.

"This is to do away with various methods that have been used in the past and to establish uniformity in our system," he said.

Editor's Note:

If you don't care for our present democracy and the so-called American way of life, perhaps you can think of a better place to live. Incidentally, in reference to your comments on America cooperating with the Axis, it is not the usual custom for persons or nations to join hands with brigands or approve the actions of land hungry war lords.

It is true that men need light today but we doubt very much if you are qualified to lead the nation out of the depths you seem to see about you. As for Americans being adolescents, there is an old saying that people in glass houses shouldn't throw stones.

Exchange Rally

Varied Bill Planned With San Mateans

Final plans for the joint rally with San Mateo Junior College on Thursday, October 31, are still in the embryonic stage, Pete Aydelotte, rally committee chairman, revealed this week.

"Variety will be the keynote of our program but beyond this point nothing definite can be stated," Aydelotte said.

The San Mateo portion of the program will provide for the introduction of the Associated Students president and several members of the football team. Also included in the San Mateo program will be a short skit and several vocalists.

The skit is an original and it will be staged by the San Mateo rally committee, according to Waldo Hunt, assembly chairman of the peninsula school.

Aydelotte and his assistants will devote their share of the program to the introduction of several members of the football team.

The following day the college rally committee will travel to San Mateo where the members will again present the same rally for the benefit of the Bulldog followers.

Assurance of a piano for the musical numbers of the program has been given the Rally Committee, Aydelotte mentioned.

"The rally will start at 12 noon and will be held in the center quad.

"I have received no notice of any college assemblages under the authority of the new ruling just drawn up by the president's committee," Aydelotte said.

Ex Council Approves CAB Club Suspensions

Following a report by Marion Schrick, Club Advisory Board vice-president, the Executive Council at its last meeting approved CAB action in suspending six clubs which had failed to apply for renewal of club charters this semester.

Clubs under suspension are Alpha Phi Omega, Beta Phi Beta, Block Society, National Collegiate Flying Club, San Francisco Junior College Chapter, Omicron Phi Pi, and Skating Club.

Any of these groups wishing to regain their good standing should file applications for charter either today or Tuesday, Bob Ogg, CAB president, said this week.

"Although clubs may apply for charters at any time during the semester, it will be to their advantage to be removed from suspension as early as possible," he advised.

Should these clubs again fail to apply for charter renewals next semester, they will be ousted from the club board and outlawed from official student activities, Ogg warned.

Student Cooperative Begins Photography Service

Hal Simpson, president of the Junior College Cooperative Association, this week announced that photography service is now available at the JCCA co-op on Lee and Ocean Avenues.

Prices for the service were quoted as follows: developing and printing of a roll of eight films, No. 616, 120, 620, 116—25 cents; 8x10 enlargements—35 cents; 5x7 enlargement—25 cents.

Simpson this week made a call for volunteer leaders in the co-op association and members for the various committees. "They do not need to be members of the JCCA," he said, "but of course they should be capable and interested in the cooperative movement."

Committees on which places are open are the Management Committee and Education Committee, he indicated.

Washington and Jefferson College, Washington, Pa., has a junior transfer student from the University of Hawaii.

Wedding Cake Brings Queries

"Who's getting married?"

This has been the common question about the college the past few days.

The reason for this sudden query has been the exhibit in the cafeteria foyer of a large and fancy wedding cake. The cake was made by the cake baking and decorating class of the Hotel and Restaurant Management division under the guidance of the nationally know Chef Strandberg of the St. Francis Hotel. It was made just for the practice in the art of cake baking and decorating.

Chef Strandberg has been the cake baking and decorating instructor since the division was first started at the college. He is considered one of the finest pastry chefs in the world, and the division is very proud and fortunate in having his services as an instructor, Hilda Watson, chairman of the division, explained.

This class is just another of the many special courses given by well known hotel men in various classes at the college. It also explains why the division has gained such repute in the hotel field, Mrs. Watson said.

Alpha Gamma Sigma Backs New Scholastic Council

Alpha Gamma Sigma, college honor society, voted unanimously to support the program of the newly formed Scholastic Council, particiularly in regard to supplying coaching aid, at the first meeting of the society this semester, held last Tuesday, Alice Cooper, faculty member, said.

Specific coaching schedules will be announced as soon as final arrangements are made with the Scholastic Council, honor society leaders commented.

Officers for the fall semester were also voted at the meeting. Gordon Petersen was named president; Borrie Hyman, vice-president; Carol Marshall, secretary-treasurer.

Students eligible for the society and not heretofore listed are Carol Marshall, Francis Fabris, Eleanor Anderson, and Katherine Burton.

Art Club Plans Painting Trip To Niles Canyon

Niles Canyon will be the destination of members of the Alpha Delta Epsilon club for art students when they go on their first painting trip of this semester on Sunday, October 27, according to June Hobson, secretary of the group.

"The excursion will be a combination picnic and painting trip," Miss Hobson said.

Tentative plans have also been made for a costume ball to be held later this semester to which the student body will be invited, she announced.

Yearbook

Installment Books Go On Sale Soon; Photographers Desired

Booklets and stamps for purchasing the college yearbook Rampages, will go on sale within the next few weeks, in conjunction with the plan resolved by members of the yearbook staff whereby students may be allowed to buy 25c stamps in weekly installments instead of paying the price of $1.50 all at once, Lillian Hoyle, publicity representative, announced Wednesday.

Student photographers interested in working on the college yearbook, Rampages, should see Dorothy Daft, secretary to Beverly Pasqualetti, any day in Room 155 at 12 o'clock, Lillian Hoyle, publicity representative announced Wednesday.

Action Football Photos Needed

Photographers are needed to get pictures for publication in Rampages, Miss Hoyle said. "There is a need for a great many pictures in any annual college publication and we feel that they can be secured for the college book through the work of students," she added.

Action shots of football games are still being accepted in the photography contest, Miss Hoyle revealed. Rules for the contest are, pictures must be 8 by 10 inches and must be action shots of football games.

Photography adviser to Rampages is Beverly Pasqualetti, faculty member, who will advise the student photographers.

Other Sport Photos Needed

There is also a minor sports contest being conducted to secure pictures of sports other than football for publication in Rampages, Miss Hoyle said. This was announced before, but not enough entries have been received. The rules for this contest are the same as for the football picture contest, except that the pictures may be action shots of any sport except football.

More art students can be used on the staff under the direction of Muriel Grenelle, Miss Hoyle revealed. Although several students have applied for posts as staff artists, there are still several openings for other artists, she said.

Gladys Steele In Folk Song Recital Here Tuesday

A recital of European folk songs will be given in Room 200, at 10 a.m. Tuesday, October 29, for the History of Music Class, Flossita Badger, instructor of music, announced today.

The recital will be sung by Gladys Steele, who will play her own accompaniment, Miss Badger said.

"I feel it is a great privilege to have her with us," Miss Badger remarked, "and I wish that all the students could attend. But due to the shortage of room this will not be possible."

The recital will last about one hour, and American songs will be included in the program, Miss Badger added.

Miss Badger revealed that the student performance of Aida, which was planned for November 1, has been sold out, but that there are still some seats available for the preformance of Carmen, which will be given on October 31. These tickets can be secured from Miss Badger in Room 200. The price of tickets is 75 cents, $1.00, $1.50 and $2.50. Students desiring to exchange tickets may do so by consulting Miss Badger.

Faculty Tours

Girls High Next On List

Girls High School faculty members will be the next guests of the college Faculty Association Monday, October 28, from 3:30 to 5:30 p.m., Lloyd D. Luckmann, president of the association, said.

"The visiting instructors will be conducted through the building and will then be served tea in the cafeteria," commented Luckmann.

Women members of the Girls High School faculty will receive corsages, through the courtesy of Henry Schrumpf of the floriculture department, he added.

Yesterday the members of the Teachers' Association of San Francisco, and their president, George Learned, principal of Roosevelt Junior High School, were received by the Faculty Association.

College instructors comprising the reception committee are Dean Margaret Dougherty, Dean Edwin C. Browne, Walter C. Forbes, Thomas A. Gabbert, Miriam Gatley, Ella Nowell, Helen Reveal, John E. Ross, Edward E. Sandys, Henry D. Soule and Luckmann.

New YMCA Club Plans Meeting Tuesday

Plans for a junior college YMCA are well under way, Claude A. Shull faculty adviser for the organization, announced today.

The preliminary meeting last week resulted in the formation of an organizing committee, which plans another meeting on next Monday, October 28, at 4 p.m. in Room 210, and not on Tuesday, October 29 at originally announced.

All junior college students interested in this group are cordially invited to be present at the next meeting to help lay plans for future gatherings of the group.

Committee members at present include Claude A. Shull, faculty member, R. W. Simcock of Central YMCA, John R. Titsworth of Golden West YMCA, Earl Yusa of San Francisco State Students' Association, and Ted Green, of the junior college.

While Thinking

COLLEGE

AN average day in the life of a college newspaper editor:

9 a.m.—arrives at college, half asleep. Enters the Publications office which is empty of everything save paper strewn about. Mutters to himself "How nice and quiet. Maybe I can catch up on some long lost sleep."

9:03 a.m.—phone rings. Wrong number, but the party on the other end has a pleasant voice and sounds young so 10 minutes are spent explaining why she has the wrong number, and it's too bad anyway.

9:13 a.m.—Editor remembers pile of notes and letters on desk that have to be answered or taken care of. He looks through papers, discovers phone number of the blonde he met last week and part of yesterday's lunch.

9:30 a.m.—Eats remainder of lunch and reads last issue of Guardsman for 25th time.

10 a.m.—"Ye Gods, I've got a column and editorials to write."

10:01 a.m.—Runs frantically up and down hall, hunting for something to write about. Drops into student body office looking for clues but finds nothing except the office secretary. She is cute, so spends 20 minutes talking about the price of eggs in China.

10:22 a.m.—Is back in office again with germ of idea (germ is right).

11 a.m.—Column is written at last. Editor sits back, sighs with relief, then awakes with a start as he remembers that it is now deadline and copy should be coming in.

By this time the office is filled to the brim with reporters, editors and assorted characters.

Some reporters are frantically hammering away on the typewriters, others are waiting for a chance to use them, the editors are editing and reading the copy, and the characters are just characters.

12 M—Lunch time, but no one bothers to eat lunch because it takes time, and who has time to waste?

3 p.m.—(Time passes quickly doesn't it?) Editor realizes editorials are still unwritten, attempts to think of something suitable for an editorial. Can think of nothing worth printing, so says, "Oh well, no one reads editorials anyway."

3:05 p.m.—"Maybe we could put in a big CENSORED line and make the readers think that the editorial was so good, it couldn't be printed. No, on second thought, we'll pass the buck. Where's the managing editor? Hey, Mr. Hyman, write a couple of editorials.

3:10 p.m.—Brief but violent battle of words ensues. After smoke clears away the managing editor agrees to write one editorial. Editor writes the other and all is peaceful again.

4 p.m.—Paper is all ready to be sent to the printers, staff is ready to be sent to the morgue. Editor breathes sigh of relief, then begins to eat lunch.

4:30 p.m.—Editor chokes on last sandwich as he recalls that he forgot to attend any classes. (You know, classes—something every college student is exposed to.) He becomes slightly uneasy when he remembers that a test was scheduled in poly sci that day, and that he also owes the instructor outlines of the first 10 chapters of the text. "Oh well, instructors have a nerve giving exams anyway."

5 p.m.—Editor goes home. Mother asks, "what happened in college today?" He answers, "Nothing, Mom. Everything was quiet and I learned a great deal, especially about political science."

6 p.m.—Hyman phones stating that he has wracked his brains but can't think of an editorial. We decide to write one on the lack of imagination with which the ordinary J.C. Managing Editor is characterized. Started to do so, but found that our own imagination gave out after the first paragraph. Tsk, tsk!

7 p.m.—Still Thinking.

7:12½ p.m.—Decide The Guardsman isn't worth it, and in the second place, decide we should have called our girl friend in the first place.

8 p.m.—Reach our girl friend's house.

10:30 p.m.—Reach home and start to write an editorial, "Why G. F.'s are necessary for an editor."

A FEW men students have been noticed wearing their hats in the cafeteria and the halls.

If there is one thing to be desired it is that the students feel at home while at the college. We want them to make themselves at home here. Of course if they wear their hats in the kitchen and living room at home why perhaps we shouldn't have mentioned the matter.

On the other hand, however, if no one has told them yet, perhaps we should point out that for years it has been a well established custom to refrain from wearing hats in the halls

Administration

Ten Minute Interval Goes Into Effect Soon; Parking On Slope Causes Three-Car Accident, Repeated Warning To Obey Regulations

Class Interval

J. Paul Mohr, Registrar, announced today that plans have been completed for the change in class intervals from five to ten minutes, and said that with the arrival of a workman from the Department of Electricity, clocks in the building will be properly adjusted.

"It was planned," Mohr said, "to have the system now in operation suspended immediately upon the decision of the administration, but delay in response from the City Hall has forced us to postpone this action until someone is sent to rearrange our time schedule.

"To establish a unified system of class intervals it is best that we wait, rather than to try a system which will be more or less inefficient without proper execution," Mohr commented.

"However," Mohr declared, "the five minute interval, it must be realized, was partially successful and it was principally because of the approach of bad weather that we have been forced to make a change."

It has also been announced that the increase in the interval will not result in a subsequent increase of either the college year or of the present semester.

Wheeler, North Added To Scholastic Council

Recently appointed to the scholastic council were Ogden Wheeler, low sophomore vice-president, and Charles North, last semester's Alpha Gamma Sigma president, according to Mary Frances Malone, chairman of the group.

"Both Wheeler and North have expressed an interest in participation in the activities of the council," Miss Malone declared.

Plans for the establishment of a coaching staff to assist students having difficulty with certain subjects are being considered, she said.

"Several of us have had experience in similar coaching staffs for student benefit and so feel that such an undertaking is highly advisable for the college," Miss Malone announced. "The honor society coaching bureau at the University of California will also serve as a model."

Plans which have already been outlined by the council, including a rally featuring a guest speaker and the awarding of a scholarship plaque at each commencement, have met with the whole-hearted approval of the administration, she said.

"Again we urge any students who have constructive ideas to contribute to the council to feel perfectly free to do so," she said.

She added that the committee was at present investigating the prices of plaques.

Circulation Rate Per Day Of Library Books Doubled

There has been a great increase in circulation of both reserved and books not on reserve in the college library, according to Eleanor Blinn, assistant librarian.

At the beginning of this semester the books were circulating at the rate of from 40 to 50 a day and now the circulation has risen to from 102 to 129 books going out every day.

The reserved books were circulating at the rate of from 90 to 100 books every day during the first weeks of the semester and they now go out at the rate of about 260 a day, showing a decided increase.

The new system of taking care of the reserved books has been found very satisfactory, Miss Blinn said. It saves time and instead of the students having to fill out two cards, one to reserve the book and one to take the book out, they need fill out only one card, she added.

National Guard Men Should Report To Mohr

All members of National Guard units who have not as yet been called to active duty, have been requested by Registrar J. Paul Mohr to report to his office immediately.

Explanation of this request, Mohr revealed, lies in the fact that all National Guard units in the city will be called to service on January 6, and the registrar's office desires to help them complete their courses before they are forced to leave college.

Graduates

More Students Added To List

An addition of 17 students has been added to the fall graduate list bringing the total January class up to 118 members, J. Paul Mohr, registrar, announced this week.

"This will be the largest January graduating class in the history of the college," Mohr pointed out.

The supplementary list to the one published in The Guardsman October 22, adds the following graduates:

David N. Arnon, Raeburn John Crowe, Robert W. Dare, Daisy Dong, John Joseph Flynn, Robert J. Furrer, James J. Keys, Ruby Klistoff, Betty Claire Nordhausen, Jack O'Brien, James Paponis, Cedric Pierce, Ernest C. Regalin, Harold Unterberger, Mary Elaine Wilkins, and William Windeler.

Steve Sacco's Band Named To Play For AMS Barn Dance

Steve Sacco and his orchestra has been engaged to play for the Associated Men Students' barn dance, Saturday, November 16, at Alvarado's Barn, Ted Theodus, AMS president, announced this week.

"Sacco is considered to have one of the best bands in San Francisco. He has played at Adams Springs in Lake County for the last four months," he reported.

Sacco's band is composed of 12 members and a woman vocalist, Theodus said. He calls his style "whispering rhythm."

"Dancing will begin at 9 p.m. and end about 12. We think this affair will be the biggest of the year with an expected attendance of about 2500 students," Theodus predicted.

Actual activities for the barn dance will begin about 4:30 p.m. with various athletic events scheduled, he revealed.

"At 5:30 refreshments will be served. We have made plans to serve 1000 students with cider, hot dogs, and buns," Theodus promised.

"Since we are carrying out the theme of a barn dance, we would like to have the students dress very informally — the women in wash dresses, and the men in cowboy attire," Theodus remarked.

Catering Facilities Open To College Organizations

Facilities of the Catering Section of the Hotel and Restaurant Management Division of the college are open to clubs and college organizations for dinners or special occasions, Mrs. Hilda Watson, chairman of the group has announced.

Those students or persons interested have been asked to contact Joe DeRespini in Room 107.

Clubs desiring this service should ask for it sufficiently in advance so that their needs can be handled without too much delay and mix-up, Mrs. Watson said.

Parking

By ignoring repeated warnings against parking on the slopes at the north and south ends of the building, three students were involved in an accident caused by an automobile slipping down the muddy slope and crashing into two other automobiles, Dean Edwin C. Browne announced last week.

The damage amounted to about $30, he said.

"With the approach of rainy weather, it is for the benefit of the students themselves that we have forbidden parking on the slopes," Dean Browne pointed out.

Students who continue to park in these areas will be dealt with by police tickets and serious action, he warned.

"There is sufficient level space in which to park, and it will be better to walk a few more feet and insure the safety of your car than to take chances," Dean Browne said.

Three-Point Rules Listed

Dean Browne outlined three specific rules for parking, effective immediately. They are as follows:

1. There will be no parking allowed at any time on the center driveway in front of the building.

2. There will be no parking allowed on the upper level directly behind the building.

3. There will no parking allowed on the hillsides to the north and south of the building.

Mystery Of Pilot's Ink Explained

By EVE BURKEY

Skywriting would seem to lie far outside the field of a lacquer expert.

Yet, Dr. W. J. Van Sicklen, manager of the American Chemical Works, speaking before Walter D. Forbe's paint technology class last Friday, brought with him a sample of pilot's "ink".

Speaking originally on Titanium and its use in the paint industry, Dr. Van Sicklen produced a vial of Titanium Chloride. When he uncorked it, a white vapor curled from the bottle, leaving a not-particularly pleasant odor behind it.

Mixed with ammonia, he explained, the chloride is expelled from an exhaust pipe of the airplane to form a dense white smoke. When Titanium Chloride decomposes, Dr. Van Sicklen said, it forms Titanium Oxide which is used extensively in paint because of the excellent coverage it affords.

Tracing the history of the metal's discovery, Dr. Van Sicklen showed how it, together with lead, zinc and other compounds are incorporated in the present-day paint industry.

Forbes said several other prominent men in the paint field have previously lectured to the paint course. Today the class will be the guest of W. D. Jones and Dr. O'Leary of the Fuller Paint Company at their South San Francisco plant he said.

Co-Op Sponsors Halloween Dance; Open To College

Sponsored by the Junior College Cooperative Association and open to students of the college, a Hallowe'en party scheduled for this Thursday at 8 p.m. at 1814 Pacific Avenue, Ione Bennett, social chairman for the group, announced this week.

Main feature of the party will be folk dancing, which will be led by Bob Mason, she revealed.

"We would like a great number of students to turn out for this event and get acquainted with each other," she commented.

"Folk dancing was greatly enjoyed at our last party in October, and we have been asked to repeat this type of party."

Transportation

Action Still Hanging Fire; Dean Hopeful

No definite action to extend transportation facilities has been effected as yet, Dean Edwin C. Browne announced Friday.

"When the questionnaire now being computed is finished and sent into the Municipal Railway Company, the matter will be out of the hands of the college. From then on, action will rest with the railway companies," Dean Browne said.

The best possibility, he suggested, was the extension of the "K" street car line for two more blocks along Ocean Avenue. The main difficulty that needs to be overcome is the shortage of equipment, for the morning rush hours take up practically all the equipment on hand.

The street car extension was considered by Dean Browne the most likely, because there are more street cars than buses available. Another reason for this was that the street cars hold more people than the buses.

Agreement is hoped for between the Market Street Railway Company, who have the franchise on the two blocks of street car tracks necessary for the extension of the "K" line.

Dean Browne said that he could give no definite dates for the change if it goes through, but that the questionnaire was being sent into the Municipal Railway Monday or Tuesday.

Yearbook Football Shots May Be Of Any Size Now

Rules for the yearbook's photography contest have been changed, according to Lillian Hoyle, publicity representative. Action shots of the football games need not be 8 by 10 inches, as previously announced, but may be any size as long as the negative is submitted along with the picture, Miss Hoyle said.

Any student who wishes to consult Beverly Pasqualetti, faculty adviser to the photography staff of the yearbook, may make an appointment with Dorothy Daft, his secretary, in Room 155 any day at 12 o'clock. Pasqualetti will advise any student photographer who wishes to submit a picture to the contest and compete for the prize of a complimentary copy of Rampages, Miss Hoyle revealed.

Marian MacKillop and Barbara Brown, art students, will aid in advertising the yearbook by making posters to be displayed in the halls, Hugh Waite, publicity chairman, announced.

These posters will be a part of the campaign to boost sales of Rampages, the price of which has been set at $1.50. More posters will be made to stimulate student interest in the yearbook photography contest, Waite said.

Scrip books will go on sale within the next few weeks, Miss Hoyle indicated. The price of the booklets, which is 25 cents, will be applied on the purchase price of Rampages.

Students interested in doing publicity work for Rampages may see Lillian Hoyle.

Cooperation Planned With 'Humanity Week'

Cooperation of the college in connection with the Salvation Army sponsored Humanity Week, which began yesterday, is assured by the women's organizations of the college, Margaret Dougherty, Dean of Women, announced today.

The San Francisco Public Schools Bulletin printed the following in connection with this drive: "Superintendent Nourse expressed the wish that every San Francisco school should organize to meet this need with contributions of warm, clean clothing."

Clothing should be taken to Room 169 between 9 a.m. and noon on or before Thursday, October 31, Dean Dougherty said.

Faculty advisers in charge are Mary Jane Learnard, Laurine Bergin, Bertha Mae Keller, Eleanor Blinn, Jennet Henderson, and Phoebe Ward, she added.

In addition to these instructors the following women's organizations are participating in this drive:

Alpha Lambda Chi, Alpha Phi Omega, Home Economics Association, Nu Epsilon Sigma, Phi Beta Rho, Physical Education Majors and Women's Service Society.

San Mateo Rally

Popular Imitator Starred With Eisan, Football Men

Feature of the joint rally with San Mateo Junior College next Thursday, October 31, in the center quad, will be Bob Wells, ex-president of the Mission High School student body, who is considered a top-flight imitator, according to Pete Aydelotte, rally committee chairman.

Wells has performed at several college rallies and functions in the past and has always met with much favor by the college members, Aydelotte said. In fact it was at one of the college programs in which Bob was performing that a talent scout saw his act and offered him a contract. It was at this time that Wells decided entertainment was to be his life work, Aydelotte said.

Taylor, Hagen Introduced

Herb Taylor and Ken Hagen, right and left ends respectively of the Ram varsity will be introduced to the Associated Students and they will be requested to say a few words to the students.

Head Coach Lee Eisan is also scheduled to give his views on the game with the peninsula college, Aydelotte mentioned.

The San Mateo portion of the program will include a short skit and several vocalists as well as introduction of the San Mateo student president and several members of the Bulldog varsity. The skit was written and will be enacted by several members of the Matean's rally committee, according to Waldo Hunt, assembly chairman of San Mateo.

12 o'Clock Classes Excused

All 12 o'clock classes will be excused on Thursday to permit students and faculty to witness the dual rally.

Aydelotte and his assistants will travel to San Mateo on Friday to present the same program to the San Mateo students. Don White, Jean Glidden, Wells, and Lyle Shultz, Associated Students' president, will also make the trip down the peninsula to take part in the program.

Since the first dual rally with San Mateo the event has become an annual activity.

"Previous joint rallies have met with great success and my assistants and myself are very optimistic about Thursday's rally," Aydelotte said.

Men Between 18 And 25 Wanted For Defense Work

Young men between the ages of 18 and 25 who desire training in trades pertinent to national defense have been requested to report to either the NYA offices at 1182 Market Street or to Edward H. Redford, college NYA director.

Redford announced that between 25 and 30 men have contacted him in Room 148, but that there is room on the training program for many more.

"There are also several opportunities for women to be trained in various lines," Redford said.

Students desiring to receive this instruction cannot be taking more than 12 units of college work and must be citizens of the United States.

Directory

Of Students Considered

Tentative plans for a student directory are being discussed by students officers this week, official sources announced today.

The directory would consist of the names, addresses and telephone number of every registered student and faculty member. The idea has been tried successfully in many other colleges and universities. It is planned to print 2000 copies, wallet size and sell them for 10 or 15 cents each.

"It is felt that a directory would promote general friendship among the students and would also tend to unify the student body. If a student wanted to check his homework assignment or something like that, he would only have to look up some member of his class and phone him for the work. Then too, we feel that there are a great many students who do not know the names of some of the students in their classes but would like to," Lyle Shultz, Associated Student president commented.

"Before anything definite is done on the subject we would like the opinions of the general student body. If you think the idea is a good one please let us know," Shultz said.

The student body office is located in Room 155.

If the directory meets with student approval it would be ready for sale by the end of the first month of next semester.

Pictures May Be Placed On Next Student Cards

In all probability, there will be pictures for identification purposes on the student body cards for the spring semester, Ed Hardies, judicial committee chairman, announced this week.

"We are working out plans now and feel we have the solution to the problem of student body card lending," he said.

"We are discussing plans for which we can have these pictures put on the cards for the cost of about five cents," he added.

There has been a great deal of talk about such a plan, Hardies reminded, but no definite action has been shown.

"It is almost positive that we will work out a plan so that identification pictures will be on the next student body cards," he revealed.

Lending of student cards is apparently on the wane, Hardies commented, as no illegal holders of cards were detected at the last Associated Student dance. "We hope the record will be kept clean," he said.

New Propaganda Survey Reveals Appeal Points

UPON reviewing the victories of Nazi Germany in Spain, Czecho-solvakia, Poland, Denmark, Norway, Holland and France one fact becomes clearly apparent.

The German victories would not have been possible without the aid of the propaganda machine of the Nazi nation.

Contrary to popular belief, Nazi propaganda methods are nothing new, and do not include any secret devices or newly discovered psychological methods. They are, however, new in the sense that the Nazi method has utilized the coordination of old propaganda devices and psychological processes well known to scholars and specialists, and has geared these to the political and military aims and acts of the totalitarian state.

Failure of Hitler's enemies to understand his methods have made Nazi successes all the easier. This of course, is only natural for a knowledge of why the German propaganda works is necessary to those who would successfully combat him.

The Institute for Propaganda Analysis has recently released the 11 common mental processes to which Hitler has appealed. They are Custom, Simplification, Frustration, Displacement, Anxiety, Reinforcement, Association, Universals, Projection, Identification, and Rationalization.

Let us examine more closely the report on each of these mental processes, as set down by the Institute.

Custom—Most of us tend to feel, believe, and act in traditional patterns. What we perceive is to a large extent dependent upon our previous ideas, convictions and ideals. Hitler as the most successful propagandist in modern history came to power in Germany because: (1) his propaganda was in terms of traditional German patriotism; (2) he didn't preach world revolution at first, he merely wanted to restore the German state to its former glory; (3) a nominal Christian and Roman Catholic, he did not preach atheism but on the contrary associated himself and his program with God; (4) although he condemned big business and international banking publicly; he did not condemn them privately, but told the industrialists that such rabble rousing was necessary to gain the support of the masses but really did not mean anything; (5) he extolled small business destroying communism. Thus Hitler won the support of every large group, for he talked everyone's language, professed to believe what they believed, and hate what they hated.

Simplification—Most of us try to make the world intelligible to ourselves by eliminating details which do not fit into the picture we find easiest to comprehend. We develop simple formulas to explain what has happened, what is happening. We ignore facts not in accord with the formulas.

The successful propagandist keys his propaganda to this psychological process of simplification. He eliminates if's, but's, and's. Hitler is a master at this technique. He claimed Germany lost the World War because she was stabbed in the back by Jewish Bankers and by Communists. Actually Jews did their full share to try to bring victory to the Kaiser's army. In 1917 the Kaiser helped the Communist leader Lenin, enter Russia to make a revolution and then to make a peace that would give the Kaiser a better chance of victory on the Western Front.

It is impossible fully to discuss in this issue, the entire 11 mental processes used by the propagandists because of lack of space. The topic of propaganda is, however, an important one that should be fully discussed. The remaining points listed by the Institute For Propaganda Analysis will be presented in this column on Friday.

Impersonally Speaking

IF this news ever gets around, we are certain to be expelled from the Amalgamated Progressives, Modernists, Anti-reactionaries, and Red-Hots of California—BUT . . . we are definitely against modern transportation.

The other day, having failed rather spectacularly in our efforts to bum a ride from passing motorists, we decided to ride on a Market Street Railway bus to get to work.

After paying our fare, we got a transfer and started toward the back of the bus to sit down.

Being of the lazy sort, we are not advocates of speed on a public conveyance. We found, to our chagrin, that even scruples having no effect on the laws of inertia, we were propelled swiftly to the seat.

After considerable loss of energy, time, dignity, prestige, and humor, we succeeded in sitting in a more civilized fashion. This feat was equal to at least 13 of Hercules' 12 labors.

Our next move into the hands of a malignant fate was to attempt to read. First we decided to read some Spanish. The small book and the bumps and lurches of the mechanical monster formed a poor combination.

We picked up the book and showed our versatility by dusting off the book and cursing the bus, fate, and San Jose Avenue at the same time.

However, we are nothing if not persistent, so we decided to try to read The Guardsman. Another foolish move.

With the coach in motion, it was a case of hide and seek. When our head was up, the paper was down, and vice versa. We made the momentous discovery that we cannot read three stories, choosing random sentences, simultaneously, and then correlate them.

The next step in our downward path was the arrival of some passenger who was stoking an incinerator.

This individual, who was undoubtedy saving garbage collection fees, had the ugliest smelling pipe that had ever been created. It even made our favorite smell like a celestial perfume.

We finally arrived at our destination with our head bloody but unbowed.

Fate decided at this juncture to pour salt into our gaping wounds. As we edged through the throng to get off the vehicle, the driver attempted a dirt-track turn, double loop, end over end spin, and other fancy maneuvers.

Picking ourselves up amidst the smirks of the vulgar, we gave profuse apologies to three elderly women and one octogenarian, and beat a hasty retreat, a crushed and broken spirit.

Upon our departure, this Satanical contraption renewed its nefarious journey. As it started up, the exhaust made a noise that sounded too much like the well-known bronx cheer to be either funny or comfortable.

That is why now, when someone mentions buses as the modern form of transportation, we fall to the ground, tear our hair, beat the earth with clenched fists, and scream.

Usually, a friend explains, "He just prefers the old-fashioned street cars, Harry."

One might even say horse cars.

The Spectator

WESTERNS, or as they are more popularly termed, "hoss-opreys," are a Hollywood tradition. One can feel reasonably safe in predicting that this perennial favorite of film fans will exist as long as motion pictures themselves. Unfortunately, the larger portion of these "cow-boy" dramas wallow in the depths of mediocrity. Occasionally, a film like Stagecoach emerges from the film factories to rise head and shoulders above the rest. Now, Samuel Goldwyn, a wise show-man if there ever was one, has brought to town his contribution to the "hoss-oprey" field, The Westerner, which like Stagecoach, is undeniably superior to other six-gun opuses.

This superiority can be directly attributed to a number of things. First, the story. Here is no stereotype of bar-room brawls, gun battles, thundering hoofs over the prairies, etc., (the usual prerequisites for a western). On the contrary, the film gains a tremendous power, not through plot, but by focusing attention on the characters of Judge Roy Bean (Walter Brennan and Cole Harden (Gary Cooper). The conflict between these two men forms the vivid hub for an excellent script by Jo Swerling and Niven Busch that combines true historical data with dramatic fictional elements.

"Judge" Roy Bean, the Law West of the Pecos, was a true personage in the tumultous days of 1880 in Texas. His combination bar-room-saloon was a familar land-mark throughout the West. He dispensed "justice" according to his own standards which were pure mockeries of the law. Legend claimed Bean had an admiration for Lily Langtry, the Jersey Lily, that almost amounted to wroship.

The fictional character of Cole Harden is accused of horse-stealing, is tried before Bean's "court," but escapes punishment by claiming friendship with Langtry. Texas, at this time, was a bloody battleground between the cattlemen and the homesteaders. Harden joins up with the homesteaders and thus conflicts with the Judge, one of the leaders of the cattle punchers. When the Jersey Lily comes to town, Bean purchases an entire house. At the same time, Harden sets out after the Judge. From this point the film rolls to a really dramatic climax to which we could not do justice in describing.

The entire film exhibits the expert handling of Director William Wyler. Sparcity of dialogue heightens the feeling of tension that runs through the picture. Other scenes are deliberately permitted to run slowly to achieve calculated effects. In fact, this slow, deliberate presentation, unfortunately, gets the story off to a laborious start. But once the atmosphere and characters have been created, the mood of the picture becomes extremely effective.

We have yet to see Gary Cooper give a bad performance. Here, he excels with his portrayal of the quiet, hard-lipped cowboy. Real honors, however, go to that marvelous actor, Walter Brennan, who as the hard, cruel—yet likable Judge Bean, deserves our nomination for the Academy Award. To create a character that has ruthlessness and treachery is a job in itself. But Brennan has the power to project wisps of sympathy and kindliness into his performance that makes the Bean character a most memorable one.

Doris Davenport, a newcomer, is impressive in the feminine lead.

The remainder of the cast play small but good roles. Photography is beautiful as usual in Goldwyn productions, but credit the excellence of The Westerner to Director Wyler and actor Brennan. They both sparkle.

On The Feminine Side

THE other day we were sitting in the cafeteria idly talking with a group of women students about topics that are often under discussion when women gather to sip a coke and take time out from their usual routine—all weighty subjects such as men, the draft, and clothes.

Then the question of a gossip column for The Guardsman drifted into the conversation, as it usually does. Hot arguments pro and con flew back and forth across the table, but when the sound of the firing finally died away and when the wounded were carried away, the score was about three to two—favoring the column. Hence, with a smug tongue poked into our equally smug cheek, we present a rather biased example of what a gossip column might be at this college.

First in this very mythical and highly improbable column there would have to be the typical item which is understood by at least six students at the college and rarely any more. Here it could read something to the following like this:

"We have it on good authority that pretty Jean Steward looks oh-so-charming in white. At least that certain Beta Phi Beta, D. C. by initial claims so." Unquote.

Granted that the above paragraph might possibly delight six or seven students and cause them no end of hilarity, approximately two thousand nine hundred others at the college would only be mystified by its coyness. And no doubt bored.

More Of The Same

We can carry on quite a bit further with this hypothetical column in the usual line of would-be Winchells, whether their paper be the Central High Crier or a metropolitan tabloid. Shall we? All right.

"What popular woman is giving what very prominent sophomore ye olde run-arounde in a nasty, nasty manner? And how is she going to be surprised one of these days?"

This beloved favorite of all who zoom around sticking their noses into other people's business is potential dynamite — on second thought, maybe we'd better make it DYNAMITE. Although in this case it may not have any reference to real persons, it is capable of causing suspicion and trouble in more than one case that we can think of off-hand. Why? Since all sophomore men fancy themselves as prominent and all women aspire to the adjective "popular," it's fairly easy to see the variety of interpretations which could be cast upon the above item. And if by some chance the shot hit home, the columnist who dug up the whole unpleasant business is usually drawn into the mess. Perhaps rightly so.

Of course, there is the too hardy perennial which absolutely slays the writer and the person concerned. You're all familar with it in one form or another. It reads:

"Joe Blow has been pestering us for weeks to get his name in this column. Well-ho, ho-here it is, Joe. Joe Blow, Joe Blow, Joe Blow, Joe Blow, etc."

Possibly we lack the great American sense of humor, but somehow the humor of this little gem completely excapes us.

And Still More Of The Same

The gossip column affords its writer an ideal medium for airing personal peeves, especially when it is unsigned. For example, we could dash off a bit that appears periodically in practically every column of that sort.

"What would be glamor gal, with initials Z. Z., would be terribly put-out to know that the reason those men were staring at her the other day was not her fascinating appearance but the fact that her slip was trailing at least three inches below her dress. Too bad, Z. Z.!"

Of course we don't know anyone with those obviously silly initials but you can see what absolute mayhem a gossip writer can get away with.

Last, and by all means least, we include the piece de resistance of all clever gossip writers.

"What woman was seen with what dark man belonging to which prominent other woman at whose party on what night? And why is what other man slightly miffed about the whole thing? And who cares, anyway?"

Well, do you still want a gossip column?

Shots At RAMdom . . .

This column was written for this issue by Theodora Wong.

THESE Are Gloomy Times. Everyone says so. Hitler, Willkie, and even our final authority, The Spectator. (English majors who object to simple sentences can skip this column.)

Well, we aren't trying to be the radical individualist again, but we personally don't think so, when we think.

However, in keeping with our previously stated policy, i.e., to report on the latest momentous events at the latest possible moment, we herewith take kerchief in hand (Golden Gate International Exposition 1939) and prepare to weep in tune with the times.

(Any similarity to puns living or dead is pure delirium.):

1. The Case Of The Multiple Motives.

Last week, after staggering up the path leading from the gym, we tottered into the main building looking for a drink (of water), and discovered at the nearest fountain the remains of some student's lunch expertly strewn about. We didn't have any.

But we now protest.

The law of the land entitles man to his life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness, but there is a limit to everything, philosophers and reducing ads agree on that, do they not? And it certainly will not endanger the fountains of democracy to insist that people park their chewing gum, paper bags, and apples in the right places, will it?

. . . After reading I Knew 3000 Lunatics (which by the way, is in the college library, and which we recommend), we decided to analyze, as far as our mental condition permits, the reasons for someone to thus supplement the work of Mr. Luckmann's Committee For Beautifying The Campus For Visitors' Eyes For, etc.

(1) There may be some fanatic bent on saving the city taxpayers' money by driving people from the drinking fountains.

(2) The student vanished while eating lunch, but the lunch remained.

(3) The lunch overcame the student, and he was carried away, but the lunch remained (or is that the same as above).

2. The Case Of The Missing War Relief.

This column is not in a category between fourth and sixth, of course not, but there is that vivacious question that must be brought before the public some time: WHY IS THERE NOT A GERMAN WAR RELIEF IN AMERICA?

• Columnist Defended

Editor, The Guardsman:

It makes my blood boil to see these intellectual pigmies write these scathing epistles that infer that the Spectator column is in the pay of the movie moguls.

Certainly George Cowie likes most of the pictures he sees, but maybe he takes some queen to the show with him. Probably he left her home when he saw Down Argentine Way (I took one with me and liked the picture).

He has, at least, none of the pipe dreams that Borrie Hyman comes out with. Having no girl (I'm a monster, a social miscarriage) I can't see that column by that Malone female for sour apples.

Anyhow, I think that Cowie knows what a good picture is when he sees one. I even spent my month's wages and saw Knute Rockne. It was a plenty good show. Three cheers for Cowie.

My suggestion for improving the second page of the paper would be to have a masculine column on the page, and funnier stuff. Also it would be plenty good if the Meet The Students Interviewer interviewed me. I'm always available.

• Sir Galahads Missing

Editor, The Guardsman:

As a member of the weaker sex, I should like to protest against the appalling lack of manners exhibited by the male students of the college.

Certainly I don't expect to find Sir Galahad walking out of a chem. lab or to meet Beau Brummel strolling through the gyms, but then, after all, it's definitely disconcerting to drag yourself home after a hectic day of being jostled about the campus.

I get to school early in the morning, get shoved about in a vain effort to check my coat. Ah, optimism. Then I'm rushed up the stairs usually to the third although my class is on the second, but who am I to question the burly brute who is pushing me for all he's worth.

By noon I drag my weary bones down to the cafeteria in a naive attempt to get served. I am served, yes, but only after the brawny males who frequent the place have taken care of their inner man. After having the twin brothers of the men who shove me around most of the day slam the swinging doors shut in my face, I finally manage to get out of the cafeteria. Up the steps I go in comparative peace. At least no one knocks me to one side more than once or twice.

At three or four in the afternoon my day is done, and so am I. By then my adrenalin is flowing like mad, and I fight my way onto the street car along with half of the junior college. Homeward I go, calm and relaxed, if utter exhaustion can be termed relaxation.

Why can't something be done to make the men at the college aware of the existence of Emily Post?

A Turkey To The Swift, Not Bad Plus The Medal!

FROM Captain Fred C. McFarland comes news that in the cross country race, the first man to come in representing the rifle team will find a turkey waiting for him as he crosses the finish line. This means that if the winner of first place is a rifleer, he gets the gold medal as well as the turkey, and also, even if he doesn't come in first, if he is the first man from the rifle squad to finish, he gets it anyhow. So, the rifleers will be well represented. Not a bad idea. At least it's something to run for. Sometimes we think 'tis better than the medal, which will go to the girl friend anyway.

John "J. Sullivan" Gaddy Downs An All-American

Looking back during our youth (?) to the East-West game at Kezar in 1933, a little incident popped up and we thought you'd like to read about it.

At right end for the West was one Jack Gaddy, formerly of USF and then representing the Olympic Club. Left tackle for the East was Joe Kurth, Notre Dame's All American. For four quarters Gaddy had been riding the All American, until finally, Kurth blew up and planted a boomer that knocked Gaddy flat on his back.

Well, sor, here was Gaddy, down and out, and everybody else up. All right! All of a sudden, up shoots Gaddy, and with a real barroom haymaker, konks the All American Kurth for a half gaynor.

Both players were suspended, but Kurth got the boos while Gaddy walks off with the cheers from the crowd. Don't you believe us? Ask Lou Goldstone—or even Jack Gaddy.

Splash A Big Splash

Highlighting the splash party was Helen Crlenkovich, our National Indoor Platform Champion. They say 'twas rilly an impressive sight. The flawless Helen dived some of the dives that won her the title, and really made the party one of the better WAA activities. Hear tell 'twas a real splash, despite the rain.

Musings Without Music

Rambling in thought, musing, etc. a thought came to us. (Imagine the Sports Ed with a thought—EDITOR). We wonder if this John Moisan of the University of Washington is the same guy that played for us last year. We know for positive that Johnny Gray's at Cal, and End Jim Molich is at Fresno State. Would someone please come in 134 and let us know for sure the above statement.

Chickens Counted Before Eggs Laid!

A forgone conclusion, says the faculty team, is the fact that it will win the WAA medley relay. Predictions like that shouldn't be made, because Jeanne Arnold of the Physical Ed club, and Claire Rowe of her club, have told us the same thing. And the outcome? So you're wondering too?

Blocks For Stitches?

Will Lee Eisan give out blocks according to the amount of stitches each member of the team gets? Jim Honnert carried some on his hands and leg, Clark Johnson holds a few over his eye, and Bill Brown has a beauty of a shanty over his right eye. Ruby Klistoff should have a 10 inch block for the blow she got in hockey. Dot Libby should get one too, for giving it to her. Or should she?

Representatives Will Compete At Hockey And Tennis Playdays

By Nora Baker

Practice by members of the Women's Athletic Association hockey club members has begun, in preparation for the playday to be held by the Northern California Hockey Association at Mills College on November 2, Jane Visalli, club manager announced recently.

"Mondays' Wednesdays' and Fridays at 11 a.m., is the time set aside for hockey practice and we urge all members of the hockey club as well as any other women of the college who are interested, to come out and participate," Miss Visalli said.

This semester she explained, has seen a larger turnout of hockey players for the WAA club, than in any previous semester of the college.

"The Northern California Hockey Association, of which this college is a member, boasts membership not only from other colleges and junior colleges, but also among the alumni of various colleges and junior colleges. Such teams as the Foxes, Irish, Greys, Turqs, and Browns are all comprised of graduates from such institutions as the University of California, and Stanford. Some of the team members are instructors or housewives, but they still continue to play hockey in their after-college life," Bertha Mae Keller, physical education instructor, said.

Netsters Will Join San Mateo Meet This Saturday

Scheduled for November 2 at San Mateo Junior College, is the tennis playday of the northern section of the Women's Athletic Association, to which this college will send representatives, Barbara Smith, organization president announced this week.

First playday held this semester was that of the badminton playday last Saturday at Marin Junior College, Miss Smith said. The tennis playday will be the second one of the semester, and the same colleges which participated in Saturday's badminton playday are scheduled to participate in this one. They are, San Francisco and San Jose State Colleges, Marin, Salinas, San Mateo and Santa Rosa Junior Colleges.

"We expect to be able to send some rather good players to the meet this semester," Marie Richardson, tennis club manager, commented.

Kiddy Party Rescheduled Nov. 19 To Avoid Midterms

Rescheduled for November 19, because the former date, November 5, interfered with mid-term examinations, is the Women's Athletic Association Kiddy Party, commemorating the sixth-year anniversary of the WAA in this college, according to Bertha Mae Keller, faculty adviser to the association.

All women of the college are invited to attend the affair, to which there is no admission charge. They are required to wear clothing suitable for a six-year old boy or girl, Barbara Smith, WAA president said.

Especially invited are the women faculty members of the college, Miss Keller said. If they find it inconvenient to dress in "kiddy garb," they will be just as welcome. "However, for those faculty members who wish to change into costume, we have set aside a special dressing room for their use," she commented.

Recent S.O.S. sent out by the WAA for a faculty skit writer to work out the theme, "School Daze of the Faculty," has been answered, according to Miss Keller. Volunteer writer is Dr. Andrewa Noble, a member of the college faculty.

Following the playing of such childhood games as jacks, hoop-rolling and rope jumping, those present will adjourn to the college cafeteria where the original skit will be presented.

Principal players so far in the skit, will include, Plossita Badger, Mary Jane Learnard, Helen Kelly, and Aileen Kinkel, faculty members. Volunteer actors for other parts are requested to see Miss Keller.

After the skit has been presented, guests will be served refreshments, of the type popular with six-year olds.

Intramural

Horseshoes, Cross Country Will Be November Feature

Spotlighted in the November intramurals will be horseshoes, cross-country, and other fall sports, Paul Postler, assistant intramural manager, announced this week. Softball, golf, basketball, and tennis tourneys will end with October.

The third round of the tennis tourney must be played off by tomorrow, October 30, otherwise both contestants will be automatically disqualified, he said.

Semi-finals are coming up shortly and any contestant who is not sure of his status, or who desires further information, is asked to telephone Evard Ellison, tennis manager, at Seabright 2269, or Postler at Delaware 1878, between 5 and 7 o'clock, in the evening.

Postler was pleased at the golf turnout and had to close the entries after three days, because of the large turnout. The winners of the tournament, which was played last Saturday, will have their names published as soon as they are made available.

Iron Slippers' Contest

The horseshoe play is also slated to be run off early in November, the manager said. A chart will be posted on the intramural bulletin board that will contain the name and telephone number of every player. Each person is expected to telephone his opponent and come to an agreement as to where and when the match is to be played. Postler said that any court may be used. He suggested two, 29th and Mission and the one in Golden Gate Park. Any sport store in the city will be glad to give a more complete list of the various courts in the city, he added.

A date will be set later which will be deadline for all horseshoe games to be ended. Contestants who have failed to play a scheduled match will be eliminated.

All players should hand in the results of their games to Captain Fred McFarland in Room 38. The standing will be posted on the intramural bulletin board, William Bauer, horseshoe manager, said. The names and standings will also be published in The Guardsman.

Distance Runners Train

The cross country run is also slated to be run on November 8, Edward Reid, cross-country manager, announced that a sign-up slip has been placed on the flag-pole in the rear of the Science Building.

Russ Sweet, college track coach, has been helping with the affair and has requested all students who wish to run to see him. He has said that he wants no untrained runners to enter.

The softball tournament is coming up to the wire in a bunch, Postler said. He does not expect to know the winners until the last game has been played. At the present time, Postler said that the Police Training and the Beta Phi Beta teams were tied for first place. Following these two are The Eds, Pi Mu Gamma, Japanese Students, Tri-Epsilon, The Lurgies, and Beta Tau, in that order.

At the beginning of the schedule, 13 teams were entered and the above are the teams that had better than a .500 average, Postler noted.

Hoopsters Near Completion

The basketball play is also next to completed, he said. Fighting for the championship are four teams, the Goats, the U.S. All-Americans, the Chinese Students, and the Hotel Division. The finals will be played in the men's gym this afternoon, Postler revealed.

Postler announced that there would be a free-throw tourney either this afternoon or Friday afternoon, the date to be announced on the bulletin board in the hall across from Room 187.

As the rules now stand, each player will be allowed 20 shots from five positions, Postler said. Further details will also appear on the intramural bulletin board, he declared.

Swimming, boxing and volleyball are supposed to start in a short time, he added. As yet he is not decided as to where and when they will be held.

Ultimatum

Boxers Must Sign Up By Tomorrow

Last day that boxing signups will be accepted is tomorrow, at the men's gym, between 2 and 3:15 o'clock, according to Joe Lantagne, boxing coach.

Lantagne announced that anyone interested in the AMS fights, to be held soon, must sign up for the intramural program and take part in the designated practice sessions. No one will be allowed to fight unless he is in condition. Lantagne pointed out that participation in the intramural program will assure him that the boys are in condition.

If the afternoon practice sessions which were announced last week are not satisfactory Lantagne says that adjustments will be made to accommodate those entering whenever possible.

Lantagne emphatically stated that participants in either the intramural tournament or the AMS fights must satisfy him as to their physical condition and that this can only be done by taking part in the training periods.

Gym Credit Will Be Given For Skating Next Semester

Co-educational ice skating will definitely be accepted for gym credit next semester, according to officials of the physical education department, Joseph Williams, faculty adviser of the Ice Skate Club, announced this week.

Action on making skating acceptable for gym credit this semester is still pending, Williams said, but the skaters have received definite word that gym credit will be given next semester to both men and women.

At the present time members of the Ice Skating Club are learning how to waltz on the ice, Williams disclosed. Another new development is that club members may now rent skates with a 20 to 25 per cent reduction in price, Williams revealed. An arrangement has been made, whereby club members only, may rent skates outside of the rink with the price reduction.

Members who have joined the club recently, and who want either blocks or pins, may buy them either from Williams or club officers.

Club meetings are held every Friday afternoon at Winterland Ice Rink, Post and Steiner Streets. Aside from business meetings, the members are learning fancy skating in preparation for the ice carnival which will be held some time next January, Williams said.

Ohio State Meshmen Gulp Salt For Energy; No Steak

COLUMBUS, OHIO—(ACP)—For some people it's carrots, for Popeye it's spinach, but for the Ohio State University's basketball team the secret of strength and success is just plain celery.

A few hours before a recent game, the supermen of the hardwood sat down to a light dinner. Big Bill Sattler was the first man to reach for his knife and fork. He found the knife but the fork had gone with the wind. All other players likewise experienced the same phenomena. All the meshmen roared as one, "How can we eat steak without a fork?"

"You're not eating steak tonight, boys," beamed Coach Olsen, "steak is a thing of the past. Tonight you're having toast, honey, tea and celery. Celery with lots of salt."

Now a basketball player never argues with the coach if he wants to keep on being a basketball player. So the boys ate celery with lots of salt.

Rifle Classes To Enter Postal Telegraph Matches

Postal telegraph competition with various other colleges in the United States will be engaged in by members of the Women's Athletic Association Rifle Club, the rifle classes of the college, this semester, Aileen Kinkel, adviser to the group, said this week.

Conducting of the postal telegraph rivalry is facilitated by the sending through the mail of the five highest scores shot at the college in practice meets.

"The advanced women of the college who are back with us in rifle are good shots, as well as some of the freshman students who are beginning to shoot. There have been three meetings wherein shooting was actually done this semester," she said.

Rams Deadlock Favored Hilltopper Frosh 6-6; Taylor New Backfield Sensation; Bulldogs Next In Second Conference Game

At Seals

Meeting a strong San Mateo Bulldog for the second conference game of the season, the college Rams lunge with renewed vigor after their encounter with the University of San Francisco Frosh last Friday night.

From the opening kickoff at 8 p.m. under the reflected lights of Seals Stadium, Lee Eisan's renovated team will put into effect a new offensive system created by the mentor.

Up to the present time, power plays through guard and tackle and through the middle have predominated the Ram attack. Future games, it was unofficially announced, will see the Rams off tackle and around the flanks.

Because of the uncertainty of "Navy Al" Nauman, star quarterback now in the United States Naval Reserves, being in the line-up, and of Herb Taylor, formerly at end now playing in the backfield, this new attack has been formulated.

New Ram Squad

The Ram squad, somewhat rejuvenated after the midterm examinations, face one of the heaviest Bulldog lines created by Head Keeper Murius McFadden. Both tackles and their adjacent guards weigh well over 200 pounds, while the backfield, averaging 5 ft. 11 ins. in height, are considered heavy in comparison to their altitude.

According to past games, the Bulldogs use a balanced line with no shift, and play mostly to the offensive left, with the guard pulling out to lead interference. Most of the yardage gained during their former games have been passes to the halfbacks Juny Head or Lyle Taggert.

Bulldogs Float Line

Defensively using a 6-2-2-1, the Bulldogs, it was claimed by unofficial and unconfirmable reports, have floating ends and tackles. Bud Weeks and George Robothone, both returning veterans at the flank positions are considered defensively dynamite, while center Howard Adler and fullback Clay Benham have been kinetic stone walls on defense.

This game will be the Bulldogs' first conference game, and have but one win to their credit. Losing to the Stanford Frosh and the Santa Ana Dons by lopsided scores, the Bulldogs last week traveled to Pasadena and upset the strong Pasadena Bulldogs by a touchdown.

The Rams, however have lost their first conference game to Sacramento by a disheartening 6 to 0, also losing the opener of the season by a touchdown, but managed wins over Los Angeles City College and San Francisco State, not counting the game last Friday with the Dons.

Both Teams Suffer Losses

Losses of men on both teams have been great, with transfers, grade deficiences, injuries and economic difficulties having equal effect. A slight edge in returning veterans goes to the Bulldogs, and with their heavier roster, the game statistically is Bulldog. However, an edge also hangs over the Rams side in the amount of experience in games played this season.

Odds, therefore, are even. This game will depend on the spirit of the rooters during the game, managers of the team have said. Coach Lee Eisan declined to comment when he said that the turnout of the Sacramento game made future predictions impossible.

Soccer

Menlo Defeated 4-0; State Next

Getting off to a fast start by scoring three goals in the first quarter, Coach Joseph Lantagne's Ram soccer team defeated Menlo 4 to 0 last Saturday morning on the Crocker-Amazon field.

The Rams looked much improved over their previous starts, and kept the ball in Menlo territory throughout the game.

The first local score was made early in the first quarter when John Lazar, diminutive center forward, booted the ball through the goal posts. The next two goals were made in rapid succession by Dan McHugh and Micky Duzdevich respectively.

Rams Dominate Game

The second period was dominated by the Rams, though no goals were scored. The two men who played goalie for the Rams, Francis Schneider and Duzdevich, handled the ball only four times during the entire contest. Nearly all of the play took place near the Menlo goal. The score at half time remained 3 to 0 in favor of the local shin-kickers.

Early in the third quarter the Rams worked the ball into scoring territory, and Duzdevich took a pass directly in front of the goal to make the fourth and final score.

Teamwork Outstanding

One of the marked improvements of the locals was the fine teamwork shown by the boys. Time and again the boys outwitted the peninsular aggregation to bring the ball into scoring territory. Bert Korn, Clarance Waddington, Lazar, and Duzdevich continually passed the ball back and forth to penetrate the Menlo defense.

A few laughs were afforded the spectators in the fourth quarter, when Lantagne decided to make a few changes in the lineup. One of the Rams was given instructions to enter the game and make the necessary changes. The players became all mixed up, and at one time only ten of the necessary eleven men were on the field.

The game was a clean one, and neither side had any objections to the referee, which is unusual for a league tilt. Menlo has played five league games to date, and has failed to win one. Soccer is a new sport at Menlo, and it seems that there never is a very large turnout for any sport there.

Lantagne Pleased With Rams

Lantagne was pleased with the showing of the Rams. This is the second time that the locals have come out on top. He was pleased to see the improvement in teamwork, and was proud of the work of Korn, Duzdevich, Lazar, and Bill Fairfield, left fullback.

Next week the Rams meet their city rival, San Francisco State, in what promises to be a nip and tuck battle. Though State was slow starting the Gators have shown marked improvement in their last few contests.

The State game will be held on the Crocker-Amazon field, Lantagne said, and the odds are even. Both State and the Rams have fast teams.

Last Friday

Led by Captain Kenny Hagen and a new sensation in the backfield, Herb Taylor, the college Rams plundered through a heavier U.S.F. Frosh opponent only to miss breaking a 6 to 6 deadlock by mere inches, last Friday.

In a game that can justly be called spectacular, the Rams again stepped into form and routed the favored Muchachos. Two exchanges after the Muchachos scored their touchdown, the Rams commenced a drive that showed that the Rams may yet cop the crown.

Neil Sheridan booted away to Dave Cunningham after three unsuccessful attempts at the line, Cunningham returning the ball from the 8 to the 25. Jim Honnert made 3, then faded back and passed to Jack Medrano to the Don 40 in a 36 yard pass.

Honnert To Bernstein Scores

Pat Castellano dived for a yard, and Honnert was called on again. This time he faded far to his right, spun and threw the pellet to the speeding Elwood Bernstein who caught it on the fly on about the 10. Shaking off two tacklers, and aided by Captain Hagen, Bernstein wormed his way over the goal to score.

Honnert's kick was rushed and the ball went inches too far to the right, keeping the game a deadlock.

Muchachos Score First

The Don score also came in the first quarter, it too the result of beautiful blocking and playing. After an interception by Honnert on his own 47, and drives netting but 4 yards, Honnert, on third down passed but was intercepted by Martin, who ran 10 yards down to the sidelines. There, momentarily stopped by the Ram line, he lateraled to Sheridan, who bolted down the sidelines to score. The conversion was far and wide.

Power of the Rams was illustrated once in the last few minutes of play in the second quarter. A drive by the Dons from the Ram 14 because of a fumble was stopped on the 10, and on the first Ram play, Al Nauman, out of training for a week, danced along the sidelines and broke away to a touchdown. The play was called back, however, and the ball put on the 36, where officials said he had run out of bounds.

Rams Still Rough Edged

Offside penalties harrassed the Rams as well as fumbles that occurred too often in the game. The Rams fumbled five times, each time on a drive, and recovered only one of their own. The Dons dropped the ball once, on a lateral, and Bernstein pounced on it on the 48.

Four offside penalties were held against the Rams, and one holding charge totally lost 35 yards for the Rams. The Dons had four penalties, two for offside, once for too much time for putting the ball in play, and once for throwing away the ball.

Rams Offensively Great

The Rams displayed an offensive splurge that has not been equaled since the State game. Formation of interference was faster and allowed Taylor and Honnert ample time to pick pass receivers or run downfield. On Nauman's 90 yard run to a touchdown that was called back, the college rooters saw one of the most spectacular blocking exhibitions for a long time. Would-be tacklers were clipped neatly and Nauman shot through like the proverbial bullet.

Passing attack for the Rams was one of the best ever seen. With the line holding back the surging Dons, the passes to Medrano and Bernstein were destined to be complete. Honnert's passing arm kept the Rams in perpetual motion, and Taylor's off-tackle spurts harrassed the Dons no end.

Don Defense Strong

Drives in the third and fourth quarters were stopped inches short of a first down. Late in the third quarter, Taylor's pass to Hagen drove down to the Don 40 on a 25 yard gain.

Offside penalties stopped the drive as Honnert gained 9 and 8 successively, and on fourth down, with 1 to go on the Don 30, the Rams met a stubborn defence and missed a first down. Again in the fourth quarter, the Rams marched down to the Don 39, but two passes fell incomplete and again the march was halted.

Standouts in the game were many. Hagen, Council and Bernstein at end showed tremendous power, offensively as well as defensively.

Taylor in the backfield looked about as good as Honnert, and Blakemore kicked brilliantly, Wilson also backed the line like a wall, and the whole line was faster, speedier than previous games.

For the Dons, Sheridan, Cerino, Mattson, Borges and Ukai took the honors.

Rifle Team Wins Opening Match With S.F. Surf Club

In the season's opener the Junior College Rifle team displayed a surprising amount of strength by defeating the San Francisco Surf and Rifle Club in the match held Tuesday night at the college rifle range, according to Captain Fred McFarland, rifle team coach.

McFarland believes that the team is on a par with the team of last year and last year's team won the State Gallery championship. He says that according to its early season showing this is the strongest team he has ever coached.

In winning the match Tuesday the team was led by two new additions to the squad, Hal Pack and Bob Reichart. The team as a whole shot very well with only two members shooting below 175. Team totals were 918 for the college and 866 for the Surf and Rifle Club.

Individual scores were Reichart 188, Pack 187, Charles North 182, Al Templeton 182, M. E. Pierce 177, Charles Gilet and Jim Juri each shooting 174.

Goof Squad Opens Season At Seals On Friday Night

Playing its first regularly scheduled game of the season, the college goof team was supposed to swing into action against the San Francisco Boys Club Friday night at 6:30 o'clock, under the arcs at Seals Stadium, Melvin Chicazola, team coach, announced.

This was the first game which the team had played although they have scrimmaged against Poly High and the college varsity, Chicazola said.

Chicazola named his starting lineup as follows: ends, Stan Young, and Norm Simon; tackles, Bill Garry and Don Tobin; guards, Wally Griffin and Don Paulson; center, Mike Lunich; backs, Louis Vasquez, Al Crasse, Buck Silverberg and Parschel Hayes.

Others scheduled to see action were Dick Clayton, Jerry Bradley, Tom Reilly, Warren Nelson, Mike D'Fonseca, Bill Maurer and Fumio Obayashi. Bob Cavender may play if he is sufficiently recovered from an elbow injury, Chicazola said.

Club Advisory Board

Suspended Organizations May Apply For Charters

College organizations which are now suspended from the Club Advisory Board and wish to regain a status of good standing should file their applications for charter early today so that they may be presented for approval at the CAB meeting which will be held this afternoon at 2 o'clock, Bob Ogg, president of the group advised.

Although clubs may apply for charters at any time during the semester, it will be to their advantage to be removed from suspension as early as possible, Ogg said.

Application should include a copy of the club constitution and, unless the group is classed as restricted (membership by invitation only), a list of the names and addresses of members also, he commented.

Clubs now under suspension are Alpha Phi Omega, Beta Phi Beta, Block Society, National Collegiate Flying Club, San Francisco Junior College Chapter, Omicron Phi Pi, and Skating Club.

Of these six, only Alpha Phi Omega has taken steps to regain its good standing, Marion Schrick, membership chairman of the CAB, revealed. The name of this organization will be put before the club board for approval at today's meeting, she added.

Also to be presented for approval will be the application of Theta Tau, for new membership charter, Miss Schrick declared.

Cabby, CAB bulletin, will be issued to clubs at today's meeting, Ogg announced. Because of lack of time, Thedora Wong, editor of the publication, has resigned from her post, and according to Ogg either a new editor will be appointed or issuance of the bulletin will be discontinued.

Simmons College

Faculty Hits Bad English

BOSTON, MASS.—(ACP)—Bad English must go!

That is the decree of a faculty committee of Simmons College, which found that about 12 per cent of upper class students do not know or use satisfactory English.

Although student use of English has engaged the attention of many colleges and universities throughout the country, including Harvard Massachusetts Instituto of Technology, Amherst and Williams, the Simmons experiment is significant, according to the committee's report, in that it aims to "approach the problem of illiteracy by setting a standard of literacy."

To that end the group has prepared a manual on reading and writing to be used by students and instructors alike, the effect of which will be to give a true picture of the situation with respect to English usage and to furnish a basis for remedial work.

The manual, to be distributed in September, contains basic rules for grammar, punctuation, spelling and the like, symbols to be used in correcting papers, reading suggestions, and information on answering examination questions, preparing reports, inserting footnotes and compiling bibliographies.

Miss Junior College

Ruth Plimpton Co-Writer Of New Business Textbook

Secretarial training and practice is the subject for a text being written by Ruth J. Plimpton in collaboration with Esther K. Beamer, Miss Plimpton confirmed today.

The text will be for junior college and university students, and is to be published early in 1941, Miss Plimpton said.

Miss Beamer has had a great deal of practical experience in executive positions, although she has had no teaching experience, Miss Plimpton commented.

Much of the material for the text will be taken from speeches Miss Plimpton has made recently before such organizations as the Business Education Department of the National Education Association, and the National Teacher's Federation, she revealed.

Gladys Steele Presents Folk Songs Today

As a special concession to students of the Music 30a course, Gladys Steele, noted Bay Region singer, will give a recital of folk songs at 10 o'clock this morning in Room 200, Flossita Badger, music instructor, announced last week.

"Miss Steele will supply her own accompaniment," Miss Badger declared. "We are especially fortunate to have such a well-known musician consent to appear before us at the college."

Because of the limited facilities in Room 200 the recital will not be open to all students of the college, Miss Badger revealed.

"While the program would undoubtedly be of interest to all students, we feel it is only fair to give preference to those students who are actually enrolled in the history of music class," she explained.

According to tentative plans the recital of European and American folk songs will last approximately one hour.

Miss Badger also revealed the fact that the student performance of Aida which is scheduled for Friday, November 1, has been completely sold out.

"However, tickets at various prices are available for the extra performance of Carmen which will be given on Thursday afternoon, October 31," Miss Badger announced.

Tickets can be reserved in Room 200 at prices varying from 75 cents to $2.50, she said.

"I should like to urge students who are interested in exchanging the tickets which they had reserved for Aida for tickets to Carmen to get in touch with me, so that we may make the necessary arrangements," Miss Badger added.

Welfare Council Approves Student Directory Plans

In a meeting held last Friday, the college welfare council approved of planned action on the part of a special committee in regard to the publication of a student directory.

Gene Powell and John Mowbray will secure data for the directory, which is to contain the names, addresses and phone numbers of all college students. It is also planned to include in the publication the majors of each student. According to the council about 2000 copies will be printed and sold at 15 cents a copy.

Loretta Egan has been appointed to investigate the possibilities of securing mailboxes for the use of the executive officers. It is planned to ask for about 20 mailboxes to be installed by the student administration.

Declaring that bleachers are needed to accommodate the students at rallies, the Welfare Council has appointed Jim Honnert, low frosh president, to secure information pertaining to the cost and purchase of the needed equipment.

Additional problems discussed by the council included that of the congested condition of the cafeteria and of its expected increase when rainy weather begins; the possibility of noon dances, preferably in the women's gymnasium and the desire to find a place for students to eat their lunches when weather prevents use of facilities now available about the school.

NYA Students May Make Up Working Hours Each Month

Edward H. Redford, college NYA director, revealed today that any NYA workers who have failed to work the maximum hours allowed them, and who wish to make up this time on the following month may do so without his consent.

"However," Redford said, 'these workers must indicate on their time slips that additional time has been put in."

The director added that in no case would the extra time be allowed to pass the 50 hour mark and requested all those who were uncertain of their position regarding time or time schedules to contact him in Room 148.

Dedication Ceremony

Balboa High Band To Supply Music Nov. 10

Music at the college dedication ceremonies which will be held Sunday, November 10, will be provided by the Balboa High School band instead of Ralph Murray's band of American Legion Post 233, Lloyd D. Luckmann, dedication chairman, announced this week.

Although scheduled to play at both the formal dedication, which will be held in the men's gymnasium at 1 o'clock, and the flag ceremony at 2, Murray's group will not be able to appear because of a newly signed contract with the San Francisco Park Commission to give band concerts at Golden Gate Park, he explained.

College Band Not Ready Yet

Although the college band was considered for replacing Murray's group, the possibility of its appearing at the dedication was eliminated, as bandmaster Madison Devlin said his group would not be ready to play then. One of the reasons, Luckmann commented, was the lack of uniforms.

Releasing the complete list of displays and room exhibits which are planned for Dedication Day, Luckmann emphasized that the building will not be open until 3 o'clock, when open house will be held.

Displays Listed

The list of rooms which will be on display are as follows:

Sub-floor—Cafeteria, (Ram's head by Dudley Carter); geology lab, displays; mechanical engineering labs, displays.

Main floor—Registrar's office; physics 1b; Room 132 (Harold Leuenberger), IBM scoring machines, public quiz on "Know Your Junior College"; Room 100, Beverly Pasqualetti), movie on aviation; Room 136 (Pasqualetti), slides of the junior college in action; Room 160 (Richard Allman, Evans Ecke), art exhibit; Room 147 (Marie Weller, Lowell Hollingsworth) production, by broadcasting classes; Room 134 (Joan Nourse), Guardsman publications exhibit.

Second floor—Chem labs; Music Room 200.

Third floor—Bacteriology exhibit (Sanford Elberg); Room 314, library, faculty works and art exhibit.

Bulletin boards and display cases will contain the following exhibits, according to Luckmann:

Sub-floor—North, Hotel and Restaurant Management (Mozelle Milliken, Schrumpf); South Exposition maps, geology materials (George Green, Joseph Williams).

Main floor—Cases: South (Glenn Noble); Foyer, student trophies (Lyle Shultz); floriculture arrangements (Thomas Porter, Henry Schrumpf). Bulletin boards: South, (Joan Nourse), publications; north, (Harold Leuenberger), test and measurement materials; all others, art.

Second floor — Bulletin boards (Beverly Pasqualetti), photographic displays.

Third floor—Bulletin boards: Near Room 229 (Thomas Porter), forestry; all others, landscape architecture (John Herman).

Directory To Be Given To Visitors

Visitors touring the building on Dedication Day will be given a directory, Luckmann added.

According to the dedication chairman, plans for a "clean-up-your-campus day" are also being considered. No definite arrangements have been made however, Jean Arnold, leader of the student committee for readying the grounds, said.

Armistice Day

Band To Play For Pasadena Game Nov. 11

First appearance of the college band in public may definitely be expected at the Armistice Day game with Pasadena Junior College on Monday, November 11, at Kezar, Madison Devlin, leader and organizer of the group, announced.

It is possible, Devlin said, that the band may appear next Friday night at the college, San Mateo game, but this will not be decided until later in the week.

Although tryouts for a student leader are being held, announcement of an appointment cannot be made yet, he said, but promised release of the news before the Kezar game.

The student leader who is selected will conduct the band at public performances such as games and rallies, Devlin revealed. "Although I attend the games at which a band of mine plays, I never conduct it myself. I think it is better for one of the students to lead his own group," he commented.

As it does not seem likely at present that the band will have uniforms by November 11, there will probably be no marching on the field, Devlin said.

Forty students so far have signed up for the band, but final roster has not been made up yet, Devlin said.

The band rehearses every Friday afternoon at 4:15 o'clock in Room 200. New equipment, including music stands, has been provided for the group.

New Business Classes Open For Remedying Poor Grades

Four new classes of combined business English and correspondence have been recently started at the college, and are open to students who have made poor grades in those courses during the first midterm period, according to F. Grant Marsh, head of the business department.

"In giving these classes we hope to give a chance to those students who have not had a good start this semester to redeem themselves," Marsh declared.

Marsh also commented on the demand for trained students in the business and insurance fields.

"We do not have enough students who are adequately trained to fill those positions," he remarked, urging interested students to get in touch with him.

Aileen McCreys and Wiley Pomeroy, former students at the college, were recently placed in positions by Marsh. They are employed at present at the Phoenix Mutual Life Insurance Company and the Equitable Life of Iowa, respectively, he announced.

Don Sands Wins Commissary Job With United Air Lines

Don Sands, former student and graduate of the Hotel Division of the college, has received a position with United Air Lines in its commissary department, Mrs. Hilda Watson, chairman of the Hotel and Restaurant Management Division of the college, announced today.

He was with Mannings Coffee Company after leaving the college. He left the coffee concern to come back as Hjorth's assistant this fall, and has just recently gone into the employ of the air line.

Sands worked during the summer of 1939 at the Feather River Inn, and is the third student of the Hotel and Restaurant Management Division to receive a position with an air line. Another student is also working for United, while the third is associated with Pan-American. The commissary department of the air line is the newest branch of the business.

Request For Market Ticket Sale Refused By Company

It has definitely been decided that there will be no Market Street Railway car tickets on sale to junior college students, Michael M. Zarchin, faculty treasurer, said this week.

"The company has refused our request for the sale of their tickets. We have done all we can," he reported.

Waite Proposes Mammoth Rally For Soph Week, January 6-11

Possibility of a mammoth two and a half hour rally being held during Sophomore Week was voiced today by Hugh Waite, special events committee chairman.

Details of the proposed rally were not disclosed by Waite, in as much as his committee's plans for Sophomore Week have not been officially approved. Waite also said plans for holding a sophomore day were being considered.

The week of January 6-11 should be a memorable one in the history of the college's social life, according to sophomore officers, who are in charge of planning the week's activities.

While formerly Sophomore Week's events have been open to the entire college, class officers this semester have announced plans for reserving several events to high sophomores.

To facilitate the attendance of fourth-term students only, two high sophomore identification days have been held. "A similiar day will be held weekly until all sophomores are registered," Alden Thorogood, high sophomore president, said last week.

An identification committee headed by Bob Ogg will be in Room 155 from 9 until 1 o'clock every Monday, he said. All high sophs should register with the committee, he added, so they may be notified of the special sophomore events.

Only the high soph students who are registered with the committee will be notified of the dates of the special events which are being planned for sophomore week, Waite commented.

At the first identification day, held last week, 80 sophomores registered according to Thorogood. "The rest of the high sophomores should register and have their registration cards stamped so they may be identified in the future," Thorogood said.

The identification committee is composed of Pete Aydelotte, Bill Mainaires, Thorogood and Waite.

DURING the past few days, several comments on Emily Post etc. have appeared in The Guardsman.

We have never met the famous Miss Post, nor have we ever had any occassion to think that she is anything but a very nice person.

On behalf of a great many annoyed and somewhat disgusted males we should like to object to some of the little idiosyncracies that Emily delights in throwing before a startled public.

The favorite peeve of many suffering but patient males is the little idea that when helping a woman into the back seat of a car, the man opens the door, the woman gets in, sits down on the side nearest the door she just entered, then calmly waits for the man to enter the car, stumble over her, and with muttered curses sit down.

It would seem to us that it is much more intelligent and practical for a woman to enter the car and sit on the far side so that the man can at least save his shoe shine until he gets to where he's going.

Then too, the woman is bound to get her feet stepped on, or perhaps a run in her stocking.

It is certainly a foolish feeling to stumble over your partner, receiving her pitying looks, then sit down with a disgusted look on your face. How any man can possibly manage to not look like a clumsy ox in such a situation is beyond us.

Although we blame Emily for dreaming up the idea in the first place, any girl who doesn't use her common sense and figure that the idea isn't practical deserves to be stepped on anyway.

College Band

Appearance On Dedication Day Definite

By Theodora Wong

Playing at the college dedication a week from next Sunday will be, not the Balboa High School Band, but the newly organized music-making company of this college!

This disclosure came from Lloyd D. Luckmann, dedication chairman, last Wednesday, swiftly following an earlier announcement that the high school group would replace Ralph Murray's band of American Legion Post 233, which has been signed by the San Francisco Park Commission to conduct concerts at Golden Gate Park.

When both the Balboa band and Murray's group this week were declared unavailable, Madison Devlin, leader of the college band, sent word that his musicians would be ready to play on November 10, when launching of the college will be officially solemnized.

Legion Drum Corps To Aid

Assisting the student band, will be the drum corps of Legion Post 233, which had formerly scheduled its entire band to appear at the dedication, Luckmann said.

Invitations to the ceremonies have been sent to officials of the city, to members of the Board of Education, to Joseph P. Nourse, superintendent of public schools and his staff, and to the principals of all San Francisco Public Schools, Luckmann revealed. Also asked to attend were the presidents of the University of San Francisco, Marin Junior College, San Mateo Junior College, and San Francisco State College.

Students wishing to send invitations to their friends may secure them at the student body office in Room 155, Luckmann added, emphasizing, however, that these are not necessary for admission.

Doyle To Be M.C.

The formal dedication opens at 1 o'clock in the men's gymnasium, with Richard E. Doyle, chairman of the physical properties of the Board of Education, acting as master of ceremonies, according to Luckmann's program. Scheduled to speak at this time are C. Harold Caulfield, president of the board, Mayor Angelo J. Rossi, Superintendent Joseph P. Nourse, and Archibald J. Cloud, college president.

To help ready the grounds for the dedication, student groups have declared next week Clean-Up-Your-Campus Week. Appointed to coordinate the work of student groups was Jean Arnold, Associated Students vice-president. Also named this week to aid in this purpose was a committee of the Club Advisory Board, which includes Lillian Hoyle, chairman, Jean Spencer, Jack Smyth, Francis Goetz, and Pat Riley.

The latter group will be particularly active on Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday of next week, Miss Hoyle said, and students who are free at 12 o'clock and wish to aid the committee at this time are asked to contact the members.

Preceding the dedication, the Fac-

'I' Day Registrations Uncover Cases Of Missing Sophomores

By Eve Burkey

"I" Day has arrived!

In fact, it has come, gone and will be here soon.

Originally a mere formality for registering sophs for sophomore week, I Day has been held twice now and some startling facts have been elicited from those timid souls who have so far been coaxed into the student body office.

No one knows just how many members there actually are of this lost colony. Officials have defined a high sophomore as an individual who has attended the college for four semesters.

That being the case, registering of high sophs becomes a far from simple task. Days, even weeks, are required for news of I Day to penetrate into the dim recesses of the wilderness haunted by those students who have decided to make the college their life work.

Four semesters, five semesters, six, seven, eight—they keep coming back for more. Let it suffice to say that when the college moved from Powell Street, janitors found, crouched furtively in a rather wide crack in the linoleum, a bleary specimen who declared he had sunk through the floor in the summer of 1935 in an agony of embarrassment caused by a stern look from an instructor.

Being rather stout, he hadn't been able to get through the crack, and there, he told amazed onlookers, he had been ever since. "It's been a peaceful life," he sighed.

Getting 'em down in black and white will probably uncover thousands of similar cases but the Identification committee is ready.

If they have to be hauled out of the trees by an ankle all high sophs will be registered!

The American Presidency

Ogg, Thorogood Give Opinions On Republican, Democrat Candidates

Since the subject of the next President of the United States is a highly controversial one, and since the feeling for both candidates is very high, we felt it advisable to present both sides of the campaign as seen through the eyes of two prominent student leaders of the college. We make no attempt to side with one or the other. Here are two opposite views. Read them both, then decide for yourselves the better candidate.

Willkie

Today the liberties of the American people are in danger! In this crisis our American Democracy is periled from abroad, but even greater is our danger from international disruption. Talk of the European crisis is a mere camouflage for the attack on our democracy from within. We do not realize this danger, but now is the time for the real America to wake up if she is ever to do so.

Our democracy was created over 150 years ago. Since that time we have never wanted any division of colony against colony, North against South, race against race, labor against capital, or brother against brother. We have always wanted freedom, toleration, and equality. In ragged clothes, on empty stomachs, and on bare feet our forefathers fought to found a united democracy.

Now we are Americans and proud of it; a united people, we have fought for a democracy which will preserve our liberty, equality, and toleration.

Once again we are being divided: labor against capital, section against section, North against South, party against party, race against race, and labor union against labor union. We are threatened with dictatorship from within: it threatens all for which we have fought and lived. This perilous situation threatens our freedom, our equality, and our very existence.

The American people must no longer follow a course predicated upon social division. We can no longer follow a man who maintains his power through the feverish fears caused by the irritations of internal dissension. No longer can we permit the ideas of hatred of one's neighbor, of one's employer or employee, as the case may be, and one's own family to be the battle-cry of our government. What causes social division? Mistrust, lack of faith, and suspicion.

I believe that the present administration has muttered these very un-American qualities for the purpose of its own growth. It has lost faith in its people. The present administration no longer believes the people capable of ruling themselves. It has given these powers to its own self-appointed "superman." Can America not see through the pitiful experiences of Europe, that a superman can soon become an indispensable Frankensteinian monster?

The present Administration has said under oath that it would protect our constitution. It promised that it would establish an adequate defense. It said that it would create a system of sound currency. It also promised to relieve the unemployment problem. It pledged its word to reduce our national debt. It has not kept its word in any of these. What reason have we to believe that, as it now says, it hates war and that it is not trying to drive us prematurely into a struggle for which we are unprepared.

Consequently I am going to vote for a man for President who has faith in me as a citizen, and in whom I can have faith. For the President of the United States I am going to vote for a man who has risen to the top in American leadership on ladders that were not placed there for him by an influential parentage and which he did not try to kick away after he had climbed them. I am not going to vote for any self-seeking candidate who is trying to break the great tradition of both national parties that no President should hold office beyond two terms. I am going to vote for a man who believes in the sanctity of his word. Wendell Willkie's background is not strewn with broken promises and his campaign is not built up on intimidation of voters now on relief.

I am of conscription age. If it becomes necessary for us to fight, I want a real gun, and not a wooden one. But it is not merely the problem of a foreign war which concerns me in choosing a leader; I want to progress at home under the leadership of a man who can and will solve our outstanding national problems of unemployment, social security, the national debt, and labor relationships.

Therefore, for the protection of my country, for the rights of posterity, and for the safeguarding of myself I choose Wendell L. Willkie as President of the United States of America.

—Robert D. Ogg

Roosevelt

Just a few pertinent questions that I would like answered or a few points that I would like to have cleared up before I would even think of voting for Willkie.

1. We must realize the office of President is the most difficult in the whole world.

a. Roosevelt has had the experience in Government, has Willkie?

b. Roosevelt knows Government both national and international, does Willkie?

c. Has our country in all of its history since becoming a world power, ever given the job as President to a man who has had no Government experience?

2. If anyone were to suggest to a big business man that he put at the head of a million dollar corporation someone without business experience an attractive athlete or a brilliant poet or novelist—the suggestion I believe would be ridiculed and rejected. But some of these same men, I notice, would do the same thing in this case that they wouldn't do in the above mentioned case.

Mr. Roosevelt wants to harness mighty rivers for the use of the public, the happiness and comfort of millions of consumers while Willkie's interest has in the past been to stop this action, to keep the prices high as the traffic will bear. Roosevelt believes in water to turn turbines, Willkie believes in water to turn tickers.

Did he not say, "I never forgot to fight for and protect the interests of those who were paying me?"

3. Willkie says that Roosevelt is an enemy of big business and private enterprise . . . Let's look at the record.

A. CAN WE FORGET THE CONDITION OF BUSINESS AND FINANCE WHEN PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT TOOK OFFICE ON THE 4TH DAY OF MARCH, 1933????

1. Banks were suspended, deposits were lost, factories were closed, business was at a standstill. Roosevelt stepped in, and if we have banks today, if we have business today, it is because of his heroic action in the darkest moment of the crisis.

They say he never met a payroll. In those trying days, his courage met everyone's payroll. Roosevelt saved the life savings of millions of depositors and hundreds of millions of asset values in the banks that were still within reach of being salvaged.

In regards to national defense and security, wouldn't you consider the following as some means of providing the same?

1. Social Security Board. 2. State Unemployment Insurance. 3. Increase in cash farm income by 80% since 1932. 4. Establishing Home Owner's Loan Corporation. 5. Old Age Security. 6. 1932, 1 out of 10 farmers had electricity; today 3 out of 10 have it. 7. Public Works Program provided over 2,000,000,000 man hours of employment. 8. 7,500,000 workers have benefited on WPA. Evidence of such, as contributing to our national wealth, can be found in every city in our country in the form of schools, hospitals, parks, playgrounds, roads, libraries, dams, forests, etc. 9. More than 2,000,000 boys trained for useful citizenship in the CCC. (These boys were either walking the street or had nothing better to look forward to in 1932.) 10. Hydro electric in TVA Columbia, etc., making power available to consumers at a more reasonable rate and opened up new industries. 11. Labor now has the right to organize and has wage hour protection. 12. SEC protects investors.

It would be an act of unexampled folly on the part of us who are interested in the future welfare of the nation as compared with our welfare as of 1932, to exchange the tested leadership of President Roosevelt for an utterly inexperienced public utility lawyer whose only claim to consideration is that he has successfully represented and won the gratitude of some of the biggest interests in Wall Street.

Looking at the records of both men, taking into consideration the age in which we live, I feel that I will have to act to encourage my friends to cast their vote for the man who has been tried and, in the largest sense, proven to be the man necessary to carry on, in the tracks that have in some manner or another been approved by the whole electorate at some time or another during the last seven years.

First Appearance

Student Band To Play Tonight For San Mateo Game

Definitely promised for tonight's game with San Mateo is the appearance of the college band, which will be playing in public for the first time, Madison Devlin, leader of the group, announced.

At least 20 students will comprise tonight's band, Devlin said, although a larger group may appear.

Numbers which will probably be played will be Washington Post, Washington and Lee Swing, Billboard March, Ferryboat Serenade, God Bless America, and A Real American, according to the bandmaster. The latter is a new number which is just off the press and was sent out from New York last week.

Leader Tryouts This Afternoon

Tryouts for a student leader will continue at this afternoon's rehearsal, which will be held at 4:15 in Room 200, Devlin revealed. "I haven't any idea who the leader will be until after today's meeting," he commented, "but one of the students will, definitely, be chosen to conduct the band tonight. Although I always attend the games at which a band of mine plays, I never lead the students myself. I believe it is good experience for one of the students to conduct the group himself."

Musicians Named

Signups for the band who have attended rehearsals regularly and will probably play at tonight's game were listed as follows:

Flute: Suzanne McFall; clarinet: John Campbell, Fred Konkel, Bob Lamberson, Ralph Vogt; saxophone; Martin Foster, Roy Jair, Timothy Siaw; trumpet: Floyd Blanchard, William Gillohm, Kent Jorgenson, Joe Kinney, Benny Lewis, Tom Nakashige, Tadashi Nakamura, Betty Underwood, Ken Williams, Kenneth Wiltz; horn: Art Bischoff, Nicolai Moffett; trombone: Al Bagot, Emanuel Hein, Charles Kieser, Norwin Safholm, Bill Watkins, Paul Zink; bass: Tom Lampman, Anthony Storti; drums: Roy Harding, Lincoln Johnson, Al Meadows.

No Uniforms At Present

Although the band may possibly secure uniforms for later performances, they will not be outfitted for this first appearance, Devlin said.

Following tonight's game, the band is scheduled to play on two special occasions in November, Devlin disclosed. They are the college dedication ceremonies on Sunday, November 10, and the Armistice Day game with Pasadena the following day.

Paint Students Visit Fuller Paint Plant

Students of the college paint technology course visited the Fuller Paint plant in South San Francisco last Tuesday, Walter D. Forbes, paint technology instructor announced this week.

"We were the guests of W. D. Jones, Chief Chemist of the plant," he said, "and we were shown how varnishes, lacquers, paints, and colors are manufactured."

Of special interest to the students, according to Forbes, was the spacious, well equipped laboratories. In the entire plant there are about 300 men employed.

"This plant," Forbes said, "is the largest paint manufacturing plant on the Pacific Coast. There are two other plants on this coast, one in Portland, and one in Los Angeles."

In the near future Assistant Chief Chemist Doctor O'Leary, from the Fuller Paint plant in South San Francisco, will speak to the students of the paint technology class.

NYA Applicants Advised To Report To Room 148

Edward H. Redford, college NYA director, today requested that all those students who have filed applications and have not yet received work report to the NYA office in Room 148 as soon as possible.

Redford revealed that a general checkup is being made and that it is necessary to contact all who have made applications in order to complete this work.

In regard to the monthly filing of time schedules, the director expressed the opinion that there would be no trouble this November 6 when they are due, as long as the workers abide by the newly established rules regarding the filing of the schedules.

Hello Walk

Council Starts New Tradition

Establishment of a new tradition at college, that of naming the path between the science building and the gymnasiums "Hello Walk," was approved by the Executive Council at its meeting Wednesday.

"The idea is for all students coming up or down the path to say hello to each other," Lyle Shultz, Associated Students president, declared. "I should like to say that credit for the idea should go to John Hurley, physical education instructor."

Possibility of erecting a plaque of some sort at both ends of the path is being investigated at present by the Welfare Committee under committee chairman John Mowbray, Shultz revealed.

"The Welfare Committee is also considering the laying of a concrete tablet at both ends of the walk to designate its significance, should the plaque prove impractical," Shultz said.

The creation of "Hello Walk," as it is to be called from now on, is in keeping with the trend of establishing traditions at the college for future students here, he added.

He requested that students cooperate with the Executive Council by immediately beginning to say hello to those whom they pass on the path.

"It is thought that the plan should work out well," Shultz commented.

Traffic Tickets Given Student Violators

As an example of poor student cooperation in parking, over a book and a half of traffic tickets have been given to students who "persist in ignoring my repeated warnings," Dean Edwin C. Browne said Wednesday.

He emphasized the point that parking on the driveway leading up to the front door of the school is strictly forbidden. "This driveway," he said, "is to be used solely for passengers, and for unloading freight."

"There is sufficient flat ground surrounding the college to accommodate those who have cars," Dean Browne said. The restricted areas include, the paved area directly in front of the building, the upper level behind the building, and the muddy slopes on both sides of the building.

Parking on these muddy slopes is especially prohibited because of the dangers. This was demonstrated last week, when because of the rain softening the ground, an automobile slid down and bumped into two others, doing about $30.00 damage. Luckily no one was injured, but this may not be the case the next time.

There has been suggested that a level space be paved and used as a parking lot, but no action has been taken on this matter as yet.

Starting sometime in the near future, Dean Brown said, parking signs will be posted in the restricted areas.

Guardsman Subscription Rate Set At $1.00 A Year

Because of numerous requests from alumni and other sources outside the college, subscriptions to The Guardsman can be had for $1.00 a year, Len Gross, editor of The Guardsman, announced this week.

"We are charging this subscription rate to anyone not a member of the Associated Students, because of the mailing cost incurred for each issue of The Guardsman sent out," Gross explained.

Rest Of Propaganda Processes Explained

FEELING that the subject of propaganda is an important one and should be fully discussed we continue this week with the points discussed by the Institute for Propaganda Analysis.

A brief review is perhaps in order. The institute listed eleven mental processes to which the propagandist appeals. They are: (1) Custom, (2) Simplification, (3) Frustration, (4) Displacement, (5) Anxiety, (6) Reinforcement, (7) Association, (8) Universals, (9) Projection, (10) Identification, and (11) Rationalization.

Last Tuesday the first two were discussed. Now let us examine the remaining nine.

Frustration—When we cannot achieve the goals we seek, we are frustrated. To the successful propagandist, frustrated, dissatisfied people are made to order.

Millions of Germans were frustrated by the result of the war, later by ruinous inflation, and finally by depression and unemployment. Hitler gave them an outlet for aggressiveness: they should destroy minority groups, destroy democratic civil liberties because these worked to protect minority groups. He gave them new goals, the building of a strong Germany, jobs in the army, in armament factories, in building fortifications, in factories, on farms, and in labor camps. By capitalizing upon the frustration of millions of Germans, he canalized their emotions, thoughts and actions into aggressiveness toward goals which served his purposes and aims.

Displacement—Most of us, when things go wrong, seek satisfaction by shifting the blame to somebody or something. We need scapegoats. They serve the function of displacing the dissatisfaction produced by ourselves or some person or event on to a tangible though innocent victim.

Anxiety—Most of us, when we anticipate some trouble, are anxious and worried. When we are anxious we try to relieve our anxiety. Hitler has achieved success in both creating and relieving anxiety. He creates anxiety within his borders by using the theory of terror by employing Gestapo agents, brown shirt squads.

Reinforcement—With most persons, a tendency toward action must be strengthened; otherwise it will disappear. It must be reinforced.

Reinforcement has had an important place in Hitler's propaganda. Nazi slogans are endlessly repeated, the Swastika symbol constantly displayed, and the injunction to follow the Feuhrer wheresoever he may lead is continually dinned into the consciousness of the Germans.

Association—Most of us, if we have certain feelings toward a person, tend to have the same feeling toward similar persons or things. We tend to generalize. We express liking by labels, which are glittering generalities and dislike by poison words name calling.

Universals—Universals are generalizations which have become set in our own minds and which we apply to all objects or persons of a class.

Projection—Just as most of us think we know why large groups believe and act as they do, we also tend to ascribe our own desires to such groups; we think that if only they had our enlightenment they would see the truth as we see it. In consequence we try to project our ideas upon others.

Identification—Most of us are inclined to take pride in identifying ourselves with persons who possess prestige. We like to be associated with "big shots."

Rationalization—Most of us tend to cover up our faults, mistakes and inadequacies by justifying them in terms of principles which are acceptable to our own consciences and to our fellows. This is the process of rationalization or kidding ourselves.

Impersonally Speaking

COMING from a long line of distinguished claim jumpers, we have never felt any particular qualms of conscience at poaching on other people's territory.

Acting upon this principle, we are about to impose on the college's quiz entrepreneur, Doris Schnacke, and test your I.Q. What we would like to know is, how can anyone explain a black eye?

We are prepared to offer a liberal reward (one glass of water in the college cafeteria) for the best answer to this poser. We feel plenty safe in offering anything, because we have come to the conclusion that there is no satisfactory reason for sporting a shiner.

Recently we acquired a mouse while playing ball in the intramural league. Not being a fielding demon, a throw from first base to second scored a direct hit on our eye, the right one.

The next day as we strolled about the campus, everyone we knew would laugh at our plight and sneer "Whaddja do, run into a door?" Then these idiots would roar at their putrid joke.

At first we tried to explain how we got it. No one would believe it. Some wise guys would tell us, "Why don'tcha keep yer left hand up?"

For some reason, we failed to enjoy this huge joke as much as the perpetrators of it. We didn't even laugh at this great show of humor.

Our next line of attack was to play coy and pretend that we were in a fight. Even the very persons who told us that we had been in one exclaimed, "bulloney."

Then we decided to use a different alibi. We tried having all sorts of things, fanciful and logical, happen to us. Not a one met with success.

We tried everything from accident (auto) through impact (from flying creatures) to zeal (see also wrath, parental). Result, sneers and jeers.

We even feigned ignorance when confronted with a demand to know "How come the shiner?"

After the third of fourth million (we lost count) person belligerantly inquired as to how we came to be the proud possessor of such an emblem of distinction, we became provoked.

Angry retort was the best excuse, we discovered. The questioner usually declines to follow up his lead.

Always willing to share great discoveries with the rest of humanity, we pass on these helping hints. There are many, but we will give you just the best approaches.

"Haw, haw, who belted you in the glim?"

"Any skin off of your nose?"

"Don't get sore, I didn't want to offend you."

"Well, shut up then. I took enough punishment getting this thing."

We found that one to work best on the refined type. The other one, that works on all types, is still better.

This one requires a tough stare, a long and sharp inhalation, and a sneer.

This is followed by a phrase spoken in an "I - dare - you - to - knock - this - chip - off - of - my - shoulder" fashion.

The Spectator

Today's Spectator is written by Barbara Budd.

FRENCH films have done much to spotlight Hollywood's weaknesses in movie production. Hollywood is artificial and glamouous and reflects this quality of superficiality in most of her films. French pictures are realistic and direct. Hollywood tends toward the adolescent in its sweet attitude of wishful thinking toward life, while French films are characterized by a maturity of approach. The French betray a genius in the use of the simple plot and the deliberate elimination of all unnecessary details. Hollywood delights in stuffing any situation that might arise in the fertile and imaginative minds of its directors into what otherwise might be a perfectly good story.

Daybreak (Le Jour Se Leve) stresses these vital differences in the Hollywood and French versions of film making. It is directed by Marcel Carne from a story be Jacques Viot, and was finished just before the war, being one of the last pictures to come out of France. The captions in English are supplemented with French dialogue.

The story is a sordid drama of certain inevitability through grim unfolding of Fate, which enroaches upon the live of two men and two women.

It opens with an unpremeditated murder committed, after which, alone in a garret room Francois, the killer (Jean Gabin), evoked memories of the events leading up to the shooting.

The memories are revealed in the simple technique of the flashback, while the gendarmes spray the barricaded door with bullets, and Gabin, superb in his fatal calm, deliberately unwraps his new tie and hangs it in its place. In some strange way the completion of this matter-of-fact act seemed to prepare him for the taking of his own life, many hours later, when the alarm clock rang at daybreak.

The opposing psychological patterns of the characters in the story tend to heighten the drama, and the deviation in their mental processes is finely wrought by the intensity of underacting.

Francois, simple and honest, instinctively detested the refined machinations of the thoroughly despicable Valentin (Jules Berry), an animal trainer and aging roue.

French actresses are noted for their beauty, and Clara (Arletty), the partner of Valentin, is as coldly beautiful in her armor of hard sophistication, as the flower girl is beautiful in her innocence of youth and romantic illusion.

Incidentally, Jean Gabin reveals a remarkable affinity to Chevalier, perhaps more by contrast than by complete similarity. He possesses Chevalier's rich charm of personality without his irresponsible gaity. In its place is a strong vital force and a nuance of sadness.

Daybreak is relentless and cruel in its theme of futility. It fascinates because it deals with real people, and not with the marionettes acting in a Hollywood world of make-believe. Daybreak may not be popular in the popular sense of the word, but it will appeal to those interested in an artistically honest portrayal of living characters.

On The Feminine Side

MANY and loud have been the complaints on the behalf of the male students at the college over the unfairness of having a column devoted principally to women and their interests (we hope). As one eloquent man put it, "Why'ncha ever write about us guys?"

So, willingly but by no means confidently, we comply with his request. Hence, On The Feminine Side becomes On The Masculine Side From A Feminine Viewpoint for this issue of The Guardsman, if you follow.

One of the articles in men's clothing that even these arch feminine eyes have noticed is the short camel's hair coat that Merrill Steele, assistant yell-leader, is wearing on these chilly days. They tell us that short coats are all the rage for men this year and small wonder. They're perfect for campus and sports wear and they look, above all else, warm.

Another really warm looking jacket is the brilliant lumber-jacket that Gene Powell, welfare committee member, is sporting about the campus. We would hardly be rash enough to attempt to include all the colors in the jacket, but suffice it to say that it is made of a wild, rugged looking sort of plaid that seems to call for a cry of "Timber!" in the background. And very good-looking, too.

In Re The Jacket Situation

Beta Tau prexy Burt Wines is a trifle more conservative in his choice of clothing. Especially well-tailored is his blue and white herringbone tweed sports jacket which he usually wears with a slip-on sweater and slacks. Somehow, there's something well-turned out looking about a man in sports jacket et al.

The sports jacket which Bill Michelson is wearing on campus to the approval of admiring eyes is also beautifully cut. It's in a balmoral blue shade with an invisible red window-pane plaid. (How are we doing?) Bill is also fond of the slip-on sweater plus white shirt combination, that seems to add an extra something to a good-looking sports jacket.

Of camel's hair, which seems to be of equal popularity with the men and women on campus, is the jacket which Hughie Waite, publicity committee chairman, has added to his wardrobe. Hughie sometimes wears his jacket (which is in a soft natural shade) with brown slacks and a white shirt with very smart results. (Right, Jeannie?)

Bill Lohsen's windbreaker in natural poplin is seemingly very practical as well as good-looking. It's ideal for wear on unsettled days, for not only is it light weight, but it also zips up the front for protection against cold winds. Bill assures us that it is also water-repellent, which gives it a perfect score.

Masculine Miscellany

Jeans seem to be tremendously popular with the masculine population. They're attractive in a rural sort of way when teamed up with a plaid or checked shirt. Incidentally, Hank Suerstedt, high sophomore class secretary, seems to have started somethnig with his denim work jacket. No matter what Esquire would say on the subject, most of the students like it.

Oggie Wheeler, low sophomore class vice-president, is an advocate of the gabardine sports shirt movement. He has one in a light green saddle stitched in a deeper green shade that is extraordinarily smart. Slim Thorogood, finance chairman, has a similar shirt in a rose-beige shade stitched in wine. The glory of these shirts, at least from a practical, feminine viewpoint, is the fact that they can be worn either as jackets with T-shirts under them or as ordinary shirts.

One of the best looking suits that we have seen in months is that possessed by Dick Callaghan. It's made of a rough-looking tweed, which always seems to get the women, of an English texture and is in a dark brown flecked with color. Leather buttons in a darker brown add a really mannish touch as well as being quite unusual. Very British and extremely attractive, R. B.

The multitude of good looking sweater-and-slacks outfits at the college defy description, of course. A few comparative novelties such as those rain-proof gabardine hats and brown-and-white saddle shoes haven't made a very deep impression on most of the men although they're in high favor with some.

Men at the college can more than hold their own in matching styles with women, so we think.

• When To Wear A Hat

Editor, The Guardsman:

In relation to your column, While Thinking, of October 29, I should like to ask.

I have been under the impression that it is proper to wear one's hat in public buildings. Reason—my parents told me so, my friends told me so, and a book of etiquette told me so. Explanation deemed necessary. I red the book because it had the interesting title; Things We Don't Talk About.

Now, I am not a concientious objector, and I do like to conform to tradition, but please, pretty please, can't I wear my hat in the hall—just from my place of entrance to the check stand? Because you see, I lug a hat, an overcoat, and a brief case, besides myself, clear from Oakland.

Greatfully (in advance) yours,

Robert S. Black

• Agree With Mr. Cowie

Editor, The Guardsman:

Since there has been so much discussion on the picture Down Argentine Way, I decided to add my opinion to the rest.

I honestly agree with Mr. Cowie when he said there was a weak plot behind the musical.

Truly, the best part of the play was the dancing by the Nicholas Brothers, and of course Carmen Miranda. The audience never fails to applaude after they dance.

Since I have seen the picture about 15 times I think I have very good qualifications backing my argument. I work there.

Incidentally I never fail to read Miss Malone's column. If Mr. O'Cohen doesn't like it, he doesn't have to read it—after all it is titled, On The Feminine Side.

Shots At RAMdom . . .

SINCE FDR'S PERSONAL entry into the race to decide which party is the lesser indispensable, the presidential campaign has brightened into a blaze of polemics, with most of the bright light coming from the defender. A rousing joust, in the real American political tradition, is riding the ether waves.

With the exception of a few satraps, bitter mud-slinging has been left in the background. For comedy relief, buffonish Al Smith took up the Republican battle-cry last week. We hear that the committee for the succor of all Democrats is now negotiating with Jerry Colonna.

The addresses last Monday night of Wendell "I'll get you a job," Willkie and the "third term candidate" FDR presented some interesting and most enlightening contrasts.

Most patent was the difference of personalities . . . There was the flatness and college-boy intensity of Willkie lined up against the sophisticated, compelling FDR. One would think that after Landon, public speaking courses would have been made mandatory for all Republicans and their cohorts.

JOHN L. LEWIS' juicy dennunciations appeared to have come from a merger of Fibber McGee's Gildersleeve and a Shakespearean actor of indeterminate rating. CIO repudiations are still pouring in.

THE GLITTERING GENERALIZING of Willkie furnished a good back board for FDR as he "talked by the book." To our mind, the President has succeeded in bouncing back the Republican claim of inadequate defense measure under the Democratic administration. Around 7:30 p.m. Monday night in New Jersey, FDR read the record of Republican balks to additional arms in the last few years. Around 7:45 p.m. Monday night in Kentucky, Willkie was ineffectually upbraiding Administration laxity in arming the nation with vague charges.

WE WONDER WHAT Republicans would use for a chief issue if FDR were not the "third term candidate." What say to a coalition group with everyone mouthing "me too"?

Willkie's Monday night statement that he is the only man left to preserve American liberties and neutrality makes us wonder who this "indispensable man" really is.

WILLKIE'S ACCUSATIONS of the corrupt machines of Boss Kelly and Dictator Hague are only too valid, however. As the vitriolic Westbrook Pegler of the Scripps-Howard papers has conclusively proved, these two men and their dealings are a blot on the party to which they belong.

All in all, the wind-up of this campaign promises to be most entertaining, if Willkie's voice can hold out. We want to hear FDR answer more Republican charges. We want to hear him utilize his wit and genial yet trenchant irony.

Willkie's opening thrusts were sharp and had promise. Unfortunately, if his speech Monday night was any indication, he has lost some of his fire, his words, again, were general and repititious. He has not, however, lost any of his true sincerity; his fundamental convictions are still the nation's.

San Mateo Invades Seals At 8; Second League Game

Still seeking its initial conference victory, the college football team meets the San Mateo Junior College eleven tonight at 8 o'clock under the arcs at Seals Stadium.

This is the fifth game of the series between the two colleges, and to this date honors are even. Each team has won two games and there have been no ties.

In 1935 the scheduled game was postponed because San Mateo felt that San Francisco was too strong to play in addition to the tough opponents the Bulldogs had already met.

Actual play began in 1936 and San Mateo won the initial encounter on a fluke. A fumble bounced off the toe of one of the players into the arms of a San Mateo lineman who raced 47 yards to a score. San Mateo converted and that was the ball game.

Tallying twice in the final quarter, the Rams revenged themselves in 1937, 13 to 12. Wes Olsen and Al McDonald scored for the Rams with the hero role going to Ray Englehofer who converted the second touchdown.

By winning the third game, the Rams made it two in a row in 1938. Walt Boitano garnered the laurels when he plunged over for the only score of the game, the Rams winning 6 to 0.

Last season San Mateo won the game to even the series, two all. Roblin, San Mateo fullback, plunged over after the ball had been placed on the three yard line after a successful screen pass play.

The squad is in pretty good physical shape after the 6 to 6 tie game with the University of San Francisco Frosh, Manager John Baries said. The game featured Elwood Bernstein's pass reception and subsequent run, John Blakemore's punting and the called back breakaway of "Navy Al" Naumann. The Donlets scored on a spectacular lateral and Dick Sheridan and Kenny Blue were their outstanding performers.

Defending against San Mateo plays and polishing the offense was the order of practice for the week. Bill Ross was inserted at end in place of Herb Taylor who was moved to "Navy Al's" backfield post. No other lineup changes were indicated.

Losing two and winning one the Bulldogs seem to have an in and outer and one cannot predict the actions of such a team. The Rams have proven to be such a team also and so turn loose the wolves.

Boxing Signups

Asked To Report For Work-Outs

All boxers signed up for intramural boxing are urged to be regular in turning up for work-outs, Ted Green, boxing manager, announced today.

About 20 men not in Coach Joe Lantagne's boxing classes have signed up for participation in the intramurals. They are requested to report on the gym floor next week on the afternoons they indicated they would be present.

It is imperative that anyone planning on boxing in the intramurals be in first-class condition when the matches begin next month, and most will need practice, Green said.

Roll will be taken starting Monday, November 4, and anyone not present for work-outs on the days he signed up for will be dropped from the roster.

It is suggested that all boxers check with either Lantagne or Green to make sure that they are signed up for the afternoons they are able to work out. Practice is held in the men's gym every afternoon except Friday at 2 o'clock, Green announced.

Cross Country Run Date November 8; Track Ready

Intramural activities are climaxed next week with the running of the cross-country race. The date has been set for Friday, November 8, at 3 in the afternoon, according to Russ Sweet, track coach.

Winners in the event will be awarded intramural medals. All participants for the race must have had eight days of practice, Sweet said. In order to help students get into condition, entrants may use the main track whenever they are free.

October Program Extended, To Reach Completion Soon

All October intramural sports are almost completed, and execpt for the untimely interference of rain, would have gone through as scheduled, Paul Postler, assistant intramural manager, announced yesterday.

The golf tourney was played off last Saturday at the Ingleside Links. The winners of the play were Paul Pabst with a 71, Bob Epperly with an 89, Joe Riss with 90, and Bob Atkinson with 95.

The results of the golf play can be found in detail on the intramural bulletin board, Postler said. The name and score of every person entered in the tournament is listed, he said.

The softball play was scheduled to have been completed yesterday, but the interference of Jupiter Pluvius decided otherwise, the manager noted. The tournament will be completed by the end of next week, at the latest, Postler revealed.

The Eds and Phi Beta Rho shape up as the teams to watch, he said. The latest revised standings of the teams, and the number of games they have to play, can be found on the bulletin board.

The basketball competition was played off earlier in the week, but the results were unavailable at the time of publication. The Goats played the U.S. All-Americans, the winner of the game received the winners medal. The loser of the game played the Hotel Division for the second place medal.

The cross-country run, which will be run off today, is managed by Ed Reedy, Postler said. The cross-country course is to be two and a quarter miles. The race will be run on the college campus.

The horseshoe tournament will be run off shortly and all schedules will be posted on the bulletin board. All contestants must phone their opponents to arrange time and place, Postler said. Anyone failing to do this will be automatically eliminated.

Postler suggested the 29th and Mission Streets courts. "These courts are reasonably close to the college and could easily accommodate all games," he remarked. Golden Gate Park also has horseshoe courts that will be available to the college men.

As a further resort, Postler suggested inquiring at any sport store. They will be only too glad to furnish a list of courts, he said.

The college swimmers will have their chance to strut their stuff in a very short time, Postler said. An entry blank will be posted on the flagpole in back of the college. All men interested in swimming must sign-up there to be eligible. Postler is, as yet, undecided on the place where the competition will be held, but revealed that it will be held within the next week or two.

Volleyball and boxing are coming up very soon, the manager said. All clubs and organizations interested in these two sports should put a complete team on their entries, he said.

For further information as to the various standings or questions concerning the rules and regulations to be followed in the tourneys, one should see any of the sport managers, Postler said. A partial listing of the managers and the sport they manage is William Bauer, horseshoes; Ed Reed, cross-country; George Malley, softball; Bob Atkinson, golf; and Postler, general assistant manager.

Postler warned all men entered in the cross-country run to see the intramural bulletin board for the diagram of the course that was laid out by Russ Sweet, college track coach. He announced that entries must meet in the men's gym at 3:15 this afternoon to be officially entered.

Free-throw results are posted on the bulletin board and all interested in this phase of the intramural program are advised to see the board.

WAA

Mills Hockey Day Attracts Thirty Women

Thirty women representatives of the college will go to Mills College tomorrow, to participate in the hockey playday to be held by the Northern California Hockey Association at Mills College, Jane Visalli, hockey club manager announced recently.

Fourteen members of the group which will journey to Mills College will comprise the personnel of the WAA hockey team from this college, while the other number will comprise a group of interested freshmen who have been invited by WAA officials to attend.

Since it is necessary to enter only one hockey team in the competition, the college will send a team of 11 members and two substitutes. Those women going include, Ruth Thurman, Frances Baker, Jeanne Arnold, Barbara Smith, Nadia Rudometkin, Carolyn Brenner, Margaret Heard, Fern Shideler, Jezebel Winningham, Ruby Klistoff, Pat Canteline, Virginia Leishman, Jane Visalli, and Edith Wilson.

"Most of the players are beginners, or only slightly experienced hockey players and we haven't practiced very much, and though the women have quite a lot of spirit and are improving at each practice, I am not sure what the outcome of the meet will be," Jane Visalli commented.

Snow In High Sierras Gives Ram Skiers Shot In Arm

Members of the ski team received an initial shot in the arm last week end when snow fell in the high sierras at an altitude of 8,000 feet, Alden Smith, ski team adviser announced this week.

The team members anticipate a trip into the sierras during the Christmas holidays. All persons wishing to make the trip should affiliate themselves with members of the team concerning reservations, as they are limited, Smith revealed.

At present the ski team is engaged in dry ski training, which includes tennis, badminton, and basketball, enabling a person to prepare for the strenuous competition.

Doubles Begin Next Week In Intramural Tennis Sked

Immediate commencing of the first round of the tennis doubles tournament was announced by Paul Postler, assistant intramural manager.

Completion of the third round of the singles tournament was also announced at that time by Postler. Jack Effinger, Joe Greely, George Amenica, Roy Fones, Mell Schiller, Bob Hoffman, Dick Jacks, and Ed Johnstone have finished the round. The fourth series will begin next week, Postler also announced.

Ram Gator Rivalry Revived At Crocker-Amazon Field; Both Teams In Full Stride

Inter-city rivalry is resumed tomorrow morning, when the Gators of San Francisco State invade Crocker-Amazon field to meet the Ram shin-kickers in a league soccer game, Joseph Lantagne, soccer coach, announced this week.

Both State and the Rams have fairly good records. State was slow to get started this season, but they have risen rapidly, and promise to give the locals a tussle. Lantagne believes that the odds are even on the game, and either team might win if it gets the breaks.

Speed May Decide Winner

The locals have shown more speed and teamwork in the last two contests, and should have an advantage if the field is dry. However State boasts of a fast attack, and might turn the tables.

Two tough contests loom in the future, when the Rams are scheduled to meet Stanford and San Jose State. According to observers, San Jose has a fast and rugged team. Stanford is a dark horse, but it is rumored that the Indians are plenty tough to beat.

Meanwhile Lantagne is preparing for State. Bert Korn, Micky Duzdevich, Clarence Waddington, and Johnny Lazar have practiced passing the ball all of this week, and will try to make a few goals. The front line looked good against Menlo, and a little more practice should make the front line combination a serious threat to any defense.

Goalie Has Improved

Bill Fairfield, left fullback, was slightly injured last week, but has recovered, and will be in the game, getting off long kicks to keep the ball away from the Ram goal. Frank Schneider has learned how to defend the goal, and should star in his new position.

Lantagne hesitates to make any predictions about the outcome of the Ram-Gator contest, other than the team that gets the breaks will win.

The game is scheduled for 9:30 a.m. instead of ten, as previously announced. Since the Rams are the home team, the game will be played on the Crocker-Amazon field, Moscow and Geneva Avenues. Referee for the contest will be Mr. Post, the referee who officiated at the Menlo contest last week.

Swimmers Train For Intras As Date Set For Nov. 29

Date for the intramural competitive swim meet to be held at Jefferson High School pool in Daly City has been set for Friday, November 29 by John Hurley, swimming coach of the college.

Stressing that all persons, irregardless of the fact that they be not enrolled in a swimming class, are eligible to compete, nor can a person win any more medals if he has taken first in any aquatic contest.

Training classes are being held at the pool every week day noon except Friday. There are four classifications, namely, low frosh, high frosh, low soph, and high soph, Hurley said.

Final Warning Given Men Before Women Take Over

(This column was written by Willard Akers)

WOMEN are usually regarded as better talkers than men. This is verified by looking at the sport page (this issue is an exception). Our reporter covering the activities of the Women's Athletic Association seldom fails to come through with more copy than all of the rest of the men on the sports staff put together.

Perhaps a few of the quieter members of the men's physical education department had better take notice and loosen up with the official information.

Quien Sabe?

Quite a controversy has arisen over who is the toughest man on the soccer squad. Sports editor Hori mentioned that Frank "Froggie" Schneider was the big tough "hombre" of the squad. The next day a letter appears in The Guardsman office claiming The that Henry "Steamboat" Kreutzmann was much tougher. The note was written by "one of the boys." We, however, think that Micky "Little man with Big Stuff" Duzdevich deserves the laureis. It seems that Michael, who stands about 5 ft. 6 in. has accounted for the downfall of more than one man. Little Mike, time and again, has come out on top when some opposing player tries to rough it up. One is reminded of the U.S.F. Don skirmish, when one of the Dons was knocked cold when he attempted to put a block on Micky. Duzdevich gets our vote for the toughest member of the soccer team.

"Simon Legree" Captain—(?)

Many students are inclined to be a bit skeptical of the physical exercise involved in rifle. If those skeptical students would once take a look at the rifle classes in the new range in the basement of the science building, they wouldn't be so quick to laugh at the merits of rifle. New students are apt to enter the class under the impression that the course is a "snap" or "pipe." They are soon brought to their senses, however, when "Cap" Fred McFarland starts working on them.

Cap doesn't believe anything other than a bullseye to be worth consideration. When the neophytes first try to assume the regulation prone firing position, they see that they have bitten off more than they can chew. The prone position looks really comfortable. But when they try to assume the comfortable position, they suddenly find out that they have to use a lot of self-control to keep from bursting out in profanity.

Action Rests With Railway Companies

Results of a questionnaire to survey the problem of transportation to the college were compiled and sent Wednesday to the two street railway companies in San Francisco, according to Dean Edwin C. Browne, sponsoring the questionnaire.

Action in the matter now rests with the railway companies, not with the college, Dean Browne said.

Tabulation was under the direction of Harold Leuenberger, college psychology instructor. It shows that the heaviest traffic is before 9 a.m. and after 3 p.m., and that more students use the K car line than any other single facility.

"It is to be hoped," Dean Browne said, "that arrangements can be made by the railway companies to accommodate these students at least, and this questionnaire will aid in determining the amount of equipment that would be necessary."

Indications at present are that if such arrangements can be made, the K line will be extended along Ocean Avenue two more blocks, to be switched back at Phelan Avenue.

Detailed figures, compiled from the questionnaire submitted to the students, are as follows:

1210 students take the K car to the college in the morning.

280 students take the 10th Avenue bus.

220 take the 12 car.

220 take the No. 10 bus.

490 drive to college.

154 walk to college.

338 find other transportation means, unitemized on the questionnaire.

Hygiene Students Get Tests On Recent Pictures

Tests are being given to men and women enrolled in personal hygiene courses on the pictures shown to them last week, Verrel Weber, hygiene instructor announced.

All hygiene students were required to attend a showing of a picture on Digestion and the Nervous System last week, and the tests are again being based on the pictures, she said.

A meeting of the hygiene committee will be held this week to discuss the program for the hygiene courses, Miss Weber added. This ocmmittee is composed of Miss Weber, John Hurley and Harold Leuenberger, faculty members.

Airman Callaway Takes First Solo Of Semester

By Hugh McDonald

The college aeronautics program left the fledgling stage last Monday, October 28, when Bud Callaway, enrolled in Captain George D. Richard's elementary aviation course, stepped into the training ship at San Francisco Airport and wheeled into the sky alone.

Terminating months of ground-school training and a period of eight and one-half hours of actual flight instruction, Callaway was the first of the college's flying cadets to solo this semester and marked the inauguration of the new class of pilots who follow close behind him.

Arriving in sudden form, the solo flight was offered to Callaway unexpectedly last Monday morning, when he brought the CAA Luscombe Trainer to a landing under the supervision of Captain Richards. Stepping from the ship, Richards expressed his confidence in Callaway's training and ability when he asked if he were prepared to solo. The results of the flight were sufficient proof of Richard's faith and Callaway's skill.

Taxiing down the field, Callaway awaited the all-clear sign from the airport terminus, and when it had been given, rose into the air in veteran fashion. Executing the prescribed solo techniques, and circling above the field in required turns, he brought the ship down after 15 minutes flight in what instructors called an efficient and skillful landing, if slightly bumpy.

Student observers, due for solo flights soon, harried him when he stepped from the ship with questions concerning the psychological phases, as well as technical aspects, of the first ascent.

"Excited? I sure was!" said Callaway, "but I was too busy to be nervous. My biggest problem was in making quick allowance for the lack of ballast. I'd forgotten that Richards' weight was down on the field with Richards!"

Callaway will receive his private pilot's license at the end of 35 hours flight, and will probably have secured it at the end of the current semester. Planning to continue his flying career in either the Army or Navy Air Corps, he considers the airplane and the Civilian Pilot Training Program the greatest booms to mankind since Montgolfier first demonstrated the use of the balloon.

He is followed closely in his flight hours by several students in the course, and during the week a half-dozen enrollees will have completed solos.

Special Election For New CAB Secretary Tuesday

Special meeting of the Club Advisory Board to elect a secretary-treasurer has been called for next Tuesday at 2 o'clock, in Room 142, Bob Ogg, president of the group, revealed this week.

The meeting was announced following the resignation of Theodora Wong, who relinquished the CAB post because of a conflict in her schedule.

Wong Resigns

Miss Wong has also resigned from the editorship of Cabby, club board publication, and Francis Goetz of Beta Tau has been appointed to assume this post, Ogg said.

To join the student movement of cleaning the grounds for the college dedication on November 10, a committee was appointed at the club board meeting last Tuesday, comprised of the following: Lillian Hoyle, chairman, Jean Spencer, Jack Smyth, Francis Goetz, and Pat Riley.

Cooperate With Committee

This group will cooperate with the Associated Students' committee headed by Jean Arnold, vice-president, Ogg commented, and next week, Clean-Up-Your-Campus Week should definitely see the grounds ready for the open house which follows the dedication ceremony.

Applications Approved

Accepted at this last meeting were the applications for charter renewal of three clubs which had been suspended, Alpha Phi Omega, Beta Phi Beta, and Omicron Phi Pi. With the granting of charter lease for this semester, these groups are automatically removed from suspension, Ogg said.

Also accepted was an application for new charter from Theta Tau, restricted social organization for women.

Action of the club board on these charter grants was approved by the Executive Council at its meeting last Wednesday.

Organizations which are still on the suspended list are Block Society, National Collegiate Flying Club, and Skating Club.

Accounting Students Work In Bank, Office

Rita Weiman, James Egan, and Charles Perscheid, students enrolled in accounting 53, were recently assigned to handle student body accounts in the bank under the supervision of Ward M. Nichols, college comptroller, Nichols announced this week.

Harold Robinson, accounting student also, is working as bookkeeper in J. Paul Mohr's office for the Northern California Junior College Athletic Conference, Nichols said.

New Bound Periodicals In Library Now

There are 112 newly bound volumes of periodicals in the library, according to Marcus Skarstedt, librarian. These volumes have just been returned from the binders and are on file in the college library for student use.

Still at the bindery are 100 other volumes of periodicals mostly 1939 and 1940 editions, he said. When these volumes are received by the library they will be kept in the periodical reading room on special shelves, he added. The students may use these books without any check-out formalities, the librarian indicated.

The list of periodicals subscribed to by the library has been enlarged so that it is now larger than it has ever been before, Skarstedt explained. Periodicals have been chosen according to the needs of the various courses.

"Students are making more use of the library than ever before in the history of the college," he noted, "and we feel this is due to the fact that library facilities are better than they have ever been."

More than 225 students use the library every day during the busy periods, Skarstedt added. This is beyond the capacity of the library, but there is no hope of securing more space for library work until the college gets a library building, Skarstedt declared.

More On Dedication

ulty Association next Thursday will honor President Cloud at a buffet dinner which will be held in the college cafeteria, Luckmann, president of the association, announced.

Invited as guests of the faculty were Timothy Pflueger, college architect, Diego Rivera, Herman Volz, Fred Olmsted and Dudley Carter, noted artists who have contributed to the campus, Luckmann added. Scheduled to be unveiled on this occasion is the redwood carving of a ram's head which Carter has recently completed and given to the college.

Cloud, Mohr To Participate In L. A. Meet

Traveling to Los Angeles today, President Archibald J. Cloud and J. Paul Mohr, registrar, will attend meetings there held under the auspices of the State Department of Education, according to President Cloud.

Under the direction of Dr. Aubrey A. Douglass, Assistant State Superintendent of Public Instruction, the meetings are being held for the purpose of listening to reports of two statewide committees, President Cloud indicated. These committees have been conducting a study of junior college curricula and personnel problems, he said.

Mohr is a member of one committee, and President Cloud is a member of the other. The committees have been working for a year and a half, President Cloud revealed.

"The object of these meetings is to find out what is being done in the junior colleges of the state and to point out better methods of junior college administration," Cloud commented, "and the outcome of the reports should be valuable."

Both administrators will take part in the meetings, which will continue through tomorrow, President Cloud said.

Yell Leaders Hold First Reunion Tonight

For the first time in the history of the college, the rally committee will hold a reunion of all previous yell leaders tonight at 6 o'clock, in a location yet to be determined, Pete Aydelotte, college yell-leader announced.

Present at the reunion will be Hugh Waite, Art Pomares, Ray Berns, Bill Kennedy, Al Williams, and Aydelotte and his associates.

Will Lead Rooting Section

The reunion will get under way with all present having dinner at a local restaurant which was not known at publication time. Following the dinner, the reunionists will proceed to Seals Stadium where the combined group will lead the college cheering section, Aydelotte said.

A special roped-off rooting section will be reserved for the college football-followers as will be done for the newly formed college band. The band will make its debut before the public tonight, Aydelotte said.

College Represented At San Mateo

Earlier in the day the Ram rally committee will travel to San Mateo to take part in a dual rally similar to the joint rally held here yesterday. Aydelotte will take with him his two assistants, Lyle Shultz, Associated Students president, Don White, Jean Gillin, and Bob Wells.

"Getting back to this evening," Aydelotte revealed, "such a reunion has never been held before and I would like nothing better than to have this get-together become an annual affair."

It looks as if at long last the Italian navy (Oh yes, they have one) will have to crawl out of its hole and give the British a little exercise.

It is a well known fact that as long as the British control the Mediterranean, the Axis might as well go back to the farm and play ping pong.

With the invasion of Greece and the report that the British are sending part of their fleet to aid the Greeks and bombard the Italians, it would seem likely that the Italians would have to do something with their navy besides give the Italian sailors shore leave. Maybe it's just as well. Mussolini might as well find out now that his speeches can't sink the British navy.

Nov. 8 Rally To Herald Pasadena Tilt

San Francisco's game with Pasadena Junior College on November 11 will be heralded by the last football rally of the year, Pete Aydelotte, rally committee chairman, announced this week. The rally will be held on Friday, November 8, in the center quad at 12 o'clock.

Steve Sacco and his band will be expected to occupy about 20 minutes of the program, Aydelotte said. Sacco's bands will also play for the AMS barn dance on November 16.

The Pasadena game, which will be played on Armistice Day in Kezar Stadium, will be the next to last game of the year. The American Legion will be expected to take part in the program between halves, Aydelotte said.

The nomination assembly, which is held semi-annually to introduce the students running for Associated Student offices, will be held on December 11. This assembly will be under the leadership of Lyle Shultz, Associated Student president.

College YMCA To Attend Conference At Asilomar

Holding its first meeting last Monday, the college's YMCA organization planned a student conference at Asilomar for junior college YMCA members, Ted Green, representative for the group, announced this week.

Present at the meeting were Dr. Claude A. Shull, adviser for the group; John R. Titsworth, Golden West YMCA; and R. W. Simcock, Central YMCA.

The matter of membership qualifications was discussed, especially in regard to whether or not the club would be open to both men and women, and it was recommended that for the present the group be organized for men, with the provision that a co-educational club be considered at a later date, Green said.

Leonard Gross, editor of The Guardsman, was named chairman of publicity and Green was selected to represent the group at a meeting of the Club Advisory Board.

The next meeting of the junior college YMCA is scheduled for Monday, November 4, in Room 142. All college students interested are cordially invited to be present and help in the organization of the group.

Radio Classes To Present Classical Record Program

Series of programs featuring classical and semi-classical records to be presented by the students of the radio broadcasting class, will commence within the next two weeks, announced Marie Weller, instructor of radio production.

Phonograph records, classical and semi-classical, will be augmented by educational scripts, written and produced by the students of the radio class. These programs will be presented at 12 o'clock and are open to any one who possesses and interest in music and enjoys listening to the works of great masters. Selections are to be chosen from all types of musical compositions so that all of the students will find them interesting.

"If this first venture proves to be successful, record programs may be continued indefinitely throughout the remainder of the semester," Miss Weller announced.

For their portion in the dedication of the college, radio class members will present a program dealing with a phase in the life of the great composer, Franz Schubert.

The chorus, under the direction of Flossita Badger, college music instructor, will contribute its share in the program by the singing of vocal selections by the double male quartet and solo artists.

An air broadcast to be presented the evening previous to the actual dedication will be held at the KSFO studios, Miss Weller said.

Rude Minority Threatens End Of Privilege To All

DURING the past few days several instances of vandalism, which may result in curtailment of student freedom, have become noticeable.

Most important of these is the situation existing in the college cafeteria before and after the lunch periods. (See story in adjoining column.)

It seems that a small, but noisy minority group spends most of its time between classes in the cafeteria. This in itself is all right, for the cafeteria should be used as a study hall during the day except for the noon rush hours.

The aforementioned group, however, far from using the time to study, indulges in adolescent pranks such as changing the contents of the salt and sugar containers, spilling water and food all over the tables, and to top it all, building a fire in the middle of one of the tables.

After these students, who seemingly exhibit an intelligence quotient of 10, become bored with these pranks, they turn to the sport of wrestling one another.

These things in themselves would be enough, but last week the matter reached a high point, or perhaps it would be more appropriate to say a low point, when one of these college hoodlums broke a cafeteria chair.

As a result of this final act, and the other acts that preceded it, the administration is seriously considering closing the cafeteria except for the lunch hours.

It is not necessary to dwell at length upon the ignorance and crass stupidity of the mental midgets responsible for these acts of vandalism.

Let us instead examine the results that their selfish pranks may bring or have already brought upon the majority of students.

The cafeteria may be closed most of the day, thus preventing many students who have honestly attempted to use it as a study hall from doing so in the future.

Students who, during the past few weeks have attempted to concentrate and study in the cafe, have been forced elsewhere by this mob of juvenile gangsters.

The hotel division staff, already overworked has had to spend additional time clearing the tables and cleaning the cafeteria in the wake of these adolescents.

New college equipment paid for by the citizens of San Francisco has been damaged and broken.

And why does this situation exist? Because a small minority of the less considerate and considerably less intelligent students of the college insist upon spending their free moments grandstanding in the manner of grammar school children.

Should this situation be permitted to continue? The answer is obvious. The majority should most certainly not be forced to suffer for the sake of the minority.

The only way to remedy the situation is primarily to appeal to the decency of the students committing these acts, to make them realize the true situation and cease their activities. If this fails, then the majority of the students should and must make it their business to stop these acts.

Most of the names of this minority are known, but names are unimportant. Suffice to say that among them are some of our more athletic students who cannot confine their grandstanding activities to the playing field.

This student problem is one that should be solved by students alone. The administration does not want to step in and clamp down on everyone, but unless these acts are stopped, the administration will be forced to. Let's stop them.

WAA Rally

Coaches To Point Out Finer Points Of Football To Women

All women of the college are invited to attend a sports rally, dedicated to the spectator side of football, which will be held on Thursday, November 7, in Room 136 at 12 o'clock, Barbara Smith, Women's Athletic Association president, announced.

No classes will be excused officially for the rally, but all women who have no classes at that time are urged to attend.

Eisan, Conlan To Speak

Featured at the rally, and introduced by chairman Miss Smith, will be coaches Lee Eisan and Louis Conlan, who will discourse on the important points of football from the spectator point of view.

Main theme of the rally will be, How to watch the game and know what's going on. Such points of football as, referee's signals, the difference between quarterback and end positions, what touchbacks and field goals are, will be clarified by the coaches, Bertha Mae Keller, physical education instructor, said.

"Attendance at this rally by the women of the college is important, because, since they do not participate in football themselves, they should learn what is going on as they sit in the bleachers watching," Miss Smith commented.

Forum Follows

In closing the hour's rally, the coaches will attempt to answer questions put by member of the audience, it was revealed.

"This is not the first time that such a rally has been held in the college, for, several years ago, a successful similar rally was presented. This type of rally has been given at many of the leading colleges and universities of the country and it has been my hope that this college would hold such a rally this semester," Miss Keller said.

Transportation Problem In Hands Of Car Companies

Extension of the transportation facilities here is now entirely out of the hands of the college, according to Dean Edwin C. Browne, and any decision toward alleviation of the problem rests with the railway companies.

There is hope, however, Dean Browne said, that the K car line will be extended for two more blocks along Ocean Avenue to Phelan Avenue where it will switch back.

Rerouting of the 10th Avenue bus line, to run to the front door of the college, is rather doubtful, Dean Browne believes, because of the shortage of buses, and because the early morning rush hours monopolize nearly all the equipment on hand.

Recent questionnaire sent to the railway companies, will have a dominant effect on the outcome of the proposed extension, Dean Browne said. A similar questionnaire given to half the college, showed that approximately 1210 students take the K car line to the college in the morning, which increases the possibility of extension of the K line, according to Dean Browne.

The survey was conducted in response to student requests for better transportation facilities on the K line and the 10th Avenue bus line.

Vandalism

Current Habits May Close Cafe As Study Hall

If destruction and noise continue in the college cafeteria, it will be necessary to close it as a study place and use it only during the lunch hours, Hilda Watson, hotel management division instructor, warned this week.

"A few chairs have been broken already by students rocking in them. It is a shame to have this beautiful equipment ruined," she said.

Some of the destructible acts performed by students include smashing salt shakers, breaking chairs, putting salt in sugar containers, building bonfires in the center of tables, and boisterous behavior on the part of some, she revealed.

"This childish conduct is not applicable to the student body on the whole, but to a small discourteous group," Miss Watson explained.

When asked what he thought of the vandalism going on in the cafeteria, Dean Edwin C. Browne said, "Since some 3000 different purchases takes place in the cafeteria every day, it is urgent that students cooperate in helping the cafeteria to operate smoothly.

"Misuse of cafeteria chairs causes costly damage which is unnecessary. Repeated requests have been made to refrain from changing chairs from one table to another, since it leaves one table out of use by lack of chairs and causes congestion such as blocking aisles and making for undignified and objectionable appearance, entirely out of keeping with college students. We need every person's cooperation," Dean Browne added.

Low Soph Dance Highlights Holiday Season Nov. 20

First of the holiday season, November 20's low sophomore dance will be highlighted by the music of Freddy Martin's orchestra, Ogden Wheeler, low sophomore vice-president, said this week.

Preceding the Thanksgiving vacation, the sophomore semi-formal will be held the Wednesday before the holidays. That date, Wheeler said, will be low sophomore night at the St. Francis Hotel. In recognition of this Martin has promised to cater to the request numbers asked for by students of the college, Wheeler added.

Dancing will be in the Mural Room he promised, which the hotel management has promised to reserve for college dancers if enough reservations are secured by the committee in charge of the affair.

"If we get reservations for 250 couples we can take over the Mural Room for dancing on that night," he said. "The hotel has promised to exclude all but dinner parties from the Mural Room if enough students attend."

Wheeler urged students to secure reservations as soon as possible so the college will be certain to reserve the Mural Room for its exclusive use. From November 4, he said, reservations will be available. Bids, which are priced at $1.66 per couple, will not be sold before the dance, he pointed out.

"Reservations should be secured now," he advised, "so that students will be assured of seats for November 20."

These reservations, he added, may be secured from the following members of the sophomore dance committee: Bill Williams, class president, TR 3994; Anita Welt, class secretary, SK 2831; Betty Sinsheimer, WE 0942; and Wheeler, BA 1008.

Market Street Car Tickets To Be Sold Here

Beginning tomorrow, Market Street Railway tickets will be available at the college bank, Louis G. Conlan, coordinator of educational management, announced Monday. Tickets will be sold to all students, with the former age ban lifted through the courtesy of the Market Street Railway Company, Conlan said.

Pasadena Game

Sacco's Band Featured In Final Rally

Pete Aydelotte, rally committee chairman, and his associates, will present their final football rally of the year next Friday, November 8 at 12 o'clock, in the center quad.

This rally will be held previous to the Pasadena game which will be played at Kezar Stadium the following Monday, November 11.

Feature of the program will be Steve Sacco and his band. "Sacco's band will play for the AMS barn dance Saturday, November 16, and his appearance at the rally will give all students who plan to attend the dance an idea of the type of music they will dance to," Aydelotte said. The band will take up about 20 minutes of the program, most of their numbers coming between the other performances, Aydelotte revealed.

The rest of the program is not completed as yet, but the entertainment will be varied, Aydelotte promised.

Dismissal of all 12 o'clock classes, so that students and faculty may be present at the rally, was tentatively approved last week by J. Paul Mohr, registrar.

"Because of a ruling which allows but one rally every two weeks, we shall not have a rally for the last game of the year; therefore, we will attempt to make this the biggest and best rally of the year," Aydelotte said.

CAB Holds Special Meeting Today To Elect Secretary

Special meeting of the Club Advisory Board to elect a secretary-treasurer has been called by Bob Ogg, CAB president, for 2 o'clock this afternoon in Room 142.

Nominations will be made from the club representatives present, and votes will be taken and counted at the same meeting, Ogg announced.

The member elected will replace Theodora Wong of the Chinese Students' Club, who was voted secretary-treasurer last semester, but resigned last week because of a conflicting class schedule. Miss Wong resigned also from the editorship of Cabby, CAB publication, and to this post Ogg has appointed Francis Goetz of Beta Tau.

"We should like all organizations in good standing to send a representative," Ogg commented, "as the secretary-treasurer will be elected from the group present."

New Charter Granted

With the approval last week of a charter for one new club, Theta Tau, and removal from suspension of three other organizations, the CAB roster now totals 30. The clubs in good standing, according to Ogg, are the following:

Alpha Delta Epsilon, Alpha Gamma Sigma, Alpha Lambda Chi, Alpha Phi Omega, Army and Navy Club, Astronomy Club, Beta Phi Beta, Beta Tau, Chinese Students' Club, Foresters' Fraternity, Forum Club, Home Eoconomic's Association, Hotel and Restaurant Management Society, Japanese Students' Club, Music Club, Newman Club, Nu Epsilon Sigma, Omicron Phi Pi, Peace Society, Phi Alpha Omega, Phi Beta Rho, Phi Rho Pi, Physical Education and Recreation Majors' Club, Pick and Hammer Club, Pi Mu Gamma, Rifle and Pistol Club, Ski Club, Theta Tau, Tri Epsilon, and Women's Service Society.

Charters May Be Renewed

Three clubs still under suspension are Block Society, National Collegiate Flying Club, and Skating Club. These can be restored to good standing only upon CAB approval for charter renewal, Ogg said.

At this writing applications for charters expected from two new college organizations, a bible club and a YMCA group, have not been turned in, but if they should be submitted before this afternoon, may be presented for approval at the CAB meeting, Ogg declared.

2nd Mid-Term Period Ends Nov. 8; Holiday Nov. 11

The second mid-term period will end Friday, November 8, the registrar's office announced.

A holiday on Armistice Day, November 11, was also announced.

Dedication Week

Next Three Days Devoted To Clean-Up Of Campus

Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday, November 6, 7, and 8 have been declared Clean-Up Days, Lloyd D. Luckmann, chairman of the dedication committee announced today.

Clean-up efforts will be concentrated on the back slope behind the science building but students will attempt to clean up the entire campus. All students are requested by student officers and administration officials to help clean up the grounds.

"We would like to have our campus looking as neat and clean as possible so that it will present a pleasing appearance to the many civic dignitaries and citizens who will visit the building on Sunday," Lyle Shultz, Associated Students' president commented.

Student officers, members of the Club Advisory Board and all student organizations will take part in the activity. Certain clubs will be assigned the responsibility for cleaning the campus on each of the three days.

Most of the work to be done is the clearing of papers and refuse from the grounds.

Student officers suggested that all students wear old clothes during the clean up days.

Jean Arnold, chairman of the committee in charge of student activities for the dedication said that "during the past few weeks it has become increasingly evident that the grounds needed a thorough cleaning before the public should see them. I sincerely hope all students will join with the committee in doing their part to make the dedication a success."

As part of the college dedication festivities this week, the Faculty Association will hold a buffet dinner in the cafeteria this Thursday to honor President Archibald J. Cloud, according to Lloyd D. Luckmann, head of the faculty group.

Diego Rivera, Dudley Carter, Herman Volz, Fred Olmstead, and Timothy Pflueger, whose art and architectural work have contributed to the college, have been invited to the dinner, he revealed, but it is not positive that all of them will attend.

Speakers Of The Evening

Chief speaker of the evening will be Brother Albert, president of St. Mary's College, it was announced. Others who are scheduled to speak at the dinner are Pflueger, architect-designer of the college, William L. Kuser, president of the Twin Peaks Public Schools Association, J. Paul Mohr, college registrar, and President Cloud. Luckmann himself will be master of ceremonies.

Following the dinner, a color-sound movie on the New York World's Fair will be shown in Room 100, Luckmann added.

The ram's head of redwood, which was to have been unveiled in the cafeteria at the dinner, has been delivered from the exposition, he revealed, but through a change of plans it has been decided to place this sculpture in the north portico of the men's gymnasium instead. "The administration and Architect Pflueger have decided that since the ram is an athletic symbol, the most appropriate place for it would be in one of the gymnasiums," he commented.

Dedication Plans Complete

Arrangements for the college dedication and preparations for open house are now complete, Luckmann declared.

Speakers scheduled for the ceremony, which begins in the men's gymnasium at 1 o'clock, are C. Harold Caulfield, president of the Board of Education, Mayor Angelo J. Rossi, Joseph P. Nourse, superintendent of public schools, and President Cloud. Acting as master of ceremonies will be Richard E. Doyle, chairman of the physical properties of the Board, Luckmann announced.

In a second ceremony, which will be held between the gymnasium and the quad, the Twin Peaks post of the American Legion, will present an American Flag to the Associated Students, according to Luckmann. Speakers will include Matthew Dooley, prominent legionnaire and attorney, and Lyle Shultz, student body president who will accept the flag for the college.

Music for both portions of the program will be supplied by the newly organized college band, and for the dedication, a double quartet of college students under the direction of Charles McKiernan of the faculty will sing also, Luckmann said.

Employment

Bureau Will Be Established

Plans of the administration to establish a permanent employment bureau and to have it operating smoothly by the end of the present semester were revealed today by Claude T. Silva, instructor at the college, who will handle the routine of the bureau when it comes into being.

Silva, because of his connections with the NYA office here at the college, has gained considerable experience in the employment line, and will work in conjunction with Dean Edwin Browne and Dean Margaret Dougherty.

Administration Interested In Plan

"The administration has long been interested," Silva said, "in the establishment of such a bureau, and this plan has been operating successfully for some time in several other college and universities."

Permanent employment will be considered by the bureau rather than part time work, Silva said, but both Dean Browne and Dean Dougherty will continue to handle the part time jobs.

"In the past," he said, "many instructors have secured positions for students, and now we are combining all these needs from various branches into one employment bureau."

Deans Office Unofficial Bureau

According to Silva a sort of unofficial bureau has been carried on in the past by the offices of the dean to secure jobs for students, but the needs which have arisen from increased enrollment, require the establishment of some sort of official office to handle the job problem.

Final plans have not yet been completed but it is expected that students will be able to receive the benefits of this employment office before the semester has been completed.

Li'l Abners Ready For Barn Dance

By Dorothy Pierce

Dig up those colorful wash-dresses and faded blue jeans, for Saturday, November 16 the traditional Associated Men Students' Barn Dance takes place at Alvarado Barn in Richmond.

The whispering rhythms of Steve Sacco's 12 piece orchestra will furnish the tempo for the college students' two steps.

Last semester Sadie Hawkins and her "gang" led the timid and frightened Li'l Abner's to the immense structure called Alvarado Barn. This semester the pleasure of asking someone to this superplanned AMS barn dance AGAIN reverts to the male students.

Admission to this semi-annual affair is not bought by filthy lucre. No! Just one student body card per couple entitles one to an evening of dancing, entertainment, and good fun.

Alvarado barn is an ideal place to hold the popular barn dance. It is big enough so that students can dance easily without treading on each other's toes. It helps to create an atmosphere of informality for which this barn dance is striving, Ted Theodus, AMS president opined.

It is a typical barn with ramshackle beams, immense doors, rusty nails, but without the odors usually associated with such places.

Surrounding the barn are large stately trees, a rippling waterfall, and fallen leaves. In other words, a typical country scene of rustic beauty.

Before the dance, which begins at 9 p.m. there will be a college picnic and various athletic events.

Student Poll

FDR Downs Willkie By Small Margin

By Willard Akers

If the students of this college were to elect the president today, Franklin D. Roosevelt would win in a very close race, according to a poll of student opinion taken last Friday.

Results of the poll showed that 53 per cent of the students favored Roosevelt, 45 per cent approved of Wendell Willkie, and only two per cent endorsed the other candidates on the ballot.

Of 1120 students who answered to the question "Do you want Roosevelt or Willkie?" 529 expressed their preference for the President, 435 wanted Willkie, and 45 wanted either Browder, Thomas, or Babson.

More than 12 per cent of the students declined to choose between the two candidates, and were placed in the undecided column.

The undecided voters hold the balance in the poll, and a solid shift to either of the two candidates would swing the majority. The poll last Friday does show that the sentiment lies with Roosevelt, however, and if the undecided voters were to split between the two candidates, Roosevelt would be elected with a small majority.

The poll was attempted to see just how the feeling did lie with the students. We feel that the results are a pretty fair estimate of how the feeling does lie. We hope to attempt polls in the near future on questions of national interest, and will attempt to sound out the opinion of the students.

We wish to thank all of the students who participated in this poll for their cooperation and interest. We hope that they will be satisfied with the results.

List Of Latest Books In Library Now Compiled

New books that have recently been added to the college library have been compiled by Irene Mensing, assistant librarian. These lists are compiled on the first of each month, giving the authors, titles, and call numbers of all the latest books in the library, Miss Mensing said.

Copies of the lists are distributed to all faculty members and one is posted in the library for the students' use, Miss Mensing announced.

Some of the better known books on the list are, Historical Bibliographies, by Edith Coulter; The Importance of Living, by Lin Yu-Tang; and Tales of the Argonauts, by Brete Harte.

Numerous books by Gertrude Atherton, principally on the early history of California are now numbered among those in the library and two books by William Saroyan that have just been acquired.

Ramona, by Helen Hunt Jackson with illustrations by N. C. Wyeth, is on the list under the fiction section. This is a more recent edition of the well known novel, having been published in 1939.

A great deal of English and German literature has been added to the library in the past month. Among the most notable of these is The Novel and the Modern World, by David Daiches, and Unforgotten Years, by Logan Pearsall Smith.

Junior College Council To Meet Again In January

Tentative plans are in the offing for another meeting of the Junior College Council sometime in January, Claude A. Shull, president of the Council, announced this week.

"The exact date for this affair is as yet undecided," he said, "but I think it will be the second Monday in January."

Topics for discussion at the meeting will be vocational guidance for the entering freshman, and what the junior college has to offer the entering student, according to Shull. The parents of the new students will be especially invited to attend so that they may be told what sort of curricula their children can and should take in the junior college.

"At this session," Shull concluded, "we hope to have a prominent speaker and some pictures regarding the aforementioned subject, however, plans are still very indefinite."

Coming College Election Demands Serious Study

AFTER today another American political campaign will pass into history.

This campaign has been one of the most excitable, controversial and widely discussed campaigns in our political history. It is good when such a thing can be said for it proves clearly that Democracy and what we are pleased to call "the American way" is still working despite the turmoil and strife in other parts of the world.

Since after today the 1940 election will be but a memory, it is wiser to deal with an election that is yet to come. In a very short time, the students of the college will be enacting a small counterpart of the present national campaign. We will be voting for our leaders for the next six months.

One cannot help but wish that elections around here would give rise to one-tenth of the controversy and interest aroused by the national elections.

Unfortunately, however, the past has proven otherwise. Perhaps this semester, our first in the building, will mark a new high in election interest.

If this goal is to be achieved, it is necessary for every student interested in the better government of the college to begin looking around at possible officer material with a speculative eye.

By this time, it should be possible to know to a certain degree the abilities of the present student officers and determine which of these are worth maintaining in office, presuming of course that some of them run for a student office again.

By this time, those students worthy of being leaders should be easily distinguishable.

During several elections at the college the deplorable situation of not having enough persons willing to run for office existed. Let us hope that this semester we can once and for all end such a lack of enthusiasm and support.

Warning To Populace As War Hysteria Rises

PEOPLE are funny and college students are no exception. They drift along complacently, almost oblivious to any of the important news of the day that does not concern "Li'l Abner." Then Belgian mothers flee once again along the border, and students stampede with the rest of America into a war hysteria that bodes ill for education.

On every corner you can find them talking. In every bullfest you will find last fall's isolationists proclaiming, "They're coming over here if they win in Europe, and we have to get ready." And some who have forgotten that there is no glamour in war will go further. "Maybe we should stop them now," they say, "before they get stronger."

You can still speak out against them. The hysteria has not reached the peak to make all who insist upon facts and reason subject to "fifth column" suspicion, but that time may be coming. And even now, your words do not convince them. You can tell them that we can't possibly enter a war because we are not ready; that our weight in Europe would almost certainly be balanced by other foes if we throw ourselves into the fight; that democracy is not so much a form of government as a way of thinking which cannot be saved by war; that the basic cause of war is international trade conflicts, and that we can never solve those problems without providing an agency for peaceful change.

They listen to you, but they do not change their mind. With the next radio report of death in Europe or impending conflict in Asia, they forget your logic and their own. The time is ripe for slogans, not for reason, and "fifty thousand airplanes can't be wrong."

Perhaps the tragedy of modern education lies in this: that you may soon become "dangerous." You who have learned to search for truth, to weigh facts, may soon find that truth and facts are puny weapons now.

The "fifth column" is gathering recruits daily in the mind of America on the march. You who are willing to fight for your country, but only if you know why and how and what you can expect to win, may soon learn not to ask questions.

Campus Club Crier . . .

Impersonally Speaking

(This column is by John Metcalfe.)

MUCH to our horror, we have come to the conclusion that the days of the racoon-coated college freshman have slipped into eternity, never to return. With him disappeared that all too colorful institution which is called the "college widow." The disappearance of these two colorful characters attributed much to the downfall of the traditions of college life.

It is our purpose to attempt to bring back to the college, a small portion of this local color, as it were.

The first thing that we must accomplish, is to make the freshmen parade around the campus, with beanies on their all too empty heads. This will give the upperclass men a feeling of superiority, thereby promoting the good old "Rah Rah" spirit.

Second, all classes will be started with the college yell. This will be primarily to increase the volume of the students' vocal cords; the louder they can yell at the football games, the more will be won, the more heroes will be made. This will provide enough heroes of the gridiron to supply the whole female species, with a few odds and ends left over.

Third, the whole theme of color will be centered around the football team. So therefore the football team will be well taken care of. It will have a splendid workout every day. We personally will supervise it, if we ever get up in time.

Now that we have the sports situation well in hand, we will turn to the college itself. Our idea of the ideal college is not one where you do not have to go to class, but one where you go to class for social reasons. Professors will become masters of ceremony, and will end the hour's festivities with a cordial invitation extended to all students to try to attend class the next day. Because there is an overabundance of refreshments that need to be done away with, this will promote initiative in the students. The would-be educated menaces will educate themselves.

The first class of the day will begin at 12 M and the last will be at 1 p.m., thereby putting a finish to the old-time, hour-long, and deadly boring oration. Education will be thus put into a condensed form and will be easier to absorb.

That is our idea of an ideal college, a college with color, a college with not too many honor students.

The Spectator

A DEANNA DURBIN picture is always a cinematic event, at least in this reviewer's life. Why? Well, we may be prejudiced, but we maintain that the Durbin films hold the highest consistent entertainment values in the motion picture field. Much of the credit for this must go to the producer-director team of Joe Pasternak and Henry Foster, who in collaboration have contributed most of Deanna's eight films to the entertainment world.

Pasternak-Foster, ably abetted by the charming Miss Durbin, have done it again with her latest Universal production, Spring Parade, which although containing some faults, still can be called nothing but a "winner."

Scenarists Bruce Manning and Felix Jackson have whipped up a frothy but slender story (the film's main weakness), but the general excellence in other departments tend to counteract the plot's fragility.

Deanna has her first costume role as the little peasant girl, Ilonka, living in the era when Vienna was the dream-city of Europe. Ilonka takes her goat to market, is told by a fortune-teller her future lies in Vienna, mistakes a wagon of hay for a hay loft, and awakens to find herself entering the outskirts of Vienna on the vehicle. A kindly baker gives her shelter, and it isn't long before Ilonka has fallen in love with a young Viennese soldier (Robert Cummings).

The story has a complete lack of reality about it. But in spite of its unbelievable situations and airiness, the film is sure-fire entertainment. The spirit and gaiety of Old Vienna have been splendidly recreated; the atmosphere and setting are grand; photography enhances the beauty of the film, and the direction and acting are top-notch.

Miss Durbin continues her sensational movie career with another of her smooth acting portrayals. As usually, she sings beautifully a group of four numbers, Its Foolish But Its Fun, When April Sings, Waltzing On a Cloud, and Blue Danube Dream. Our favorite was the very artistic presentation of Blue Danube Dream by Miss Durbin as her hay-wagon slowly enters sparkling, song-filled Vienna. Here is a most memorable scene.

Robert Cummings is the leading man and gives a good account of himself. Mischa Auer, although prominently billed, is wasted on but one scene. This is one of our objections to Spring Parade—why give such a grand comedian as Auer such a brief role.

S. Z. Sakall, the language-twisting playwright of Its A Date returns to the screen as the baker and a really grand performance it is. Henry Stephenson plays Franz Josef which probably makes some kind of record in screen appearances of the Austrian ruler.

Spring Parade isn't for you realists. It's only for those who can enjoy an evening of light-hearted entertainment in the magic spell of old Vienna.

What's Your I.Q.?

Since the majority of us are weighted down with midterm worries right now, your writer will devote his space to the "lighter vein." On The Feminine Side

NOW that the furor over the draft has been quieted down somewhat and we have ruined our eye-sight and good nature pouring over long lists of numbers to see where THE number is listed, a calmer outlook on the whole situation seems to have been developed.

As women we are more than passively concerned in the draft question, and as women our opinions are of importance to this country.

More out of idle curiosity than anything else we started quizzing various women on the campus as to their reactions on the draft and how they felt about it. The variety of reactions expressed aroused a spark of interest at least as far as we were concerned, and so we pass on a few of them to you.

There were about three general groups into which opinions could be divided roughly: the ardent pro-drafters who feel that the draft is going to make men out of the youth of the nation; the more or less resigned women who accept the draft as a necessary evil; and the group with the "somebody has just put something over on us" attitude.

The Division In Opinion

The first group was all for the draft. Calling up Jim next June when college is out is going to scare Hitler away in no short order. Besides, what a glorious opportunity it is for the men to improve themselves physically and mentally and at the same time to serve their country patriotically, they exclaim. On and on they rant, probably reflecting the opinion of the men in their families, about how the draft should have gone into effect years ago, condemning the men and women who aren't double-delighted about the whole thing.

This group was in a minority, less than a fourth of all to whom we spoke. For some reason it was composed of the enthusiastic type of individual who is always out screaming and jumping up and down with joy when the home team comes through with a touchdown; you all know the sort of person—emotional, enthusiastic, easily carried away.

By far the majority of women to whom we spoke agreed that the draft was probably necessary and a good thing as far as defense and preparedness went. Their greatest objection to it lies in the fact that they feel the solemn and un-American method of compulsory military conscription is rather ominous in potentiality. The idea of men in uniform fails to appeal to them if those uniforms are worn unwillingly.

However, they are willing to concede that with unsettled world conditions and the very future menace to Americanism and democracy, conscription is not at all unwise, but rather like Aunt Agatha's Spring Tonic—unpleasant but beneficial.

Objectors And Their Reasons

The third group was also in the minority pretty much. Those women were directly opposed to the draft in any shape or form and wouldn't admit that it was even vaguely necessary. They pooh-pooh the possibility of invasion of this country from any side at any time, and they hand out dire prophecies concerning the use of draft-trained men to fight the wars across the seas—other countries' wars. Their objections to the "violations of their constitutional rights" are voiced both loud and long, but rather in vain. For the most part they're assured that Congress and the President and everybody else have played a very dirty trick upon them.

Whether or not this column presents an accurate cross-section of feminine opinion on the subject is a moot question. Its purpose was not to formulate opinions either pro or con but to start you thinking about how you actually feel.

After all, time has a way of sneaking past you and it won't be long until actual conscription begins. It's just about time now for you to make up your minds on how the draft will affect you as women. What do you think?

Shots At RAMdom . . .

AS THE FORTHCOMING San Francisco symphony season rears its philharmonic head closer and closer, we have felt it our duty to give you a few brief hints toward a fuller enjoyment of the finer musical works.

First you must know something of the composer's background. Did he crescendo from rich but crooked parents? Was his work influenced by the fact that he lived near a stone quarry? To be more specific, take Hepplewaite's Symphony in a Rear Flat. You might as well take it; everyone from Stokowski to J. Homer Sassoon and his Hopping Hepcats has refused it. They couldn't even make a popular song from it! Perhaps the general eschewing was because no one ever took the trouble to thoroughly investigate Hepplewaite's rear flat. Examine, for instance, his second movement, the Un Poco Grandioso But Not Too Much Poco. Its dynamic fevor can be traced directly to the whistle of the wind in the broken window pane of the composer's bedroom. The window pane, still broken, may still be observed in South Soho, as may be the composer.

ONCE IN THE CONCERT hall, several rules must be made clear to the uninitiated. While the 99 men and harpist are tuning up, you should do the same, by experimenting to find just how much you can squirm in your seat before the imitation leather begins to protest. The time to crumple up your cellophane candy wrapper is when a burst of applause from the first ten rows informs you that the conductor is mounting his dias. At this time, also, peanut shells should be gently shoved out of crunching range. And you might as well tell the lady in front to remove her hat so that you may see the oboe player look like a deep-sea cod out of water.

TO CLAP OR NOT TO CLAP between a symphony's movements is a much-mooted question. Unles the conductor has a claque in the audience to start things going, or looks coyly over his shoulder after the last down-beat, and shakes the hair from his face, you'd better keep still.

At intermission time, the last one out of his seat and to the refreshment concession, is an unmitigated yokel. Once out of one's seat, the first person to venture a comment on the music is also an unmitigated yokel.

Anyone who doesn't attend a "smart supper party" after the concert probably just went to hear the music.

With these facts well in both hands, you may now "talk" football during intermission with no

In your Ram Pigskin Review (?), Editor dear, you stated in regard to the U.S.F. Frosh game that the "Ram's" may be rejuvenated by the possibility of Nauman's not playing." Nauman's record alone is proof enough that he is one of the best backs ever to represent the college.

It may be that ye sports ed doesn't quite know the meaning of "rejuvenated." Webster's Collegiate might help.

• Where Is Lou?
Editor, The Guardsman:

At this writing there is in progress some sort of a "little game" participated in by some of "the Heads" of our student body (no offense to our student officers!!). While I don't condemn "little games" wholly, I still believe they have their place, and that is not in the college's eating establishment.

A question which has been bothering me is where is "Lou" Goldstone and some of his excellent editorial work? I though his editorials and numerous writings of last semester were fine. It was with genuine pride that I read these words of his. Now this semester I miss him like a hunter misses his fine hunting dog.

In closing, two questions may be gained from two paragraphs:

a. Are we going to permit "little games" to continue on our campus and in our buildings?

b. Why isn't Goldstone with us editorially this semester, as he was last?

Yours respectfully,
R. C. M.

Editor's note: We quite frankly do not know just what you are referring to when you mention "little games". Perhaps you can explain this point more clearly.

Mr. Goldstone is not writing for The Guardsman this semester because the work of handling the external publicity department is almost a full time job in itself. Please remember that there is a distinct difference between writing an editorial and writing a column. Mr. Goldstone's work falls in the latter category.

Another BouKei—Orchids To Postler

THIS week's bouKei's go to the assistant manager of intramural sports, Paul Postler. Many thing have been written praising Captain Fred McFarland for his fine work on the sports activities, and about Bob Bush, intra-manager, but it seems that Paul is really bearing the brunt of the toils.

Just before deadline, in he comes in the publication department with reams of copy, and all written in long hand. He also follows up by clipping the information and posting it on the bulletin board opposite the bank. Aside from these things, he checks all the games, sometimes goes up and down the gravelled "Hell Walk" to report the results etcetera. All this he has done with nary a shirk.

To Paul Postler, one swell guy, goes a page of bouKeis of white orchids. We dedicate this page to you, Paul, with our heartiest thanks. Although there may be many more unsung "heroes" such as you, this we know. You've done great work so far. Keep it up. We of the college certainly appreciate it.

How To Watch A Football Game

To all women of the college, a few words from Ramblings. Next Thursday, November 7, in Room 136 (south lecture hall), Lee Eisan and Louis G. Conlan, coaches and football stars in their own right, will give an informal talk on How To Watch a Football Game. Although it may be quite late in the season, we have two more games on our playing list.

Women may go to the ball game to see what other women are wearing (apologies, Meddy F.), but a few may want to know what the ball goes through after it gets into the ball carrier's hands, and what the other 10 men on the squad do. Then again, when some of you listen over the air and hear such phraseologies as "single wingback" or "double wingback" or "spinners, reverses, safety, Notre Dame shift, T formations, etc." some of you may even wonder what they are. So, we think it fortunate for you to have these coaches give a few pointers. May be a good idea to figure on asking questions, too, don't you, Glamorous?

Incident (ally) Speaks

The invasion of San Mateo Junior College by a few of the roudy members of our association brought forth a few things that maybe you'd care to read. F'rinstinx, their method of obtaining paint to paint the boxes et al wasn't exactly orthodox. Nor was the firebug who gave the policeman the hot foot orthodox. Yet, the fact that none of the boys touched the buildings with red and white liquid is ho-kay.

According to reports, none of the boys attacked or ruined any property, and the only things done was painting of boxes, cans, etc., that littered the campus. The SMJC students should get rid of those things anyway, so in a way, a favor was done. All this talk of vandalism may be partly correct, but nothing radically illegal was done, and, well, college life is college life. Or is it?

Seven Tennis Teams To Attend San Mateo Sports Day Nov. 16

By Nora Baker

Three singles and four doubles tennis teams will be sent to represent the college Women's Athletic Association at the tennis sports day Saturday, November 16 at San Mateo Junior College, Marie Richardson, WAA tennis club manager, announced this week.

College representatives will participate in tennis competition with tennis teams from San Jose and San Francisco State Colleges, Salinas, Santa Rosa, and Marin Junior Colleges, she said.

"Because the WAA tennis club has doubled its membership since the beginning of the semester, through the later sign-up of veteran tennisters, a better selection of the most proficient players will be possible," Bertha Mae Keller, physical education instructor, commented.

Tennis tournaments are now in progress among members of the club group and their outcome will determine the personnel of the singles and doubles teams to be sent to the San Mateo meet.

"The tennis meet should prove unusually interesting, because San Mateo has a number of tennis courts and will probably run an elimination tournament and then a consolation tournament for the losers," she said.

Smith Appoints Publicity Group To Announce Events

Organization of a publicity committee whose duties will constitute perfectly coordinating the announcement, either by posters or through the college newspaper, of the various Women's Athletic Association social and athletic events, was recently announced by Barbara Smith, WAA president.

Blanche Noyes, present WAA vice-president, was appointed chairman of the group, with Eleanore Leitner and Antoinette Compagno assisting her.

"To insure the success of any WAA social or athletic event, adequate previous publicity must be given so that the public may be informed of it in time to make plans for attending," Miss Smith commented.

One of the first duties of the publicity committee will constitute the placing of posters depicting WAA sports and social schedules in the women's gymnasium, which will be viewed by visitors to the college on November 10, dedication day.

Members of the entire WAA council will serve as ushers to the visitors in the gymnasiums on that day, Miss Smith added.

Coeducational Folk Dance Program Set For Nov. 15

Coeducational program of international folk dances will be participated in by the men and women of the college in the women's gymnasium on November 15, from 2 to 4 p.m., under the sponsorship of the Women's Athletic Association, WAA officials announced this week.

"All men and women of the college are invited to the affair if they come in couples. No stags will be admitted," Laurine Bergin, physical education instructor said.

Dances of the afternoon will include social and folk dancing, she said.

"Students need not know how to dance in order to attend. Come and find out how. Physical education major students will be there to instruct dancers in the fundamentals of the various dances, such as the Bummel Schottische, Virginia Reel, Captain Jinks of the Horse Marines, American Circle dances, Hungarian dances, and the Spanish Waltz," she revealed.

"Wherever one goes, he encounters folk-dancing, which has come again into vogue this year, so that everyone should use this opportunity to come out and learn to dance various folk dances," Bertha Mae Keller, physical education instructor commented.

Since there are over 200 women of this college enrolled in social and folk dancing, it was pointed out that their men friends should attend the dance in order to learn folk dancing also.

"Deanna Durbin can Szardas—can you?" was Mrs. Bergin's query. "We will also feature cowboy dances, which should make a big hit with the men of the college," she added.

If this afternoon of folk dancing is a success, it was revealed, there will be subsequent afternoons set aside for similar dances in the future.

Rifleers

Lose Match To Post 429

Losing its first match of the season, the college rifle team was defeated by the Post 429 second team last Tuesday night in a furiously contested battle, according to Captain Fred McFarland, team coach.

The Ram rifleers accrued a total of 415 points to the opposing team's 419. This is the same team that defeated the veteran college outfit of last year and as most of the members of the team are newcomers McFarland says he is not discouraged.

Charles North led the college team for the second time shooting 187. Other individual scores of the Rams were Homer Pack 184, Akisma Uyeda 183, Robert Reichart 181 and Jack Rath 180.

Last night the team was scheduled to meet the American Trust rifle team and the prospects for victory were very good at the time of this report, according to McFarland.

McFarland pointed out that the score of the match against the team from Post 429 was very good for an early season match and said that he was disappointed by the showing of some of the men he expected to place in the match.

Fourth Round Intramural Tennis To End Tomorrow

Completing the third round of the intramural tennis tournament last week, the fourth round has already started, Paul Postler, assistant intramural manager, announced.

Postler warns all those contestants who have yet to play their fourth round as it will end tomorrow afternoon.

Meanwhile, the doubles tournament is completing the third round of play and the deadline is set for November 9. Following is a list of the doubles partners: Schiller-Johnstone, Chew-Yee, Abraham-Jennings, McMeekin-Mavor, Gray-Heid, Adams-Winter, Kreutzmann - Hoggat, Hill - Pitner, Hoffman-Hetls, Harris-America, and Greely-Jacks.

Coed Games This Friday In Ping Pong, Badminton

Announcement of a coeducational ping pong and badminton "Playday" to be held in the women's gym Friday afternoon, November 8 from 3:15 to 4:30 was released by Jeanne Arnold, WAA publicity chairman. The affair will be sponsored by the WAA, but all students including men are urged to attend. Most of the games will be mixed doubles for the interest of all. Chairmen of the affair have been appointed as Miss Arnold, Marie Wilson and Ed Wallis. Games will be played on the courts marked on the upper floor of the women's gymnasium. (Special to page 3 by Jeanne Arnold, WAA publicity chairman.)

Intramural

All-Americans Win Cage Title; Four Softball Teams In Tie

Softball, basketball, and free-throwing are finished and have given way to tennis doubles, volleyball, and boxing, announced Paul Postler, assistant intramural manager.

The softballers wound up with four teams tied for first place, and this necessitates a play-off, Postler said. The teams that tied were Police Training, The Eds, Pi Mu Gamma, and Beta Phi Beta. The winners of the playoff will be given soon.

"The Japanese Students, The Lurgies, Tri-Epsilon, and Beta Tau deserve a good hand for their spirit and sportsmanship," he said. All of these teams entered did their best to make the tourney a success, the manager added.

Managers Lauded

One of the greater helps to the tournament was the student manager, George Malley, Postler noted. Members of the physical education department and Ralph Laison also worked hard to insure success.

The basketball tournament, which was over last week, was won by the U.S. All-Americans, Postler said. The Chinese Students copped second honors, the Goats took the show position and the Hotel Division finished fourth.

All-Americans First

The U.S. All-Americans, the winners, were Jack Cuneo, Jack Weiss, Fred Ruether, Martin Foley, John Belton, Jim Fleming, Charles Smith, and Art Fairchild. These men will receive the first place medals that are now on display in the intramural showcase.

Men who will receive the second place medals, the Chinese Students, are Warren Ho, Stanley Ng, Joe Chinn, Bill Hong, John Leong, Bob Dare, and Louie Suey. Members of the third place Goats were Bill Kelly, Parker Wilson, Mel Dropo, Ward Ericsson, Bob Marcus, and Richard Vujovich.

The officials of the game were Postler and Bob Schlesinger, as referees, Captain Fred McFarland, Bob Bush, and Bob Krinkler as scorers and timekeepers. Tom Wilson and John Brady, members of the physical education staff were of great help, Postler said.

Throwing Ends, Volley Begins

Free throwing was run off last Thursday. The winners' names will be published in The Guardsman soon. According to Postler, the names of the winners will appear on the bulletin board.

Volleyball entries are now being received and this sport will get under way as soon as enough entries are in, Postler said.

The cross-country race, which is to be run off this Friday, will be two and a quarter miles around the college campus. Any information about the event may be obtained from Ed Reed, manager of cross-country, or Postler. Reed may be reached at night at WEst 5707, and Postler at DElaware 1878. All contestants in the race should report to Russ Sweet, college cinder coach, before the race.

End of November At Jefferson

The college mermen will perform at Jefferson pool within the next two weeks, Postler remarked. The sign-up slip for swimming is on the flag pole in the rear of the main building.

Postler announced that the college swimming coach, John Hurley, will be in charge of the event. As assistants Hurley will employ Postler and Bush.

The college horseshoe pitchers have completed the first round of their tournament, according to the manager. He warned the entrants to keep looking at the bulletin board for information as to schedule. The games may be played on any court.

Urges Contact With Managers

Further information may be obtained from Postler or William Bauer, student horseshoe manager. Bauer may be reached in the evening at OVerland 7840. Bauer remarked that the horseshoers were all doing their part to make the tourney the best of the intramural program.

The end of the week will see the end of the tennis singles matches, Postler said. The entrants should watch the bulletin board for matches. The doubles matches have already gone through one round and will play the second on November 9. There will be no postponements of individual matches, as the intramural heads want to get the event finished as soon as possible.

Any further information on tennis, singles or doubles, may be obtained from Evard Ellison at SEabright 2269, Bauer or Postler. These men can be reached between 5 and 7 any evening.

State Wins 2-1; League Chance Gone

Wet grass, and a sweeping wind, helped to defeat the Ram soccer team last Saturday, when San Francisco State swamped Ram championship hopes 2 to 1 at Crocker-Amazon playground.

Though both teams were supposed to be evenly matched before game time, the Gators from State dominated the play from the opening moment. Several Gators grabbed the ball on the opening whistle and worked it towards the Ram goal.

Through the dogged determination of Francis "Froggie" Schneider, goalie, and the other backfield men, several thrusts by the State men were kept from the goal.

Finally, towards the end of the first quarter, Bill Fairfield, left half, kicked the ball out. Bert Korn, speedy right wing, dribbled the ball through the Gator defense, and passed the ball to right forward, Micky Duzdevich, who booted the ball through the goal to put the Rams ahead, 1 to 0.

Goal Gives Rams Confidence

After Duzdevich connected for the first score, the entire Ram team played with more accuracy and confidence. Many goal shots were attempted during the second quarter, but the Rams were unable to connect. Then, with only two minutes to go before half time, State scored the tieing goal on a fluke play.

The ball was kicked toward the Ram goal from deep in one corner. One of the Rams thought he heard the whistle blow, so he yelled for Schneider, the goalie to let the ball go through. It seems that the whistle hadn't blown, and the goal counted.

Shortly after the start of the third quarter, it started to rain. The game was continued when both coaches agreed to continue. The ball, and the grass, soon became so damp that it was difficult to control it at all.

Use Lighter Ball

The second half of the contest was played with a lighter ball than is generally used in the league contests. State was used to the lighter ball, while the Rams had generally played with the heavier and larger ball. The coaches had agreed to use one ball for the first half, then use the other for the second half. The use of this smaller ball may have had some bearing on the attack of the Gator later on.

The third quarter ended with the teams deadlocked. Early in the fourth and final quarter, the State lads started their drive. Time and again the Rams staved off the attack, but finally one of the State men pumped through what later proved to be the winning score.

The score stood 2-1 in favor of the Gator, with ten minutes remaining, when the Rams made their last sustained drive. Twice Korn and Duzdevich, with the help of Henry Kreutzmann, Johnny Lazar and Clarance Waddington, drove the ball deep into State territory, only to lose it. Several shots were made, but the Gator defense had tightened up, and it was found to be inpenetrable.

Ski Club Plans December Costume Ball In Gymnasium

Tentative plans have been set aside for a costume ball to be sponsored by the ski club in December, Bob Ogg, ski team captain, announced yesterday.

The dance will either be held December 6 or 13 in one of the college gymnasiums, and bids may be had for $1.00 a couple, Ogg said.

Muriel Grenelle has been selected as chairman of the decoration committee for the dance. Meanwhile, Anna Held, Jack Smythe, Monroe Gurvitz, and Jerry Ryan are making preparations to make the dance a success, Ogg also said.

Taylor Scores From 4 Yard Marker; First League Win

In the slush and mud of Seals Stadium, the college Rams roared through a threatening San Mateo Bulldog team swimming to a 7 to 0 victory in the second conference game of the season.

A select group of true-spirited rooters some three hundred fifty strong braved the hazards of rain and saw one of the best Lee Eisan-coached elevens send drive after drive into a tired, soggy but stubborn Bulldog that weakened only in the last two minutes of play.

They saw an even first half with both teams driving within ten yards from enemy headquarters, each time meeting with solid opposition, stubbornly defensive although physically numb with determination never to let the opponent score.

They saw a third quarter where a 65 yard march was stopped by a pass interception by the brilliant Lyle Taggert of San Mateo. They saw another march, this time from the enemy 47 end at the four yard line.

Spectators See Climax

But they also saw the desperately determined Rams turn the tides again late in the fourth quarter with but minutes to play, this time finally bearing fruits for their toils.

After an interception by Dave Cunningham of Taggert's pass that started a drive terminating on the 4 yard line, the ball was brought back to the Bulldog 20 with first and 10 for them. Rain had stopped by now, but the soggy field kept the ball slippery, and on the first play, Bill Hooper fumbled and Eugene Short, newcomer on the Ram roster pounced upon it on the 19.

The Score

A pass from Jim Honnert to George Donovan netted a first down on the 9, Taylor and Honnert drive to the 3½, and with Honnert leading the interference, Taylor boomed the line behind Izzy Urbano and Wilf Slattery to squirm over for a touchdown.

Elwood Bernstein's conversion was as true as his playing, and split the uprights cleanly for the extra point.

The second quarter drive by the Rams came inches short of a touchdown, when Kenny Hagen and Bill Ross both missed passes over the goal line. The drive started with San Mateo failing to make a first down on the Ram 20. Honnert took over with a 8 yard sprint and added 10 more for a first down on the 37.

Urbano Carries Ball

Urbano carried the ball for the first time in his life and added 4 more yards, but there the drive ended and Blakemore kicked to Taggert on the 27 where he was stopped on his tracks. Three attempts got them nowhere, so Taggert kicked to Cunningham on his 45. Blakemore kicked back to Taggert on the 10. On the first play, San Mateo fumbled, and Urbano recovered on the 9.

A pass to Hagen fell incomplete, too far over his head. A drive through center gained 4, but the Rams were shoved back on the next play to the 9. On an attempted field goal, the slippery ball oozed out of Honnert's hands and the ball was ruled dead.

Second Of Four

Another drive late in the third quarter drove the Rams to the Bulldog 10, only to be stopped by an interception. Starting on their 25, the Rams, with Taylor and Nelson carrying, drove to the 43. A pass from Taylor to Cunningham gave a first down on the San Mateo 48, another to Mossler netted to the 30.

Plunging Warren Nelson gained 6 yards on two plays and another pass was called. This time, Clay Benham intercepted it on the 10 and returned it to the 12, then safely kicked out past the midfield stripe, as the gun popped for the end of the third period.

A punt by Luke Lowell went to Hooper on his own 35. Hooper gained 7 over right guard, then Juny Head faded for a pass into the wide flat, where Honnert intercepted on the Bulldog 45. An offside penalty gave the Rams first and 5 on the 40. Honnert made it first down on the 30, and a shovel pass to Cunningham added 8 more yards.

Taylor made it first and 10 on the 18, and then passed to Hagen on the 5. A pass over the goal missed by inches, and a drive netted nil. Faking a field goal, Honnert passed to Bernstein over the goal, but the sheets of rain made the ball impossible to catch, and the ball went astray.

Bulldogs Threaten Early

The Bulldog's only threat came early in the first quarter with two passes from Taggert to Head brought them from their 44 to the Ram 20. A spectacular run by Jim Clark carried the pigskin to the 8, but there they met the stubborn Ram line of Bernstein, Bill Windeler, Bill Brown, Dick Wilson, Bob Huflagle, Clark Johnson and Ken Hagen. Blakemore kicked 40 yards to the midfield stripe to end the threat.

Excellent blocking on the part of Cunningham, Honnert and Urbano made Taylor's runs look good. Glue fingers of ends Hagen, Ross, Bernstein, Donovan and Mossler ate yard after yard of enemy territory. The whole line was a fast charging surge of brawn.

Runs by Bulldogs Benham and Clark and the pass catching of Head had the Rams on their toes, but the Ram line remained a stone wall throughout, despite the ankle deep mud and puddles.

Excellent blocking by Cunningham, Honnert and Urbano managed to get Taylor past the line of scrimmage. Hard tackles by the fast charging line and Cunningham, Wilson and the speedy Medrano stopped the Bulldog end runs and passes.

Boxing

AMS Schedules Fights Dec. 11

Associated Men Student fights will be held December 11 at the Coliseum Bowl, 11th Street between Market and Mission Streets, according to Ted Theodus, AMS president, recently.

They will culminate the intramural boxing tourney. To participate one must survive the preliminary bouts to be held in preparation for the tourney, Joseph Lantagne, boxing instructor, announced.

Lantagne says that the turnout for the intramural boxing is very gratifying. At present there are fifty men signed up for the fights and more can be accommodated.

Lantagne emphasized again that no one will be allowed to fight unless he is in the proper condition and that anyone wishing to fight should arrange a training period with him or get in touch with Ted Green, intramural boxing manager.

Medals have been procured for the men winning the various weight divisions, according to Captain Fred McFarland, in charge of the intramural program.

The fights will be good if some of the boys live up to their early showing, according to Lantagne. Some of the men who turned out are very good and should make the fights even contests, he said.

Student Leader Not Named; Group To Play November 11

Tryouts for a student leader for the college band will continue to be held, but no appointment is being made yet, according to Madison Devlin, instructor of the group.

However, as at the San Mateo game of last Friday, a member of the band will be named for each occasion on which the band will perform until a permanent choice is made, he announced.

Having made its first public appearance, the band is now rehearsing for performances next week on two consecutive days, the college dedication ceremony this Sunday and the Pasadena football game on the Monday following (Armistice Day).

The complete band roster is listed as follows:

Instruments in use are flute, clarinet, saxophone, trumpet, horn, trombone, base, and drums.

It is uncertain whether or not uniforms will be secured for the next performances, Devlin remarked.

sponsible for the appointments are to be commended for their startling gifts of penetration inasmuch as they could perceive quality in work which was practically devoid of quantity.

But no matter. Let's look at the gold star record of the two demon workers:

High frosh—First frosh affair of semester, semiformal, held at Fairmont. Such a success, class officers cling to memories and plan no further activities.

Low frosh—Announce plans for a dance the first few weeks of semester. Plans not materialized as yet. Yehudi rumored to be the guiding light in charge of them. No other events planned.

Of course, in past semesters freshmen officers have arranged several class affairs during the course of a semester but, again, what's mere quantity?

Once more, congrats. and good work, boys!! They can't intimidate you.

Grrrr.

● Who's The Toughest?

Editor, The Guardsman:

In you issue of the Guardsman, October 25, 1940 Kei Hori claimed that "Froggy" Schneider was the toughest fellow on the Ram soccer team. However if you will take enough time off and see the boys play I am sure that the fellow who is the toughest and the hardest hit is none other than our center half back, Hank Kreutzmann. In three games he has come off the field with a bad leg but because he doesn't want the coach to know for fear of not playing next week he says nothing. We all agree with you that "Froggy" is tough but Hank is just that much tougher.

● Dirty Windows

It is interesting to note that in the month and a half that this school has been in session, the windows have remained in a deplorable condition of filth. It is too bad that they could not have been cleaned for the parents reception last week. I do hope that the Guardsman in its official capacity as spokesman for the students of the college will see fit to apply to the proper authorities about having this condition alleiviated as soon as possible, at least before the dedication ceremonies.

A Hopeful Student

Editor's note: We are inclined to agree with you but no doubt the situation will be remendied before the dedication.

Tri Epsilon Dance Request For November 30 Approved

At a special meeting of the social committee last Tuesday, the Tri Epsilon's request to hold a dance on November 30, was approved by Alden Thorogood, coordinator of social functions, and the committee, Jean Arnold, vice-president of the Associated Students, said this week.

"It was necessary to hold this special meeting," she said, "since the organization had not previously cleared this date through the social committee."

All representatives of student organizations must see the social committee and Thorogood before making plans for an event, so that there will be no confliction of dates with other groups, Miss Arnold emphasized.

"A lot of time can be saved and difficulties avoided if the students will cooperate with the committee in this way," she further commented.

Tickets for the Tri Epsilon dance may be obtained at the student bank, according to Miss Arnold.

HEA Holds First Of Series Of Foreign Dinners Nov. 14

First of the foreign dinners of the Home Economics Association this semester will be a Russian dinner to be held Thursday, November 14, Therese Guilfoy, HEA president, announced this week.

At 6 p.m. this dinner will be served at the home of Pauline Schetinin, 1009 De Haro Street, Miss Guilfoy reported.

All members of the HEA as well as those taking home economics courses are cordially invited to attend. Price for the dinner has been fixed at 50 cents, Miss Guilfoy said.

Flying Cadets

Advanced Students Venture Into Sky For First Solos

Advanced solo flights by second semester flying students were underway last week, announced Captain George D. Richards, college Aeronautics Division head.

Flying cadets Vic Lagerson, Bob Emmeman, and Bruce Bower, enrolled in the advance-aviation course, last week took up 125 h.p. Waco training ships for the first time, and terminated the period of aerial acrobatic instruction which comprises the advance-flight course.

Already possessing private pilot's licenses, and with over 35 flying hours to their credit, these students have passed through the preliminary phases of intensive aerial training corresponding to the Army's pre-Randolph Field courses.

New Training Ships To Be Available

In the near future the CAA program will put at the disposal of college advanced-flight students a new 220 h.p. Waco training ship, of the type used in the Army Air Corps.

The basic instruction in the second semester flight course covers all advanced aerial acrobatics and maneuvers, and prepares for entrance those students who aspire to Randolph Field and a flight lieutenancy.

No Steady Weathering

That the intensive training does not solely consist of clear and steady weathering was evidenced by the two cases of post-acrobatic nausea which occurred in last week's flight.

Bob Benson and Curley Grau, succumbing to the digestion-wracking strains of Immelmanns, barrel-rolls and vertical banks, were seen to describe dubious bee-lines for places of refuge and release after some of the more intricate maneuvers last week. This aerial initiation removes all of the last stages of fledgling flight, and sends the student pilot into veteran post-graduate work.

Other enrollees in the advanced flying program will have made their acrobatic solos in the near future, and will enter shortly on the new period of instruction centering about the 220 h.p. Waco Trainer.

Oregon Convention

Miss Learnard Attends Meet

Mary Jane Learnard, assistant registrar, will represent the college at the fifteenth annual convention of the Pacific Coast Association of Collegiate Registrars on November 10, 11, 12, at Eugene and Corvallis, Oregon.

"The meetings will be held at the campuses of both the University of Oregon, at Eugene and Oregon State College at Corvallis," she said, "and there will be representatives from California, Oregon, Nevada, Idaho, Arizona, Montana, New Mexico, and Washington."

Headquarters for the visiting registrars will be at Eugene, in the Eugene Hotel, according to Miss Learnard.

Prominent speaker of the convention will be Rodney M. West, Registrar of the University of Minnesota, who will discuss the work of the registrar, and his place in the college administration.

"Among other topics to be discussed at the convention," Miss Learnard said, "is that of credit for military service and related problems. This subject to me seems to be one of those more pertinent to our present day conditions."

November 29 Probable Date For Freshman Mixer Dance

Announcement of Friday, November 29, as the probable date of the freshman mixer dance was made today by Jean Arnold, social committee chairman, following a meeting of the mixer committee held last week.

This date, she said, is, in the opinion of the committee, the most convenient for the dance and offers the least conflict with other events. No definite date has been set as yet Miss Arnold pointed out.

Inasmuch as the mixer is scheduled to be held in one of the college gymnasiums, a committee was appointed at last week's meeting, she said, to investigate the advantages of both gyms so a decision may be made as to the location of the mixer.

The dance will be in honor of the freshman class, Miss Arnold said, and will be open to the entire college.

Coaching Staff Plans Proceeding Favorably

Plans for the scholastic council's coaching staff are taking concrete form, according to Mary Frances Malone, chairman of the group.

"With the cooperation of Alpha Gamma Sigma and the various honor societies at the college, the possibility of having an active coaching staff before the end of the second midterm period is not at all unlikely," Miss Malone declared.

Investigation of the relative prices of plaques and perpetual cups is now under way, she added.

"We shall have a report ready to present to the Executive Council by next Wednesday concerning the plaque or cup for outstanding scholarship for each commencement," Miss Malone said, adding that Ogden Wheeler and Charles North were still working on those plans.

The proposed rally tentatively scheduled for November is also being discussed, she remarked.

New Course In English For Business Students

A new course in business English has been started at the college, according to F. Grant Marsh, instructor of business.

The purpose of the course, Marsh said, was to give students who got off to a bad start at the beginning of the semester, another chance to redeem themselves. The course is open to all students, especially to those students who registered late, or who were out for a large part of last semester, and students who are deficient in business English.

The course will be given five days a week and will require daily preparation. Students who are repeating the course will not receive units for it, and will take it for their own betterment, Marsh said.

Election Date Tentatively Set For Jan. 3

Opening of the college's semi-annual Sophomore Sweetheart contest, with election date tentatively set for January 3, was announced today by Elmer Hubacher, contest chairman.

Applications for entry in the contest may now be secured at the Associated Students office, Room 155, Hubacher said.

While candidates may be sponsored by a college organization, such sponsorship is not necessary for entry in the contest, he emphasized.

Sweetheart Reigns Over Formal

Similar to the popularity and "perfect coed" contests of other institutions, the choosing of a "Sweetheart" to reign for a night at the high sophomore formal each semester is an integral part of college tradition. Always a close race, entry is open to all women, sophomores and freshmen alike. Last semester's title was won by freshman, Mary Bartholomew.

Picture Featured In Yearbook

If plans of the committee are successful, this semester's winner will be awarded a trophy cup in addition to the customary free bid to the formal, Hubacher said. She will also have her picture featured in Rampages, the college yearbook, he added.

"Upon filing her application," Hubacher said, "each candidate will be given an appointment for pictures to be taken by Bill Quandt, student photographer. The pictures will be used on contest posters which are to be posted in the halls by the internal publicity committee."

To Be Introduced At Dance

It is planned, he said, to introduce the women in the contest to the Student Body at the low sophomore class dance on December 13. However, he pointed out, details of the dance itself have not been determined yet, introductory plans are necessarily tentative.

A system for voting for contestants has not yet been arranged, Hubacher said, although a plan whereby students would cast their ballots when they received their copies of The Guardsman has been discussed.

Girls' High Faculty Tours College Building

As guests of the Faculty Association, the faculty of Girls High School and Charles Danforth, the principal, toured the college building last Monday, according to Lloyd D. Luckmann, Faculty Association president.

Following the tour the visiting instructors were served tea in the college cafeteria. Corsages were presented to women members of the Girls High School faculty through the courtesy of Henry Schrumpf of the floriculture department, Luckmann declared.

Guests were received by the following college faculty members: Dean Margaret Dougherty, Dean Edwin C. Browne, Walter C. Forbes, Thomas A. Gabbert, Miriam Gatley, Ella Nowell, Helen Reveal, John E. Ross, Edward E. Sandys, Henry D. Soule and Luckmann.

Social Committee Approves Club Ball For December 6

At a meeting of the social committee, last Thursday, the committee approved the plans of the Art Society and the Ski Club to hold a masquerade ball on December 6, in the women's gym, Jean Arnold, vice-president of the Associated Students, said this week.

"There are tentative plans in the offing," she also noted, "for a mixer dance in the women's gym on November 29, but plans are still very indefinite."

Another meeting of the social committee will be held next Thursday at 1 p.m. in Room 133, according to Miss Arnold.

Ink Expert Explains Uses Of Paint, Pigment Types

Sam Greenberg, paint expert from the California Ink Company, spoke to the paint technology students last Friday on the subject of specialized uses for different types of paints and pigments, Walter D. Forbes, paint technology instructor, said.

"It may seem a far cry from ink to paint," Greenberg said, "however, the pigments which are used in paint making are the same as those used in ink. The vehicle which contains the pigments is different."

Because there are many different uses for paints, it is necessary that the paint technicians form different types of paint for different surfaces and areas, according to the paint expert.

New Methods Stressed

"There have been difficulties in convincing the house painters that different paints would serve better for different uses," he continued, "because they are custom bound to prefer the paints they have been using for many years."

It was stressed by the speaker that the costlier paints are not always the best. For example, he noted that chromium hydrate green is expensive and usually is the green used on the better cars, yet it has a disadvantage in that it is extremely hard to grind.

Cheap Paints Much Used

Speaking of the cheaper paints, Greenberg said that the City of San Francisco Sreamliner is painted with chrome yellow, which is one of the cheapest of the yellow pigments. Also, he noted that zinc yellow is used now on army and navy planes, because it resists rust.

In conclusion, Greenberg said, "I believe that in the near future that painting will be taken more and more away from the house painter himself, and put on a more industrialized basis, and I would also like to note here, that there is room in the paint industry for good chemists, technicians and painters."

Students, Faculty Show Art Work Dedication Day

Exhibition of student and faculty art in the form of watercolors, commercial posters, and lay-outs will be held on Open House Day Sunday, November 10, according to Evans Ecke, art instructor.

The student exhibition will be in Rooms 160 and 347. In Room 160, watercolors will be exhibited, while the commercial lay-outs will be shown in Room 347.

An exhibition by Richard Allman, instructor of art, held in Room 179, will consist of Allman's own work, all watercolors and landscapes. The theme of Ecke's exhibition will be interior decorating and designs for wallpaper. It will be held in room 143.

Foreign Periodicals Worry College Librarians

NEW YORK—(ACP)—Europe's war is posing a difficult problem for American college libraries.

Robert Bingham Downs, director of the New York University libraries, declares it is extremely hard to keep highly necessary collections of foreign periodicals and books up to date.

In view of the exodus of scholars from Germany, some quarters have raised questions as to the present value of German learned publication. But it is the general feeling among educators, Mr. Downs reports, that at least the leading journals in several fields of knowledge should be continued for the present.

"With the coming of the war foreign currencies have fluctuated in value, insurance and carriage have steadily increased in cost, and deliveries are slower and more uncertain," says Mr. Downs. Advance payments have been required on serial subscriptions, with no assurance that publication would not be suspended before the subscription expiration date. The workings of the British embargo have not always been predictable, though the interference has been less noticeable perhaps than during the World War."

Parking

Situation Better; More Space Soon

Definite improvement in the parking situation around the college has been noted this week, according to Dean Edwin C. Browne, the violation having decreased measurably.

"The parking space will be increased soon, when the contractors remove the lumber which is near the northeast corner of the building. This lumber has been there a long time and we expect that it will be removed quite soon," Dean Browne said.

At the beginning of the semester there was talk of paving some of the flat ground that surrounds the campus, but according to Dean Browne, this matter rests entirely in the hands of the Board of Education, and no statement can be made until the college receives word from them concerning the matter.

Dean Browne said that most of the offenders, when given summons, deny the fact of seeing "No Parking" signs that are in the middle of the driveway which leads up to the front door of the college.

This decrease in parking violation is admirable and he hopes that it will be improved still more in the future, Dean Browne said.

Check Time Cards For Accuracy Before Filing

Students employed on NYA have been requested by Edward H. Redford, NYA director at the college, to observe closely all regulations regarding the filing of time cards which are due on Wednesday, November 6.

"Students must remember," Redford cautioned, "that time schedules will absolutely not be accepted after the deadline and that penalties will result from errors made in slips improperly filled out."

Time slips must be compiled in decimal system rather than fractionally, the director said, must be made out in ink and should be properly added so as to save time in checking.

Redford expressed the belief that if the few simple rules were observed a worker should have no trouble in filing his schedule.

NYA students working with Claude T. Silva have been asked by Redford to note that he has moved his office from Room 148 to Room 170, and have been requested to take all NYA business to that room.

"However," Redford added, "those who have been working with me hould continue to come to Room 148."

DEDICATION DAY SUNDAY

Gross While Thinking

COLLEGE

LAST Wednesday, several members of the college football squad paid a brief but hectic visit to The Guardsman office in a mass protest against the editorial in last Tuesday's edition concerning vandalism in the cafeteria.

It seems the football men were of the opinion that the editorial was directed against them in particular. They didn't like the phrase concerning the offenders which read "Suffice to say that among them are some of our more athletic students who cannot confine their grandstanding activities to the playing field."

We should like to point out first, that there are several groups that hang together in the cafeteria for one reason or another. Second, the football team is not the only athletic activity of the college. In addition to football, sports this semester include soccer, rifle, boxing, and the various intramural activities.

The editorial was directed at whoever the offenders may be. It is ridiculous to assume that one group alone is responsible for anything or everything.

If, however, the shoe fits, wear it.

Another point that was mentioned during the Wednesday discussion was the thinly veiled threat that the editor "lay off" the football team. As a matter of fact, The Guardsman has spent more space and time plugging the football team than any other group or activity.

We have attempted to criticize where criticism is due. We shall continue to give criticism where criticism is due regardless of where that criticism may fall.

They tell us that's freedom of the press.

NATIONAL

WELL, the election is all over but the shouting, and even that is dying away. Although the future may look dark to the supporters of Wendell Willkie, the country will undoubtedly manage to survive under Franklin Roosevelt, moanings of "dictatorship" to the contrary.

Regardless of political opinion, the Republican candidate deserves a great deal of credit for putting up a tremendous battle. His fight in the face of overwhelming odds is one that will go down in future history books as an example of a man who was willing to fight for his convictions.

It is possible that were it not for the topsy turvy condition of the rest of the world that Willkie might have triumphed. That, of course, is pretty much beside the point right now. The important thing is that the nation continue on an even keel for the next four years. This cannot be done by one man or one party alone.

IT IS amazing to look back on the world during the past few years. It seems like a bad dream, a horrible nightmare, that will end with the morning.

Cafeteria

Watson Asks For Student Cooperation

In an attempt to restore order and consideration to the cafeteria, Edwin C. Browne, dean of men, and Hilda Watson, chairman of the Hotel and Restaurant Management Division at the college, have requested the full cooperation of all students.

Mrs. Watson pointed out that Room 45 has been set aside for those who wish to study during the noon rush hours.

"It would greatly aid in the solution of our problem," she said, "if students could be considerate enough to use additional available facilities for studying and allow others to use the tables for the purposes for which they were expressly intended."

Within the last few weeks several tables and chairs have been ruined and various acts of pettiness have occurred which certainly are not indicative of college students, Mrs. Watson noted; and she added, "unless students cooperate something will certainly have to be done to remedy the situation—we are losing too much money as it is to continue in this manner."

Dean Browne explained that all possible facilities are now being employed in an attempt to provide space and equipment for students.

"All our difficulties may easily be solved," the dean said, "if student cooperation is obtained, "and, he concluded, "there is no reason why conscientious students should refuse to cooperate."

Additional Funds For NYA Make More Jobs Available

All students desiring NYA work who have not yet filed application stating their wishes, have been urged to do so immediately by Edward H. Redford, college NYA director.

Redford explained that additional funds were received from the government allowing a clearance of most of the available unfilled applications and leaving openings in some types of work.

"We cannot promise that all applications will be promptly filled," Redford said, "but we are almost certain that many new jobs will be open."

Culmination Of Five Years Of Effort As San Franciscans, City Officials Gather To Commemorate Occasion

This recent photograph of the Science Building with spacious lawns rolling down in the foreground offers concrete testimony to the work of college officials, civic officials, and citizens which has brought this unit and the rest of the campus into existence. Sunday, November 10, will see the campus officially dedicated.

'Thanksgiving'

Sunday Milestone Signifies Progress Toward Goal

"We shall be celebrating Thanksgiving next Sunday insofar as the junior college is concerned. The people of San Francisco have been most generous in providing the facilities which we have now at Balboa Park, and the young people of this city are now having educational opportunities that have heretofore not been known to their brothers and sisters. The dedication exercises signify and emphasize the progress that has been made toward the goal of our ultimate achievements—the creation of a public junior college in San Francisco which will be second to none in state or nation."

Plans For Flag Ceremony, Points Of Interest Outlined

Highlighting the Dedication Day program, a flag ceremony, conducted under the auspices of the American Legion, West of Twin Peaks Post Number 233, will be held at 2 o'clock this Sunday, at which the legion post will present an American flag to the Associated Students, Lloyd D. Luckmann, dedication chairman, announced this week.

The entire ceremony is under the direction of the college Peace Society, which is responsible for the organizational details of the procession up "Hello Walk," the path leading from the gymnasiums to the Science Building, he added. Alta Clisbee, president of the peace group, has requested that other college organizations interested in participation cooperate.

As part of the ceremony, flag bearers will take positions flanking the path leading to the flag standard behind the Science Building, according to Luckmann, and through this avenue will proceed, in order, all marching units participating, the drum corps of Post 233, the A Cappella Choir, members of the college Peace Society, and the color guard of Post 233.

In the quad behind the building, Commander Richard Johnstone of the legion post will formally present the flag, which is a gift from his group, and Lyle Shultz, Associated Student president, will accept it for the college. The ceremony will close with an address by Matthew Dooley, former commander of the post, Luckmann said.

Points of interest on Dedication Day here are as follows:

Broadcast by the college radio classes which will be transmitted from the studio in Room 147 to the music room in 200, at 3:15 and again at 3:45.

In Room 100, a movie on the college aeronautics course, secured through the cooperation of Captain George Richards, flight training instructor, will be shown continuously.

In Room 136 slides of the junior college in action will be presented.

In Room 132, the psychology department, under Harold Leuenberger, will conduct a public quiz on the junior college, and answer sheets filled out by visitors will be scored by the college IBM machines, he added.

Faculty works and a book exhibit will be presented in the library, and art exhibits are scheduled for the following locations: Room 143, designs by Evans Ecke, art instructor; Room 179, water colors by Richard Allman; Rooms 160 and 347, student work.

Rooms open for inspection will be the chemistry, bacteriology, and mechanical engineering laboratories, and The Guardsman office in Room 134, which will feature a publications exhibit.

Departments featuring hall displays and bulletin board exhibits include the following: art, floriculture, geology and geography, hotel and restaurant, life science, psychology, publications, and visual education.

Ceremonies, Reception Highlight Program Scheduled At 1 o'clock

By Theodora Wong

Formal dedication of the new San Francisco Junior College, culminating five years of existence formerly on a city-wide campus, takes place this Sunday.

With the dedication, this new campus at Balboa Park, at which the college is located, for the first time, will be presented by the Board of Education and accepted by President Archibald J. Cloud.

The occasion marks also the first time a general reception for the public will be held, and accordingly a host of exhibits and program features have been prepared for the enjoyment of visitors to the college, Lloyd D. Luckmann, chairman for all arrangements, said this week.

The dedication ceremony opens in the men's gymnasium at 1 o'clock, according to schedule. Master of ceremonies will be Richard E. Doyle of the Board of Education, who will introduce the following speakers on the program:

C. Harold Caulfield, president of the Board of Education; Mayor Angelo J. Rossi; Joseph P. Nourse, superintendent of San Francisco public school, and President Cloud. Following the dedication a flag ceremony at 2 o'clock will be conducted.

At 3 o'clock, open house will be held here, Luckmann said. Exhibits in art, floriculture, geology and geography, hotel and restaurant, life science, psychology, and publications are being completed, he added. In addition, laboratories and classrooms designated for a single purpose will feature special exhibits, while from Room 147, the radio production class will send out a broadcast to Room 200.

"Everything is under control!"

Thus Lloyd D. Luckmann, pictured above, signified the completion this week of all dedication arrangements, for which he is chairman.

Rally Today

Noon Football Program Will Preview Sacco Band

As a finale for the football season, Pete Aydelotte, head yell leader, has promised to present the best rally of the year at 12 o'clock today in the center quad.

The rally will be held previous to the Pasadena Junior College football game with the college which will be played on Armistice Day at Kezar Stadium.

Featured on the program will be Steve Sacco, his band, and vocalist Barbara Norman.

Sacco's band has been scheduled to play for the Associated Men Students' barn dance on November 16, and he has requested that he be given a chance to display his talents before the dance, Aydelotte said.

"Barbara Norman is featured with a local orchestra which goes under the title of, 'Fourteen Men And a Girl,' Miss Norman being the girl," Aydelotte stated. "She has also sung over a local radio station for quite some time," he continued.

The game will start at 2 o'clock and will be highlighted by several military demonstrations by the American Legion. Also present will be the college band which will play for the first time at a college football game. They were scheduled to play at the San Mateo game last week but rain canceled the performance.

BUT THERE'S TO BE NO RALLY!

As The Guardsman went to press, word was received that the rally scheduled for today had been cancelled because of the muddy condition of the court. It promised to be a good rally, so those disappointed at its cancellation can read of what might have been—but for rain.

Campus Grounds To Be Cleaned By College Clubs

Hampered by the week's rainstorms, cleanup of the college campus for Sunday's dedication ceremonies is proceeding as fast as possible, Lloyd D. Luckmann, chairman of the dedication committee, announced today.

All cleanup work on the front of the building, the circle drive, and the quad courts is being done by the gardeners, Luckmann said, while the slopes to the north, east, and south are being cleared by the combined forces of the Executive Council, the Men's Physical Education, the Peace Society, and the student cleanup committee under the direction of Jean Arnold and Lillian Hoyle.

Most of the work being done is the clearing of papers and refuse from the grounds.

Student officers have urged that all students cooperate with the cleanup work. "We would like to have our campus looking as neat as possible so that it will present a pleasing appearance to the many civic dignitaries and citizens who will visit the building on Sunday," Lyle Shultz, Associated Students' president, commented.

Sunday, Climax To Five Year Struggle For Unity

SUNDAY afternoon will mark the official climax of a five year struggle for a building of our own. With the dedication of the college by civic dignitaries and college officials, San Francisco Junior College will have reached a milestone of progress.

It is appropriate that the college be dedicated Sunday for it is the beginning of American Education Week, the week set aside every year in honor of the progress of education in the public schools of the nation.

The fight of college leaders and civic officials to provide San Francisco with a junior college is indeed a step forward in the field of education. The far-sightedness and clear thinking of these individuals is indeed a tribute to the American system of education.

It is not only the leaders to whom the college owes thanks. It is to the public itself that we are most grateful, for without their understanding aid, the college would still be traveling around the city.

Sunday will undoubtedly mark the most important day in the history of the college. It is the day that we will be officially recognized as a complete institution deserving of the title "junior college."

It is perhaps unnecessary to urge student support during the dedication. All of us who remember the days before this semester, will want to be at the dedication if for no other reason than to express satisfaction over a hard fight, won.

Everyone who attends the college and has the esprit d'corps of the Rams in his heart will be on hand Sunday to welcome our guests, show them around our house, and make them feel at home.

Students who have attended the college during the past five years are returning for the ceremonies on Sunday so that they too may view the progress of the college since its origin.

The college has been on trial in the eyes of the citizens of the city ever since its beginning. This is only natural, for to most people a junior college is something vague and unfamiliar.

Sunday will be the day that the college comes into its own and if the citizens are impressed with us, we may expect greater interest in the days to come.

More Knowledge Needed To Aid Hispanic Relations

AS the nations of the continents flanking the United States alienate themselves further from American policies and ideals, solidarity between North America and Hispanic-America is becoming proportionately stronger.

The people of this country are realizing the existence of the countries, wealthy and full of opportunity, that lie below them; they are beginning to realize that they aren't the only Americans. In fact, we are termed not Americans by the Hispanic peoples, but "estadounidenses" or "United Staters."

Of course the "good neighbor" policy of this country did not spring from unselfish motives; huge loans by the Import-Export Bank do not result from a feeling of munificence. But whatever the motives, the closer relations achieved thus far with the Hispanic countries are welcome and desirable.

College students all over the country are realizing the necessity of the "good neighbor" policy. They realize too that to follow this policy they must know the countries to the south. In line with this belief, they are campaigning for more courses in pan-American relationships and cultures; they are crowding into Spanish and Portuguese courses.

In this college, the course on the history of the Americas, serves as a fine background for historical background, however, a course bringing pan-American developments up to date is needed as a complement. Such a course is listed in the college catalogue; but, strangely enough, it is not offered either this year or next.

No trouble in securing students for the course should be expected, if the course were opened next semester.

Until the people really know the Hispanic-American countries, their culture, their peculiarities, effective relationships with them cannot be gained. Our colleges and universities can aid in this work by means of stimulating, up-to-the-minute courses. B.H.

Impersonally Speaking

HAVE you ever tried walking or attempting to walk through that muddy slushy thing that vaguely resembles a field. Well, we tried it the other day, and now it is our pet excuse for not going to class until it stops raining. It would be a good idea for someone to start a course known as "Surf Board Riding 1-a."

From the appearance of some of these would-be "horseless carriages" that grace the campus grounds, we could use these to pull the students of this course across this field. It would be wonderful experience for those among us who at one time or another contemplate going to Hawaii. Just think of the hard knocks it would save you. Even if you don't go to the islands, it would be still wonderfully helpful to the conscripts, who would be used to the mud and would thereby save themselves much of the hardships suffered by the recruits.

For another good reason, it would be an overwhelming boon to the cleaning industries. No, we are not getting a cut, so there!

Just think of the fun you could have, imagine it, riding to college in the morning on a surf board!

This field has endless possibilities. It could be filled with water and used for a swimming pool, as if it hasn't enough water in it already.

We advise our public, such as it is, and what there is of it, not to take our column too seriously. The opinions in this column are not necessarily those of the paper or those of a normal person.

This Collegiate World ACP

GENEVA, N.Y.—(ACP)—Interesting effects of recent world developments on the choice of courses by college students are noted at Hobart and William Smith colleges.

Language departments report sudden decreases in enrollment in German, French, and Italian, with increases in Spanish, Greek, and Latin.

Both faculty members and students were hard put to interpret the phenomenal increase in Greek and Latin enrollments.

Adding to the mystery is the fact that, while girls have heretofore made up at least half of the Latin classes, there are almost none in this year's classes. The greater decrease in popularity of Italian as against French and German was explained as a representation of continued respect for French culture and a still high demand for German in scientific fields.

The Spectator

A NEW film from Paramount has sneaked silently into town without benefit of much advance publicity or ballyhoo. Because of this, one might believe Arise, My Love to be one of the lesser important Hollywood releases. It is definitely not. Arise, My Love must be ranked high in the compilation of 1940's stellar hits, and we say this in complete deference to the many excellent pictures already reviewed in this column.

The film utilizes the recent conquests in Europe as a background for a story of such smoothness and fluidity that it's a pleasure to behold. Highest praise must therefore be credited the script-writers (four of them) for turning out such intelligent dialogue. Thats what impresed us, the intelligence of the film. It is a far cry above the average product turned out by the cinema city suitable for 12 year old mentalities. Mitchell Leisen has done a fine job of direction, keeping the film rolling constantly. His deft hand is responsible for the ever growing feeling of disaster that manifests itself in the early portion of the film.

But the real faction in the success of Arise, My Love is the performance of Claudette Colbert. This very capable actress, buried among the oil-wells of Boom Town, has her best role since It Happened One Night—and takes full advantage of it. She literally sparkles with charm and beauty. Her romantic scenes with Ray Milland glow with reality because of her irresistible pretending. Mr. Milland also has a fine role to display his flair for light comedy. However, Miss Colbert completely over-shadows him.

The story carries Colbert as Augusta Nash, newspaper woman to Spain where she helps rescue Tom Martin (Ray Milland), an American aviator in the civil war, from a firing squad. The locale shifts to Paris where both have fled. Despite the fact that she has saved Martin only for a story, they fall in love. But Augusta's career separates them momentarily. Then war breaks out in Europe to disrupt all plans.

The first part of the film is gay and lilting—an example of excellent comedy, but a subtle transition brings the concluding passages into the rank of stark drama. The early amusing interludes somehow got by the critical scissoring of Censor Will Hays. They definitely are risque.

Along the route, some very sharp thrusts are directed at the dictator powers. This does not harm the story to any extent for all such ridiculing statements are strictly in keeping with the picture's theme.

Only false note introduced is the exaggerated character of the news-office manager by Walter Abel. The role is a complete burlesque, but is funny in spots. And the picture is about 10 minutes too long. Judicious cutting would have increased the power of the climax. Other than these brief objections, we can do nothing but praise Arise, My Love. It's a top-notch achievment.

On The Feminine Side

SIGNS of individuality keep cropping out all over the campus in the clothes and accessories which the college women are featuring of late.

Mimi Colton, executive secretary, has come forth with one of the most novel belts which we have seen since way back. It is fashioned of white felt lined in scarlet and has a heart-shaped purse attached to it on one side. The heart, which is white, is adorned with brilliant Czechoslovakian flowers of felt applique. Those tiny little Tyrolean figures which Miss Colton uses as further accessories when she wears that belt add another quaint touch.

One of the most startling lapel gadgets which have been seen on the campus is that belonging to Dolly Cusick, fresman student. It consists of a vividly-colored parrot made of yarns in various shades. From the distance it looks as though Dolly has a live parrot perched on her shoulder, a thought which disturbs many of the other students no end, not that we blame them.

Natural seeds of all sorts are appearing as necklaces all over the college. We grow faint when we think of the vast quantities of melons and squashes which must be consumed by college women who are bent on making their own necklaces. Ah, vanity! However, there is no denying that the polished seeds do have a smart, collegiate finish when they're worn with silk shirts or sweaters. Nora Baker's necklace of banana squash seeds is certainly unusual and in high favor with women students.

A direct steal from the men are those natural gabardine pork pie hats which are seen in increasing numbers on feminine heads. Rainproof and practically non-cruchable, they're very mannish when stuck on at a jaunty angle on the back of one's head. Jeanne Kelly, sophomore student, goes one step further in buying a man's hat with very sporty results. By the way, those hats are absolutely fool-proof for unsettled days when one is needed but hardly wanted.

Speaking of unsettled days when anyone will give you odds either way on the rain, Eileen Rowland, low freshman, has a good solution to the coat problem. Hers is one of green and red clain plaid lined in a natural gabardine and has a matching knife-pleated skirt. If it rains she merely whisks her coat inside out and keeps perfectly dry; if it clears she is wearing a smart-looking sports suit. You can't lose.

Not that we want to force our own ideas upon you, but we wonder why sharkskin dickeys haven't come into their own at this college. They're light-weight and neat with their rounded collars, and generally ideal for wear under light slip-on sweaters or woolen suits. An added advantage to these virtual gems (in our opinion) is the fact that they can be laundered and ironed within fifteen minutes, something very handy to know in a rush. Moreover, they come in white and lush pastel shades and they can be monogrammed for a practically negligible charge, adding a very personal and up-to-the-minute touch.

Jerkins are definitely news at the college. Inspired by the brightly-colored jerkins of Robin Hood and his period, they're wonderfully adaptable to campus wear.

Jane Fabbri's crimson jerkin which she wears with a long-sleeved white shirt and a plaid skirt is really eye-catching. Other jerkins in natural, dark, or bright shades are deservedly popular with the local women inasmuch as they afford a tremendous variety of changes in one's wardrobe.

The evening adaptation of the jerkin in silks or crepes is also causing considerable comment in fashion circles. Such a jerkin is surprisingly dressy and tailored, winning approval from those who are not overly fond of frilly, hyper-feminine evening dresses. We are thinking especially of one in black taffeta banded in gold stripes that is really exciting from a feminine viewpoint.

One last word is that of apology to Bill Michelson for undoubtedly butchering our description of his new blue sports jacket. For the benefit of those who have been madly searching for the "invisible red window pane plaid," let us inform them there's no such thing. Bill's jacket is flecked in gold, not red.

Oh well, we didn't pretend to know what we were talking about, did we?

Shots At RAMdom . . .

A FILLER IN LAST

Tuesday's Guardsman quietly states that a dean at Eastern New Mexico college "has just finished a study on what professors do in their spare time." (For those of you untainted by printer's ink, a "filler" is a space-filling device used when an editor doesn't perfectly jig-saw his page together.)

It is unfortunate that notice of such work should be lost among the advertising of a newspaper, particularly when the dean's study is probably the basis for his Ph. D. We would like to know the results of this man's lucubrations; as the matter stands now, we are dangling in a state of suspended expectancy. We still don't know if there's any foundation to the rumor that 9.3 out of 16.7 college instructors spend their evenings listening to the Lone Ranger and playing Chinese Checkers. Feeling that some of you are likewise dangling, we have conducted a study of our own, any relation to instructors of this college is just one of those things.

OUR INVESTIGATIONS

show that trying to "crash" Harper's or the Atlantic is a favorite spare-time occupation of the college instructor. He is an ardent believer in the "try, try again" philosophy.

Our lantern became exhausted of fuel in a search for the instructor who thinks that the textbook for his course is at least adequate. Hence, every summer he solemnly vows to add the second chapter to his "ideal text."

Writing of treatises is another favorite sport. The instructor who doesn't indulge himself in a treatise every so often is just a slacker with no regard for the advancement of knowledge. Sample treatise subjects: The Bottle Fly: His Habits and Home Life; Did the Ming Toy Dynasty Really become defunct in 503 B.C.?, etc.

Doing an admirable job in his field.

WILLIAM PERSIFLAGE

who was a student at Haav'd until the university successfully disputed his aforementioned rank, tells us how one professor there diverts himself. It seems that he converts English into Sanskrit so that his colleagues may translate it and thus test their accuracy.

During his week at Northwestern, Persiflage learned of the professor there who, during his spare time, taught his two pet puppies, namely, Voltaire and Rosseau, to execute Immelmann turns, barrel rolls, and 2-G power drives. Perhaps the professor's greatest achievment was when he taught Voltaire and Rosseau to swim backwards so they wouldn't get water in their eyes.

We won't mention any names, but it is rumored that a local college instructor actually spends HIS spare time working in his garden and improving his acquaintance with his family.

Rainy Day Service "———"

Editor, The Guardsman:

Recently I was talking with one of the ladies in the cloak room, I complained about the rainy day service—remembering the piles of coats and umberellas on the check room counters and also remembered wearing my rain coat to classes all day because there were no more articles being taken, not because of the lack of space, but because of the lack of hangers. The check room could use about 500 to 600 more hangers. If each person who reads this could bring one or two, the problem would be solved. So, before any more rain, please let's get some hangers and bring them to the check room. There are no funds to buy hangers with, so this is the one feasible solution to the problem.

Deplorable—But True?

Editor, The Guardsman:

I think the Guardsman should run a column headed, "Deplorable but True," for such items as follows: Up to the present time some enterprising young heel has arranged to remove from the intercommunication telephones four sets of microphones and receivers, and has taken one complete handset.

It has been bemoaned time and time againn that there is always a few illegitimates who do not appreciate the fine and beautiful things supplied for the general convenience of the student body as a whole.

It has always been a tradition of schools and society in general that we do not tell on one another for misdeeds. In this case I should take a vicious pleasure in bringing about the apprehension of the persons involved.

The second item for the aforementioned column is the janitorial situation. Take for instance Bob, a somewhat rotund and highly agreeable fellow who comes to school at four o'clock. From 4 o'clock til 12:30 he and three other men clean up our building. Bob, is assigned a mere 55 rooms, to clean on the second floor, two lavatories and the central staircase.

That's all right Bob, you may be comforted, for on the night of the eighth you will have some extra help. They are sending two extra men for that night. Of course the fact that the dedication takes place on Sunday the tenth might have something to do with that too.

Bob, for dedication I want you to take all the chairs out of all the rooms, sweep and mop the floors and then wax them. When that is

Southern Bulldogs Invade Kezar Armistice Afternoon; Rams Favored To Win Tilt

By Kei Hori

Armistice Day, 1940, a day for peace, will have one of the most furiously contested grid battles of the junior college season when the college Rams face the Pasadena Junior College Bulldogs in the Kezar greensward Monday afternoon, November 11.

Losing to San Mateo Junior College 14 to 13 three weeks ago, the same team that the Rams defeated on a soggy, wet field by a 7 to 0 score, the Bulldogs of the South, statistically, are rated 6 points lower than the college Rams.

Led by Head Coach Tom Mallory, member of the U.S.C. wonder team that went to the Rose Bowl two years in succession in the early 30's, the Pasadenans have managed four successive wins over the college gridsters out of five games played. The 1936 and 1938 seasons were both clear for the Southern Pups with an undefeated and untied team. Last year the Pasadenans won 10 and lost 2, while in '37, they managed 5 wins, 4 losses and one tie.

Many Threats

Out of the Bulldog line-up for the past four years have come such gridiron greats as Jackie Robinson, now a sensation at U.C.L.A., Grenny Landsdell, Bill and George Sangster and Mickey Anderson, all members of last year's U.S.C. Rose Bowl champions, George Anderson of California, called by scribes as the battering ram of '39, Babe Horrell, now head coach at U.C.L.A., and Mallory, present Pasadena head coach, among others.

Fast Shifty Backfield

Their backfield is full of returning veterans, with a triple threat in Jake Leicht, 160 pound 5 foot 9 inch quarterback, who some claim has the same qualities as did Jackie Robinson. Elmer Holman, considered one of the greatest prepsters of the region regularly fills the plunging full position and Bill Shaffer and Bill O'Donnell fill the flanking positions.

New changes by Coach Lee Eisan and Jack Gaddy in the Ram line up has made the starting line-up undetermined. Ken Hagen and Bill Ross, for certain, will fill the end jobs. Most undetermined, however, is the guard and tackle spots.

More Ram Changes

Johnny Blakemore and Clark Johnson will handle the strong side, while Bill Brown, Pinky Larracou, Gene Short (the newcomer from Arkansas who recovered the San Mateo fumble that resulted in the march to the Ram touchdown), Merle McFarlane and Bill Windeler all hope to hold adjacent positions to center Dick Wilson.

The backfield will remain the same, with Herb Taylor at quarter, Luke Lowell and Dave Cunningham at halves and Jim Honnert at full.

In Condolence

Editor's Note: We wish to extend our condolences to head football coach Lee Eisan on the death of his mother.

Coach Eisan is well known and well liked by both students and faculty and we know that all members of the college join with us in extending sympathy.

All men and women of the college are invited to participate in ping pong competition this afternoon in the Women's gymnasium from the hours of 2 to 4, it was announced by WAA officials.

Ed Wallace has been taking signups of men this week who are interested in playing, while Jeanne Arnold and Marie Richardson have been lining up the women. Students from both lists will be paired up for competition according to the amount of experience they have had in playing ping-pong, it was revealed.

"Even if you have not signed up yet, come on out this afternoon," Miss Arnold urged.

Coed Folk Dancing To Be Held In Gym Next Friday

All men and women of the college who constitute couples will participate in an afternoon of international folk dances as well as social dancing on November 15, from 2 to 4 p.m., in the Women's gymnasium, under the sponsorship of the Women's Athletic Association, WAA officials announced.

"Students need not know how to dance in order to attend. Come and find out how," Laurine Bergin, physical education instructor, urged.

Physical education major students will be present to instruct dancers in the fundamentals of the various dances, such as the Bummel Schottische, Virginia Reel, Captain Jinks of the Horse Marines, American Circle dances, Hungarian dances, and the Spanish Waltz, it was revealed.

Music for the afternoon of dancing will be furnished by Marie Polantas who will play the piano, it was announced. Phonograph records will be used for the social dancing, which will give variety to the folk dancing comprising most of the afternoon's diversion, Mrs. Bergin said.

Ram, Gator Goof Squads Tied In Scoreless Tussle Monday

Thwarted by penalties, lack of coordination and inadequate blocking, the college goof team was tied by the San Francisco State goof team in a game held last Monday afternoon at Roberts Stadium, 0-0.

Mel Chicazola, goof team coach, pointed out that the State goof team found it necessary to impress four members of the varsity to stop his team's scoring threats. The players remained unnamed.

First Quarter

Acting captain Will Garry won the toss for the Lambs and elected to receive. The ball went short and Louis Vasquez returned it to the college 40. Here the Lambs started a sustained drive which was stalled by a clipping penalty. State took posession and immediately fumbled, George Donovan recovering for the Lambs. Vasquez, Frank Molina, and Bob Cavander put together another drive which was stalled on the three yard line. Cavander went back and tried a field goal which was blocked when the center of the State line sifted through. State punted out from their 20. State then held for downs and as the quarter ended blocked Cavander's punt.

Second Quarter

On the opening play of the second quarter, State elected to pass. Donovan intercepted and ran to the State five yard line where he fumbled. From this point State kicked out and Molina ran the ball back to their 20 yard line. The runback was nullified by a clipping penalty called on the 35 yard line. Vasquez got loose on a reverse and it was called back because of an offensive holding penalty. The game see-sawed back and forth between the two forty yard lines for the rest of the quarter.

Third Quarter

Opening the second half, the college goof team kicked off and the ball was returned to the State 35. Here the Lambs held State for downs. Taking possession on the State 40, the locals marched to the five and then were penalized for coaching from the sidelines. Here the attack bogged down and State took over. State put together two forward passes and a 15 yard run by Al Larin to make their most dangerous threat of the day. Gerald Bradley made a save when Larin was getting away on a tricky reverse. Bradley was the only man between Larin and the goal at the time.

Fourth Quarter

Chicazola intercepted a pass to open the last quarter. The college goofs immediately marched seventy yards to the State ten. Here State held. Cavander went back and tried another placement which was wide.

Inspired line play set the State goofs back to their own two yard line and eventually caused a safety which the referee would not allow, saying he detected a foul. The nature of this penalty was not made clear but it allowed the State team to punt out. The ball changed hands every other play during the rest of the game. Each team intercepting the opponents' passes. The game ended a scoreless deadlock.

Badminton Doubles To Be Held This Week And Next

Round-robin elimination doubles competition is being held this week and next in the Women's Athletic Association badminton club practice periods on Tuesdays and Thursdays from 4 to 5, Versa Cullen, club manager, announced.

Scheduled for November 14, is an hour of badminton competition between the women members of the badminton club, and their invited men guests, she said.

Women competing in the first set of elimination doubles were, Ruth Esmond, Lola Coset versus Rita Weiman, Versa Cullen; Pat Greenly, Claire Rowe versus Gert Simmons, Gladys Williams; Virginia Bopp, Blanche Noyes versus Stella Galcia, Margaret Tosberg.

College Rifle Team Wins Second Match, 900-898

Winning the second match in three starts, the college rifle team defeated the American Trust Rifle and Pistol Club last Monday night at the opponent's range, according to Myron Pierce team member. The score was 900 to 898.

This is the first match which has been held on a 75 foot range and as the college team is accustomed to the 50 foot range the decline in score is thus explained by Pierce.

Robert Reichart led the team to victory with 185. Other scores were Arthur Templeton 182, Charles North 181, Myron Pierce 179, and James Juri 175.

Clark led the America Trust team with a score of 189 to garner individual honors.

Soccer

No Games This Week; Boys Rest

No soccer game will be played by the Rams this week end, since no definite date has been set for the Stanford game, Joe Lantagne, mentor, said this week. However, the next scheduled contest takes place a week from tomorrow, when the locals travel to San Jose to meet a strong State aggregation.

"The boys are getting a well deserved rest this week end," Coach Lantagne remarked this week. "After playing six league games in a row, the boys deserve a rest."

Lantagne hasn't neglected practice this week, however, since San Jose has a reputation for tough soccer teams. Meeting State on their own field will be just that much tougher for us, Lantagne added.

Since the league title doesn't hang on the next game, the Rams are apt to surprise. If past performances have any bearing, it wouldn't be at all out of order for the locals to dump the highly touted San Jose eleven. The odds are against it, however, and it would take a highly inspired team to turn the trick.

Bert Korn, Micky Duzdevich, and Johnny Lazar, have been getting the publicity throughout the league season, but they have consistently played hard for the Rams. Clarence Waddington, left wing, has played 90 minute ball all season, yet has been neglected when it came time to hand out the compliments. Waddington was one of the outstanding men in the Menlo game, and broke the ice by scoring the first goal for the Rams.

The Great Decision—Or Why George Didn't Do It

IN the college, State goof squad encounter which was a 0-0 deadlock, a little incident occurred which cost the college Lambs a score. During the second quarter, George Donovan snagged a pass belonging to the opposition (for shame, George) and spurted down the sidelines. As he squirmed past the players, he felt a tug and a snap at his side, then felt something sag. His pants—they were slipping, sure as h——l. Undecided for 15 yards, George felt that personal humility was greater than school spirit, so he saved his pants, thus fumbling on the 5 yard line. What would YOU have done?

Inviting students of the college to a new session at Winterland, the officials of the rink announced a speed session to be held every Thursday, starting November 7. (That was yesterday.) Races with local and coast champions taking part will feature the session, officials said, and invited members of the college skating class to compete. The rink is the only one in the city big enough to hold the session; and several practice sessions have already been held. Having met with approval, the session is now open to the public. Come, lads, surely there is someone in the college good enough to take these guys.

Rejuvenated . . . To render young again. Synonymous . . . Restoration, renovation, reanimation, reorganization, etc.

Miss Schmultze, take a letter. To D.W. and L.B. who wrote to the Rams Horn, November 5 issue. Dear D.W. and L.B. We heartily agree with you in saying that Al Nauman is one of the best players on this year's squad. Perhaps you (and your fellow contemporaries, bless 'em) took us wrong when we said "the Rams may be rejuvenated because of Nauman's not playing." According to Webster, Crabbe, Roget and a few other better known men of words, we may say that there is a possibility of (synonym for "may") the Rams being reorganized (synonym for "rejuvenated") because of Nauman's not playing. So what? So just this. Let Al do his own beefing. He's the only one that has a right to. We advise you to stick to your singing, D., if that's what you call it. Sincerely, Kei Hori, sports ed., The Guardsman. What a waste of time and energy!!! Okay, Schmultzie, send it away . . . but quick. Let it never be said that our life is dull.

Thank de Lawd, conscription hasn't laid its paw on our football squad—yet. With the loss of fullback Joe Jensen, No. 70 on the roster, and the uncertainty of Navy Al Nauman—both men now in the Naval Reserves, all we have to do now is lose our coach. And Herb Taylor. And Ken Hagen. And Bill Windeler. And a few more other guys. Say about 35 more. Then everything will be swell. Just like the football team at Chicago University. (They ain't got none, G.)

We love open letters. They're so naive. Or are they? Take a letter to page 1, Miss Schmultze. Dear Column 1, page 1—That's you, Wild Thinker. In your Oct. 29 issue, you say you have started an eddytorial on Why Girl Fren's are to necessary to editors. Can you fix it so that it will include Sports Editors too? Maybe you can find us a "G.F." (as you so subtly call them things). Sign it and mail it immediately, Schmuzie, ol' kid.

Softball Playoffs Tuesday, Wednesday To Decide Winner

Weather permitting, the intramural softball playoffs will be held next Tuesday and Wednesday, according to Paul Postler, assistant intramural manager.

The four teams which finished first in the regular season, Police Training, The Eds, Beta Phi Beta, and Pi Mu Gamma, will playoff the tie.

A meeting of the softball managers and captains will be held in the men's gym office this afternoon at 3:15 o'clock. At that time a drawing will be held to determine the opposing teams in the playoff.

Dates for the completion of both singles and doubles tennis tournaments have been extended for two additional days, Postler announced. Men who fail to complete their matches on time will be dropped from the tournament, he added. Eight men have been dropped for failure to cooperate and play their scheduled matches, Postler revealed.

Cross-Country Race Today

The long-awaited cross-country race will take place at 3 o'clock this afternoon, Postler said. All participants are reminded to report to Russ Sweet, track coach, before the race. Students who plan to enter the race, but have failed to sign up, may do so today at the bulletin board on the flag pole at the top of the path leading to the gyms.

The race will be two and one-quarter miles, and the course has been laid around the campus. The first three men to place in the race, will receive medals, according to how they place in the race.

Boxing is now under full sway, Postler said. Under the help of managers Ben Krinsky and Ted Green, Joseph Lantagne, boxing instructor, is gradually getting the participants in shape to compete in the boxing championships, scheduled to take place in approximately three weeks.

All students planning to enter the swimming events are urged to contact John Hurley, swimming coach, within the next day or two. The swimming events are scheduled to take place in a week or two, Postler said. For further developments in the swimming program, students are requested to watch the intramural bulletin board at the north of the main entrance.

Minor Events Underway

Postler requests more signups for the volleyball tourney which is getting under way. According to Postler, 6 or 7 men may participate on a team. Those interested are asked to contact Postler by phone, DElaware 1878, or sign up at the flag pole board.

Horseshoe contestants are warned to hurry up in playing off their tournaments, as the second round is drawing to a close.

Ski, Art Clubs To Confer On Dec. 6 Costume Dance

Slated to be taken under discussion at the next Tuesday meeting of the ski and art clubs is the preparation for a costume dance, according to Bob Ogg, ski club president.

The meeting will take place on Tuesday, November 12, in Room 142 at 4 o'clock, Ogg said, and the dance is planned for Friday night, December 6. It is to be held in the women's gymnasium, and dancing will be from 9 to 12 p.m.

Bids for the affair are now on sale at $1.00 a couple, Ogg declared. Bids may be obtained by contacting Anna Held, Jerry Ryan, Jack Smythe or Monroe Gurvitz.

The dance, which is to be under the management of the ski club, promises to be a success, Ogg revealed. "Many student have already shown interest in the costume dance," he said.

As yet, there are no definite plans except the date, time and place, Ogg announced.

Low Sophomore Hotel Night Nov. 20; Martin To Play

With the November 20 Low Sophomore Night at the St. Francis Hotel less than two weeks away, advisability of securing early reservations for the affair was stressed today by low sophomore vice-president, Ogden Wheeler.

Use of the Mural Room by the college on Low Sophomore Night has been definitely arranged he said, adding that upon the securing of 250 reservations the hotel has agreed to turn the entire room over to the college on that night.

Emphasizing the fact that bids will not be sold until the night of the dance, Wheeler said, "It is not necessary to pay any money whatsoever until November 20. Students should, however, secure their reservations immediately so they will be assured of good tables. The sooner the reservation is obtained, the better will be the location of the table." The bids are priced at $1.66 per couple.

Thanksgiving Decorations

The Mural Room will be decorated in keeping with the Thanksgiving theme of the dance, he said with dancing beginning at 9 o'clock, to music furnished by Freddy Martin's orchestra. "Midterms will all be over, and a four-day vacation will be ahead, so students will be able to have a really 'good' time," Wheeler said. "The low price of $1.66 makes it possible for all students to attend."

FREDDY MARTIN

Dance Committee

Restricted social organizations may reserve special tables if applications are made soon enough, he said. Organizations desiring special reservations should contact Bill Williams, class president, or Wheeler, so the necessary arrangements can be made, Wheeler said.

Students may secure reservations it was announced, from the following members of the sophomore dance committee: Williams, TR 3994; Anita Welt, SK 2831; Betty Sinsheimer, WE 0942; and Wheeler, BA 1005.

Big Game Night

Tri Epsilon Dance Nov. 30

Using big game night as the theme, Tri Epsilon social organization will hold a semi-formal dance November 30 at the Crystal Springs Country Club, organization members announced today.

Tickets for the dance are selling at $1.50 per couple and can be obtained from any member of the organization.

Steve Sacco and his orchestra will play for the affair. Dancing will be from 9 to 1. Sacco's band has also been engaged to play for the AMS barn dance, and is scheduled to appear at the rally this morning. He has a band of 13 pieces and a vocalist.

According to members of the group, "We feel that there are many students who would like to celebrate the big game but do not wish to spend a great deal of money doing so. As far as we know $1.50 is the most economical price for any affair in the bay area on that night."

Crystal Springs Contry Club is located about 15 miles from San Francisco on the peninsula and is easily accessible by automobile.

Students desiring bids to the dance should secure them as soon as possible as there is only a limited number available.

Jeanne Spencer Elected CAB Secretary-Treasurer

Jeanne Spencer, member of the Club Advisory Board, was elected secretary-treasurer of the group in a special election which was held last Tuesday afternoon.

Miss Spencer, representative of the newly chartered sorority, Theta Tau, replaces Theodora Wong, who was voted to the office last semester, but resigned last week because of a conflicting class schedule.

Ada Louise Comstock, president of Radcliffe College, was the first dean of women at the University of Minnesota.

Gingham, Jeans Day To Be Held Next Friday

An Associated Men Students gingham and jeans day will be held next Friday, November 15, in order to create spirit for the AMS barn dance to be held the next day, Saturday, November 16, Ted Theodus, AMS president, announced this week.

"It is hoped that every woman student will dress in gingham, and men in sport jeans all day Friday," he added.

Planned for the afternoon of the barn dance is a baseball game open to all who wish to play, Theodus remarked.

"I would like to again ask that the college students plan to make a picnic of the barn dance affair. Come over about 4 p.m., bring a lunch with you, and we will provide some refreshments and entertainment," he remarked.

Early in the evening, after everyone has eaten, there wll be a bonfire, Theodus reported. He has also planned to have a record machine to furnish music from 4:30 to 8:30 p.m.

"In case of rain, our activities for the afternoon will be held in Alvarado Barn," he added.

Dancing will be from 9 to 12 p.m. to the music of Steve Sacco and his 12 piece orchestra, according to Theodus.

Mid-Term Period Ends Today; Holidays Given

November 8 is the end of the second midterm period, the registrar's office announced.

November 11, Armistice Day, is a school holiday.

November 20, 21, and 22 are school holidays. The 20th is the Teacher's Institute meeting. The other two days are for Thanksgiving.

Because of these holidays, The Guardsman will not be published November 12, 19, 22, and 26, but will appear November 15 and 29.

While Thinking

developments that have occurred during this very brief space of time.

There was the Munich pact and "peace in our time." Now that phrase for which Chamberlain was cheered sound ironic and harshly amusing.

Then in rapid succession came the fall of Czechoslovakia, the invasion of Poland, the declaration of war by England and France, the invasion of Norway and Denmark, the defeat of Holland and the invasion of Belgium.

We remember that in the United States, these matters didn't seem so terribly dangerous at the time. A strange lethargy seemed to have settled over all countries except England.

Then came the awakening, the attack on France and the incredible swiftness with which the French bowed before the Nazi might.

It is this fall of France that makes the entire world scene appear in the light of a nightmare. Upon thinking back upon the world before the advent of Hitler, it sounds as if someone had been reading a highly sensational fiction book.

Now with the battle of England still raging, and the liberty of still other nations being threatened, the book has become a reality.

It is perhaps the demise of France and the Battle of England that awoke the people of the United States to the stark reality about them. Regardless of what was responsible for the awakening, it is fairly obvious by this time that the nation is awake. Within the space of months, the United States has, with hardly a qualm, overthrown two traditions that have existed always in the 150 years of the nation—peacetime conscription, and the third term president.

These facts coupled with the conflict raging in the rest of the so-called civilized world should bring home to us that we must stay awake, always virile, always vigilant.

Sweetheart Contest Looms; Formal Date On Saturday Night For First Time

Hardest fought of all college elections, the race for the Sophomore Sweetheart crown opened this semester with possibilities of a trophy cup being awarded the winner.

If plans of the contest committee are approved, the winner will be presented with the cup in addition to the customary free bid to the High Sophomore formal, Elmer Hubacher, committee chairman, announced.

The winner's picture will also be given a place in Rampages, the college yearbook, he added.

Selected through votes of the student body, holder of the Sophomore Sweetheart title rules over the events of Sophomore Week, climaxing her reign by attendance at the High Soph Formal.

Custom of electing a Soph Sweetheart was inaugurated during the Fall, 1938 semester. Six girls competed in the initial contest which was open only to sophomores. Dixie McCormick was the first holder of the title. The next semester's contest was won by Muriel Nolan, who relinquished it the following fall to Muriel Grenelle. By this time, the competition had ben opened to women of the entire college, and had become an integral part of Sophomore Week with Mary Bartholomew, freshman, who captured last semester's Sweetheart crown.

This semester's will be the first contest in which a trophy cup has been awarded the winner. All past winners have received free bids to the Sophomore Formal.

Tentative date for election of the Soph Sweetheart has been set for January 3, Hubacher said. However the method of balloting has not yet been determined, he added.

For the first time in its history, the high sophomore formal will be held on a Saturday night, Alden Thorogood, class president, said today.

A "trend" of nearly 5 to 1 in favor of the Saturday date as against the traditional week night was indicated by the results of a recent student questionnaire on the subject taken by sophomore officers, Thorogood said.

Holding the affair on a week end night was claimed by its proponents to be superior to a week night because no one has to get up early on Sunday, and there would be more time to get ready for the dance.

Date of the formal will be January 11, Thorogood said. The California Country Club, scene of last semester's formal, has also been secured for this semester's dance, he said.

Present arrangements indicate that the sale of bids will necessarily be limited to 150, Thorogood said. Price of bids has been set at $1.25.

No orchestra has been selected as yet, but arrangements for auditioning orchestras are being made, he added. Any student orchestras interested in auditioning should leave dates of practice in the student body office, Room 155, Thorogood said.

Benny Osterbaan, great Michigan end, was named to the official all-American three consecutive years.

Frosh Bid Goodbye To 'Hello' Theme

By Eve Burkey

Low freshmen who have been shining up their frosh buttons in shy anticipation of the long-promised frosh "mixer" might as well let them rust.

They're not going to need them.

A lot of things, including two midterms, have happened since the idea of a dance to foster acquaintance among old and new students was first conceived during the early days of this semester.

Freshmen officers admit it's getting rather late in the semester for a "hello" dance. They figure if new students have survived two midterms they've gotten acquainted the hard way, but nevertheless they're acquainted.

So they've given the mixer a face lifting. Just what its theme will be is subject to alteration but right now the mixer committee thinks it will be on the rustic side. Gingham and jeans will be the order of the day, they say.

The date of the mixer—it can still be referred to figuratively as that—has been shoved up from "tentatively the 29th of November" to "tentatively the 15th of November."

That's all.

All Band Members Asked To Attend Rehearsal Today

Because the college band is scheduled to perform on two successive days next week, the dedication this Sunday and the Armistice Day game with Pasadena on Monday, Madison Devlin, leader of the group, requested that all students who have signed up be present at this afternoon's rehearsal at 4:15.

Tryouts for student leader will continue, Devlin said, but no appointment will be made probably for a few weeks. "It takes time to build up a band," he commented, "and I would like the students to have more experience before any definite places be assigned."

Although the band had appeared to perform for the first time at the San Mateo game last Friday, the group did not play because of the rain.

Students, Advisers Confer About Grades November 19

Students will meet with their advisers about deficiency notices, November 19, at 1 p.m., and all classes at this hour will be excused, J. Paul Mohr, registrar, announced this week.

"All students should confer with their advisers at this time," he said, "and receive their 'cinch' notices, if any."

It was also noted by Mohr, that these notices would be sent home if the students failed to pick them up at the appointed time.

Action Football Shots May Still Be Submitted

Action shots of football games may still be submitted to the photography contest for Rampages, college yearbook, according to Lillian Hoyle, publicity chairman for the publication. The pictures may be any size as long as the negative is submitted with it, Miss Hoyle said.

There has not been a great deal of cooperation with this contest from the students of the college, Miss Hoyle announced. The reason for this is believed to be the fact that all the football games to date have been at night and are difficult to photograph, she added.

The game Monday with Pasadena Junior College should afford students interested in photography a chance to get pictures, as this game will be held in the afternoon. The pictures may be turned in to the Associated Students office, Room 155, Miss Hoyle said.

Alvarado Barn, where the gaiety will center tomorrow afternoon and evening at the traditional AMS barn dance, is pictured at top. Note that the barn is still standing after last year's barn dance.

The tables where voracious students may partake of the refreshments planned by Ted Theodus, AMS president, are pictured at center.

So nature lovers won't be offended, the terrain around Alvarado Barn comes specially equipped with scenic walks by points of rustic beauty like that pictured at bottom.

Hillbilly Dress Creates Spirit For Tomorrow's AMS Barn Dance

Tomorrow night at 9 p.m. the traditional semi-annual Associated Men Student's barn dance will take place at Alvarado Barn in Richmond, according to Ted Theodus, AMS president.

Today is the AMS gingham-and-jeans day as announced by Theodus in last Friday's issue of The Guardsman. All students were requested to wear this informal attire in order to create spirit for the barn dance.

"Actual activities for the barn dance will begin about 4:30 p.m. with a baseball game," Theodus reminded. "We would like to have the students make a picnic of the affair. Bring your lunches and we will serve refreshments."

Later in the evening there will be a bonfire. Theodus has also planned to have a record machine to furnish music from 4:30 to 8:30 p.m.

"Steve Sacco and his 12 piece orchestra will play for the dance. He is considered the best non-union band in San Francisco. He calls his style "whispering rhythms," and it is very novel," Theodus said.

Admission to this affair is one student body card per couple, he announced.

"For those students who are attending this affair, here are a few directions on how to get to Alvarado Barn. After crossing the bridge, they should follow the Eastshore Highway to San Pablo and then to the Richmond sign.

Nine blocks past this sign is McBride Avenue, and a right turn should be made at this point. Then they should continue along McBride for an approximate one-half mile, until they reach the barn," Theodus directed.

Ted Theodus

This affair is usually the largest social activity the college holds, Theodus said. An expected 2500 students will attend this barn dance.

"Students are warned not to lend their students body cards as there will be an identification committee posted at the door," Ed Hardies, judicial committee chairman, stressed this week.

Hotel Night

Low Soph Dance Wednesday Open To Everyone

Donning its "best," the college will celebrate Low Sophomore Night next Wednesday by dancing to the smooth strains of Freddy Martin's orchestra, playing in the St. Francis Hotel's famed Mural Room.

Dancing will begin at 9 p.m., and, according to low sophomore vice-president, Ogden Wheeler, "Everybody's invited!"

Stressing the fact that the affair is open to the entire college, Wheeler added, "You do not need to own an Associated Students card in order to attend. Students of the college are perfectly welcome to bring outsiders just so long as their reservations are taken through the college representatives."

Representaives Take Reservations

Bids, priced at $1.66 will not be sold until the night of the dance, he said. "However," he added, "all students who intend purchasing bids should secure reservations from a campus representative immediately in order to be assured of receiving good tables. No money will be needed until the night of the dance."

Several college organizations have reserved special tables for Wednesday's affair, Wheeler said. "Any other organizations desiring special reservations should contact either Bill Williams, class president, or myself as soon as possible. 'First come, first serve,' and the sooner the reservations are made the better will be the tables."

Midterm End

"Midterms will be all over," he reminded, "and a four-day holiday will be ahead, so we will be able to have a really good time."

Marking the first semiformal affair in the history of the low sophomore class, Wednesday's dance is hoped by its sponsors to be the inauguration of what will become class tradition.

"Semiformal" Explained

"Semiformal means that the women dress in either street or formals, and the men wear business suits," Wheeler pointed out.

Reservations it was announced, may be obtained from the following students: Williams, TR 3994; Anita Welt, SK 2831; Betty Sinsheimer, WE 0942; and Wheeler, BA 1005.

Debate Team Plays Host To Collegiate Debaters

As hosts to intercollegiate debaters, members of the college debating team will entertain visitors from various colleges tomorrow on this campus, Lloyd D. Luckmann, debate coach, said this week.

At the 10 o'clock debate conference the following colleges will be represented: University of California, College of the Pacific, San Francisco State College, University of San Francisco, Saint Mary's College, University of Santa Clara, Menlo Junior College, Marin Junior College, San Mateo Junior College, and the University of California at Davis, Luckmann revealed.

Lunch will be served to the guests at 12:30, and the debating will be resumed at 1:30 p.m.

Chairman of the debating will be a University of California debater, and the members of the college who will participate are Robert Roach, Margaret O'Rourke, Ogden Wheeler, Erwin Swett, Leland Merton, Jack McKay, Robert Nossen, Myron Dubain, and Kenneth Johnson, Luckmann said.

A Cappella Choir To Sing At Lion's Club Nov. 26

Both the college A Cappella Choir and a double quartet from the choir will participate in the program to be given before a luncheon meeting of the Lion's Club at the Sir Francis Drake Tuesday, November 26, Flossita Badger, music instructor announced.

The members of the double quartet were listed by Miss Badger as Don Moss, Kenneth Pedersen, Nathaniel Hockenga, Fred Faber, Bill Cothran, Bob Lynch, Emil Nelson, Jack Myers, and Blaine Rogers. Ruth Berryessa will be accompanist, she added.

Broadcast

Radio Classes On KSFO Tomorrow

As a part of American Education Week, radio broadcasting classes will present a program tomorrow from 1:30 to 2 p.m. over station KSFO, Marie Weller, instructor of radio broadcasting, announced this week.

The program will be a series of highlights in the pursuit of liberty done in a style reminiscent of the March of Time. The broadcast will deal principally with freedom of the press, religious worship, the right of assembly and the part of education in democracy.

The cast is composed of students from both the advanced and beginning classes. Students participating in the broadcast are Earl Pereira, George Newell, Alden Thorogood, Bill Michelson, Bentley Schoenfeld, Geraldine Ryan, Vance Skarstedt, Len Gross, and Charles Linn.

This is the second production of the college aired by KSFO. Last semester, a similar broadcast dealing with the freedom of the press was given.

The program tomorrow is given in honor of American Education Week and the perpetuation of individual liberties.

"We are deeply indebted to station KSFO for their assistance and invaluable aid in making the broadcast possible. They have shown a willingness to cooperate with us to the fullest extent," Miss Weller said.

The program is also under the sponsorship of the San Francisco Board of Education.

CAB To Nominate New Officers November 26

Nominations of candidates for Club Advisory Board officers of next semester will be held Tuesday, November 26, the next meeting of the group, Bob Ogg, CAB president, announced this week.

Following the nominations, election of officers is scheduled December 10, he added.

Ogg warned that since only official representatives of clubs in good standing who have attended the majority of meetings this semester may vote or run for office, members who are not certain of their status secure a statement from the president of the club authorizing their representation.

Skate Club Clears Status

Approved at the CAB meeting of last Tuesday was the application for charter renewal of the college Ice Skating Club, which has been suspended earlier this semester for failure to charter petitional deadline.

The club board now lists a total of 31 clubs in good standing, Ogg said. Two clubs still on the suspension list are National Collegiate Flying Club and the Block Society.

Improved Conduct In Cafe Brings Praise To Students

Students of the college were congratulated today for their response in regard to the pleas expressed in The Guardsman and by faculty members asking for an improvement in cafeteria conditions.

Congratulations were offered by Hilda Watson, chairman of the Hotel and Restaurant Management Division, and by Dean Edwin C. Browne, both of whom expressed the opinion that student cooperation had resulted in a greatly improved cafeteria situation.

Mrs. Watson, reflecting on past conditions, noted that many students have mended their ways and that practically all students are now making use of the cafeteria as a cafeteria and hot, as previously, as a headquarters for their various activities.

Because of the inconvenience created by removal of salt and sugar shakers from tables, as a result of past actions by some students, Mrs. Watson plans to return them to tables in the hope that "students will continue to act more like college men and women and less like members of a high school student body."

Dean Browne was extremely favorable in his praise of those who have helped to relieve the crowded and noisy aspects in the college cafeteria.

"Student cooperation," the Dean said, "has been illustrated most favorably and it is sincerely appreciated."

Midterm Checkup

All Students To Meet Advisers Tuesday; Scholastic Council Names Coaching Staff

All students will meet their advisers at 1 o'clock next Tuesday, November 19, to discuss deficiency notices for the second midterm period, J. Paul Mohr, registrar, announced recently.

"All classes will be excused at that time," Mohr declared. "I should like to urge students to attend these meetings, since they are in accordance with our new policy of not mailing 'cinch' notices."

He warned that students who do not meet their advisers will probably be the losers in the future.

Following is a list of rooms where students can meet their advisers:

Agosti, Alfred P., Room 100; Aggeler, Cecil, Room 132; Allman, Richard, Room 205.

Badger, Flossita, Room 212; Berman, Louis, Room 190; Bolton, Gertrude, Room 346.

Weber, Verrel, Room 200; Wells, Dr. Nelson A., Room 209; Williams, Mildred J., Room 208; Wilson, Thomas, Room 107 Men's Gym.

Actual preparedness of the scholastic council's newly organized coaching staff for assisting students was announced by Mary Frances Malone, chairman of the council, today.

"Those who have responded to our request for students who are willing to coach include Bob Dolman, Joe Barr, Bernice Cunningham, Frances Fabris, William Hellbush, Thomas Hobwang, Borrie Hyman, Daisy Louie, Carol Marshall, Gordan Peterson, Norwin Sofholm, June Tanaka, Earl Thollander, Charles Silva, and Frederick Zulch," she declared.

Among those subjects in which aid may be given, Miss Malone said, are: mathematics, accounting, English, chemistry, German, sociology, art, astronomy, biology, economics, jurisprudence, and geography.

"Students who desire aid in specific subjects should leave their names, the subject and time at which they desire such aid in the Associated Students office in Room 155 under my name," she advised. "If the subject is not in the above list, there is a possibility of its being available at the time at which it is requested."

She added that any students who wish to participate in coaching are urged to leave word at the Associated Students office also, since a need for students able to coach philosophy, French, history, and zoology is existent.

Lloyd Luckmann Thanks Students

Following the college dedication last Sunday, Lloyd D. Luckmann, dedication chairman, issued the following statements:

Lyle Shultz,

Associated Student President:

The officers and members of the Faculty Association extend this sincere token of appreciation to the officers and members of the Associated Students for their generous support and assistance in the Dedication Exercises of November 10th. Through your good offices the whole decorative scheme was realized, and this alone would have been sufficient assistance, but the work of individuals in ushering and acting as hosts to our many friends and all of the other important help moves us to highest praise.

Sincerely,

Lloyd D. Luckmann

Len Gross,

Editor of The Guardsman:

We must not let the calm of the aftermath hush our praise for the work of The Guardsman on behalf of the Dedication program. To you and your staff and in particular to Miss Theodora Wong, I send my personal thanks for the constant and excellent publicity afforded the occasion. The support which The Guardsman gave to the committee in charge of the exercises is deeply appreciated.

Sincerely,

Lloyd D. Luckmann

Thanksgiving Brings Holidays Next Week

Thanksgiving holidays next week account for no classes Wednesday, Thursday, or Friday, according to the official college calendar. Wednesday, November 20, is a holiday for students because that day is designated as one of three teacher institute sessions in the year.

Leonard Gross, editor of The Guardsman, announced that The Guardsman would accordingly suspend publication after today's issue until Friday, November 29.

Freddy Martin Talks It Over

Champions Sweet Music; Uses Swing For Novelty

By Mary Frances Malone

Freddy Martin, current maestro at the St. Francis Hotel, during his recent interview with Mary Frances Malone, Guardsman feature editor.

Bill Williams, president of the low sophomore class which is sponsoring the dance Wednesday night, looks on.

Jean Arnold, Associated Student vice-president, was also "in" on the interview but missed out on this picture.

Next week's dance will be the fisrt semi-formal event planned by the low sophomore class. Class officers voiced the hope that a class tradition will be established.

One might possibly expect the Sphinx to talk or horses to fly, we grant you—but if any one had told us a year ago that Freddy Martin and his orchestra would play "boogey woogey" in the Mural Room of the Saint Francis Hotel, he would have been hooted down in no short order.

"I think that boogey woogey's a good thing," Martin smiled, "but of course sweet music is still my favorite."

He explained that the really hot swing numbers which he and his orchestra play are more or less novelties as far as they are concerned, but that they serve to break up a program of slow selections.

"Moreover," he continued, "San Francisco is unusually fond of sweet music, and after all, we play to suit the tastes of our audiences."

Since this is the third consecutive year that Martin and his organization have played in this city, which he admitted is one of his favorites, he is in a position to know pretty well what San Franciscans want in their music.

Incidentally, Martin was the first orchestra leader in this country to recognize the possibilities of the organ in a dance band.

"Although Jake Fina was already a member of my band, the idea of incorporating an organ into our organization did not occur to us until one day in Chicago," Martin declared. "Then we saw the tremendous opportunities for harmony and individual style which an organ would give to the orchestra, and so we adopted it."

That his choice was well-founded has been shown by the general popularity of Martin's arrangements which often display the rich tones of that instrument.

"The amazing adaptability of the organ to swing music is one of its outstanding features," Martin commented, illustrating his point with the selection Jaywalk which was presented in the Mural Room for the first time.

Like most orchestra leaders Martin is pleased by college students as audiences for his music.

"Students keep abreast of the times musically," he commented. "And they are spontaneous in their approval or lack of approval of a number, a genuine reaction which is of benefit to the leader who is trying to improve his style."

As a former student of Ohio State, Martin should know whereof he speaks.

He commented upon the problem of whether a song could be made popular by a simple process of "plugging" it enough or whether a song required a special "something" to win favor with the American public.

"There's no doubt in my mind that that 'something,' whatever it may be, is absolutely necessary to insure a song's popularity," he said. "I wish I knew what it is, because I'd certainly retire and make a million if I did."

Although Martin has no true favorite song, he is especially fond of sweet numbers, among them Jerome Kern's All The Things You Are. His recordings, however, show an appreciable versatility in the types of selections which he can play.

"Among the recordings which we made in Los Angeles about two weeks ago are All Or Nothing At All; My Mother Would Love You; You Say The Sweetest Things, Baby; and It's A Great Day For The Irish," he declared. (The last number made a tremendous hit, as far as we were concerned.)

Martin and his orchestra will trek south next month, he revealed.

"While we all like Los Angeles, leaving San Francisco is hardly pleasant for us," he declared.

And having Freddy Martin and his band leave this city is hardly pleasant for San Francisco, from both a musical and a friendly viewpoint.

President's Speech Worth Remembering

PRESIDENT ARCHIBALD J. CLOUD'S speech accepting the new campus last Sunday on the highly successful dedication day embodies what is or should be the general sentiment of the college regarding our pride-worthy plant.

At the same time it is fitting to pay tribute to Lloyd Luckmann, who as chairman for the dedication ceremonies, organized and arranged the program, in general supervised the exhibits throughout the building, and bore most of the burden for making the day the success it was. It has been estimated that more than 1000 persons attended the ceremony and saw the college building later. To those students who assisted Chairman Luckmann, credit should also be given.

The complete text of President Cloud's message is printed below.

Superintendent Nourse, Chairman Doyle, Mayor Rossi, Commissioners of Education, Ladies and Gentlemen:

It is my rare privilege and honor to accept at your hands, Mr. Superintendent, this spacious campus, and these three large, commodious and well-planned buildings, fully equipped, which now become the home of San Francisco Junior College, to be held by us in trust for this and coming generations of students.

On behalf of faculty and student body, I would on this occasion pay tribute to you, sir, whom we esteem so highly as a true friend of the college. Likewise I would convey our sense of gratitude to the citizens of San Francisco for the support they have so freely given to the creation of this institution.

His Honor, the Mayor, has shown at all times an abiding interest in our welfare. Those seven eminent and public-spirited citizens who serve on the Board of Education have steadfastly and courageously devoted much time and effort toward the firm establishment of this college, ordaining it to be the upper level of the public school system of the "Unified School District," and providing it with the superior facilities it now possesses, and with a teaching body second to none in the state or nation. The architect, Mr. Timothy Pflueger, has endowed these structures with all the values he has derived from rich experience.

To these friends—the citizens at large—His Honor, the Mayor — the Superintendent of Schools—the members of the Board—the architect—we of the faculty express heartfelt thanks, and pledge ourselves to strive ever to make this junior college more and more worthy of the glorious city for which it is named.

I would repeat for you now these lines from Ruskin, which seem to me to be applicable to our situation:

"When we build, let us think that we build forever. Let it not be for present delight, nor for present use alone; let it be such work as our descendants will thank us for, and let us think, as we lay stone on stone, that a time is to come when these stones will be held sacred because our hands have touched them, and that men will say as they look upon the labor and wrought substance of them. 'See! this our fathers did for us'."

Quotable Quotes

"No wise person takes exception to a common-sense program of preparedness. The danger confronting us just now is that those who are whooping it up for war in the alleged defense of democracy will accomplish the destruction of democracy. The best defense of democracy is in the realm of the moral and spiritual nature. Educational institutions and churches are now faced with a terrific responsibility. We must now keep alive the ideals of democracy." —Pres. Daniel L. Marsh of Boston University sounds a warning against pseudo-patriotism.

Impersonally Speaking

ALTHOUGH this space is not usually devoted to fashions, worthy of mention, but not getting that mention at all, is the fastidious dressing by the men of this college.

In other semesters, the men were too prone to dress in the usual slacks, sweater or sport coat, and open-necked shirt with the customary low-cut sport shoe. They looked simply as much alike as peas in a pod.

However, as is said above, this semester has produced, as far as the college is concerned, more or less of a Renaissance in male styles. Truly, it is an emancipation from the stifling fashions of yesterday.

For instance, William Persiflage and his brother, Roland, are the latest style-leaders. (These brothers are beyond the shadow of a doubt two of the best dressed men on any college campus.)

William, the older of this popular brother team, recently came to the college attired in the most marvelous ensemble. He wore an orange-colored sport coat. The lapels of the coat were of lemon-yellow and the pockets were of emerald green. His shirt was a beautiful sky-blue with a six inch collar. His necktie was a simple, but effective, biege.

His trousers were made of the latest gabardine-tweed woven into diagonals. They were of a simply gorgeous flesh-color. His socks, in accord with the latest fad, were unmatched. The left one was of fire-engine red and the right one was navy blue. His shoes, imported from Siam, were of tiger-skin with Burmese elephant-hide soles.

Roland Persiflage, although younger than "Willie" (as his friends are apt to call this charming young man), is every bit as clothes-conscious as his big brother. This was proved by his outfit of last week.

His Tyrol, or Alpine, hat with the eagle with oustretched wings perched on it, was both patriotic and smart. For a jacket, he sported the new half-length, sleeveless "semi-jack" in a stunning dotted swiss. These new creations reach half way to the waist and are the most charming things!

With this he wore the most adorable mahogany colored sweater. The sweater was of the slip-on type. An open-neck sports-shirt of that marvelous new shade, "dirty-fingernail black," added to the wonderful effect. His trousers, which were the latest nose-bleed red, added further glory to his prestige.

Refusing to pay any attention to crazes, Roland's socks were a darling pair of striped cream, magenta, indigo, and pale orchid. Of course, they were knee-length. His shoes, combining loyalty to the college and utility, were made in the shape of a ram's head.

He is, in fact, with his brother, an undoubted leader in the fastidious among men.

The Spectator

PERHAPS you have read Johnston McCulley's novel, The Curse of Capistrano, featuring that legendary figure of old California, Zorro. Perhaps you have even been fortunate enough to see the silent motion picture version of the book starring Douglas Fairbanks, Sr. Unfortunately, we have done neither so our review of 20th Century-Fox's latest interpretation, The Mark of Zorro, cannot in any way include a comparison between book, silent film, and the 1940 production. Taking the film as is, we were certainly surprised. There existed certain doubts in our mind as to the entertainment possibilities of the picture. They were pleasantly dispersed. The Mark of Zorro just about walks off with all honors in the field of action-adventure movies for the fall season. It definitely is superior to the Sea Hawk, its only close competitor.

The film is lusty fare, containing within its length more downright thrills than have been presented on the screen in many a moon. Rouben Mamoulian, the director, has given the production a fast-paced beginning, kept the action moving at high pitch throughout, and has achieved a motion picture of vivid excitement that never slackens. Give credit to Mr. Mamoulian for the success of the drama for certainly Tyrone Power as the masked Robin Hood of early Los Angeles didn't help much. It must be credited that Power has his best role among a series of very unsuitable parts, but Power's forte is not costume roles. He should leave that to Errol Flynn and quickly slip into a tux and top hat in some sophisticated modern comedy, a part that would give his talent more adequate expression.

Linda Darnell as Zorro's sweetheart has a smaller role than usual and is consequently more at ease. But the remainder of the supporting cast is magnificent. Each in his own manner gives full, lush portrayals that aid the picture immeasurably. J. Edward Bromberg as the cowardly alcalde, Gale Sondergaard as his restless unfaithful wife, Basil Rathbone as the bodyguard, Eugene Pallette as the fearless, courageous priest, and Montague Love as the father of Zorro, each are an example of perfect casting. Its just about the best group of supporting performances witnessed in a film this year.

The story is uncomplicated. Don Diego Vega (Tyrone Power), excellent swordsman of Spain, returns to Los Angeles to find his father deposed by a ruthless, tyrannical alcalde (Bromberg) who taxed the peons unmercifully. Don Diego becomes the awesome, masked Zorro at night, riding the countryside to strike swiftly at the alcalde's forces and arouse the unprotesting peons.

Alfred Newman has created another expert musical score to compliment the visual excitement to perfection. Some beautiful photography enhances the nocturnal shots of Zorro's roamings. The settings are authentic in appearance.

In all, Mr. Zanuck and conferes have done themselves proud with The Mark of Zorro. It's romantic adventure as it should be presented.

Tomorrow Night By MacKillop

Malone

On The Feminine Side

WITH the Associated Men Students' barn dance at Alvarado Barn tomorrow night, women at the college are more than a little interested in what most of the other women are planning to wear.

The usual brightly-colored wash dresses and culottes will probably be in evidence, with straw hats in popular favor as per usual.

Freshman student Dorothy Thompson will look very farmerette-ish in a wash dress of neat blue and white checks. White anklets and saddle shoes will be her choice of footwear, as they will with the majority of women who will attend the affair.

Informality in dress will probably reach a new high (or low) with regard to barn dance clothes.

Isabel Greene, welfare committee member, is going to wear a divided cow-girl fringed skirt of dark blue denim and a huge straw hat. With her skirt she will wear a brilliant crimson satin shirt with long sleeves. To quote Izzy, "Yippee!"

A rose slack suit plus the ubiquitous straw hat will be sported by WAA prexy Barbara Smith. Her suit has one of those long shirts which may be worn either in or out with an equally smart effect.

Ruth Falconer, freshman student, will be a devotee of the clam-digger style. Hers are of bleached blue denim with neatly-turned cuffs, and she is planning to wear a really wild red and blue plaid shirt for a really rural effect.

Feminine And Domestic Versions

More on the feminine side will be Frances Woods. Frances will turn up at the dance clad in a blue and white print dress with an apple motif. A white organdy blouse with the peasant draw-string neckline will complete her ensemble.

Betty Fox has planned on wearing a pink pinafore dress with a long-sleeved white blouse. In her hair she will possibly wear a white or pink bow to carry out her color scheme.

In all probability there will be a large contingent of men and women who will come dressed, if not alike, similarly. Matching plaid shirts with jeans for the men and denim culottes or skirts for the women are one of the styles which generally meet with the approval of the students.

As an example of what men are expected to wear, one may take any picture of any farmer in any state. To air a personal grievance, we might willingly put up with noxious corn-cob pipes or practically unbearably wild conglomerations of clothing, but please, oh please spare the hapless women who must dance with men wearing hob-nailed boots. We don't object to black-and-blue shins for the sake of fun (?) but mangled feet and blistered toes are going a little too far for the cause.

Popular Al Nauman will return to the college for the barn dance dressed as most men will be, in jeans and a bright cotton shirt. Incidentally, it was rather odd seeing the athletic Al sitting in the grandstands last Monday afternoon, watching the team with which he starred play Pasadena Junior College.

If past barn dances may be taken as any criterion, Hank Kreutzman will turn up in a fringed suede jacket with a rugged coon-skin cap on the back of his head. Those in the know say that Hank has a secret hankering for the days of Dan'l Boone, but we wouldn't know.

In any case, to mix up our quotations, the dance is the thing. And from all indications, it should be grand, all around.

Shots At RAMdom . . .

GUINIEVERE GAUNT was still combing the hay out of her vari-colored tresses when we crawled through the window of her dressing room last Tuesday for an exclusive interview.

Ever since her pilgrimage to Ohshucks, Maine, to play in the Ohshucks Little Theatre Club's barn last summer, Miss Gaunt has not been able to get little theatres and hay out of her mind.

While traveling down the peninsula last August, Miss Gaunt accidentally took a wrong road. After driving over a washboard road for several miles she stopped at a thoroughly decrepit barn, with hay creeping out of every crack. She quickly scanned the neighborhood. Finding it quite disreputable, she cried, and we quote, "This shall be the site of the Gaunt Little Theatre."

Thus it was that we interviewed Miss Gaunt this week on the eve of her first production, Morning Gets Electrified.

BEFORE WE COULD SHUT the window behind us, Miss Gaunt, an accomplished interviewee, had coiled one leg over the other, reclined in her chair long, and uttered, "Yes, my first love has always been the theatre . . . Count Otto was just a passing fancy; one of those things."

Having dispensed with her first movement and intermezzo, Miss Gaunt quietly drew a Turkish cheroot from behind her ear and began to chew on it as we plied her with questions. All the while photographers filed in and out asking Miss Gaunt to look languid for Life, surrealistic for Vogue, and smoulderingly for Glamour. When the photographer from Pic came, we left the room.

When we returned, "Miss Gaunt just where do you feel you excell?"

"Young man," and she sniffed as only La Gaunt can sniff, "leave my figure out of this discussion."

When we got everything ironed out, Miss Gaunt replied that tragedy was her real forte.

"Following my success in Morning Gets Electrified, which was you know sparked up just for me, I plan to bale up my hay and company and tour a series of Pacific Coast barns," Miss Gaunt continued.

To all of which we exclaimed Hey, Hey! and goodbye, and climbed out the window to jump on our waiting steed, promising to see her again in her heyday.

RAM'S HORN

Hangers Needed For Checkroom; Politics Again

EDITOR'S NOTE:

Any student desiring to express an opinion on any subject is urged to use the Ram's Horn for this purpose. Letters should be left in the publication's office, Room 184. Deadline for the Tuesday issue is the preceding Thursday. Deadline for the Friday issue is the preceding Tuesday. All letters should be in by 10 a.m.

• New Request For Hangers

Editor, The Guardsman:

Help! This is not a request for more ships, nor a plea for more airplanes, but it is an appeal for more hangers (the coat, not the airplane type). There is a great lack of these indispensable articles at the checkroom.

Remember "Black Thursday" of a couple of weeks ago. On that day we students had to wait in line to get our belongings back; some of us had to roll our coats up, and have them stuffed into boxes; and many of us weren't accomodated at all. All this trouble occurred because there weren't enough hangers.

According to Mrs. Rogers, the checkroom has only 125 hangers, all of which have been donated; at least 500 more are needed. Since neither the school administration nor the student body provides funds for such expenses, it is necessary for all of us to pitch in and donate our extra hangers for the good of the cause.

Rainy days are coming soon. Although the problem may appear insignificant now, there will come a day of reckoning. All contributions will gladly be received at the checkroom. Let's be prepared!

• Credit For FDR?

Editor, The Guardsman:

Regarding the November 8 issue of The Guardsman in your column While Thinking you wrote referring to Wendell L. Willkie: "His fight in the face of overwhelming odds is one that will go down in future history books as an example of a man who was willing to fight for his convictions." This statement fits the President far better than Mr. Willkie. It is estimated that $24,000,000 was spent on Mr. Willkie's campaign which is four times that spent for the President. The backers of Mr. Willkie went so far on the billboards as to compare our President to Hitler as a dictator, all of which is, as we aware, cruely absurd.

The great majority of newspaper editorials wrote on the behalf of Mr. Willkie. Could it be possible that Professor Harold J. Laski of the political science department of the University of London be correct in his accusations, in his latest book, the American Presidency, that the American people are——(word illegible) as to whatever is printed in these pages?

Yes Mr. Editor, I am firmly convinced that our President, Franklin D. Roosevelt, deserves the credit of ——(word illegible) the overwhelming odds which his opponents brought forth in his campaign.

Cordially yours,

Joseph T. Neill

Editor's Note: FDR is, of course, deserving of great credit. And may we suggest, Mr. Neill, that you improve your penmanship and grammar.

• Parking Facilities Attacked

Editor, The Guardsman:

I quote from the November 5 issue of The Guardsman: "Parking Situation Better." Better for what?

The light rains of the past two days made it a near impossibility to park cars in our so-called parking area, without sinking to all four hubs. The few drivers who were fortunate to find ground solid enough to hold the weight of a vehicle, had to swim for the sidewalks.

If one dared to park on the middle drive, you received a pink tag. A present from the S.F. Police Department.

Yes, I was one of the violaters. I didn't have a [illegible] card on

LAST RAM GRIDIRON BATTLE

RAMblings

By Kei Hori

Nine Stalwarts Make "Last Appearance"

PLAYING their last game for the Rams and Lee Eisan are nine stalwart members of the gridiron, when they meet the Modesto Buccaneers. From Coach Eisan came the names of the nine, and surprisingly enough, every one of them is from the first string. Kenny Hagen, bug-ologist, who has played spectacular football all season will continue chasing bugs for the University of California. Elwood Bernstein will also leave the end spot open for some fortunate personality—so news has it.

Big Bill Windeler once told us he will go into Law practice—probably continuing at the U. of C. The bespectacled Behemoth also thinks the Navy is good too. What with Al Nauman, already out of the Ram roster, the U.S.N. will have a mighty powerful football squad—and the Army-Navy game of '42 should be some fight.

Pinky Larracou, the mighty guard, originally from the Stanford frosh, hopes to continue his book learnin' at the U. of C. in L. A. Westwood Village will get us, too, if we ever get out of here. Then there is Clark Johnson, blonde glamma boy who wishes to ride with Buck Shaw's Broncos.

Herbie Taylor and Davitt Cunningham, quarter and halfback respectively have not confided with us yet as to their future prospects. 'Tennyrate, they will probably continue with their gridiron career at some other "Podunk U." or some such.

With these losses, however, the coach has almost a complete new team returning for the '41 year, and the new prepsters who register for football next semester adding to the already star studded team would make any coach gloat with happiness.

But tonight's game. Since the tussle will be the nine stalwarts' last, the Associated Students are practically required to go en masse. Yell leaders from way back when have promised to see this game, and since the San Mateo game was flooded out, the leaders plan to make a night of this encounter.

Another Prayer Of Thanks

Hail and farewell. The Kiddy Party will be no more after this week. Since there will be no paper until November 29, two weeks hence, this department will not have to bother about the results, etc. But another snag has just come up. Tourney Week. Our WAA reporter is practically worn out by the amout of stuff coming out of her dept.

Intramural

Clubs Must Organize Teams By Tuesday To Participate In Current Activities

Horseshoes, volleyball, swimming, and boxing are the current intramural attractions, announced Paul Postler, assistant intramural manager today.

The clubs of the college are urged by Postler each to form a team and list the team with Captain McFarland or Postler. Any group of men who desire to enter the competition can form a team and enter the competition by the same means, he said.

The last day for entry blanks to be filed is Tuesday, November 19. No entries will be accepted any later. The team is to be composed of eight players, but competition may be carried on with six. All entries may be given either to McFarland or Postler between 9 and 11:45 a.m., on any day, but no later, because neither person is available, they announced.

The boxers are slated to perform in about one week, according to Joe Lantagne, college boxing coach. The managers for the affair will be Ted Green and Ben Krinsky, Postler said.

Swimmers Attention!

All men interested in swimming are requested to see John Hurley, local swimming coach or Bob Bush, intramural manager. All information as to intramural swimming competition is, as yet, tentative, Postler revealed. The event will be held November 29th at Jefferson Pool.

Horseshoe contestants who did not play their scheduled matches yesterday at the Sloat Boulevard Courts may play Monday at Sloat Courts, Postler remarked. William Bauer, horseshoe manager, will be there for those who do not have their own horseshoes. Postler emphatically said that this will be the last time anyone can use the college's horseshoes before the final contest.

Contestants must play their matches on one of the courts that is listed on the intramural bulletin board. 26th and Mission Courts, Marina Courts at Funston Playground, and Rossi Playground Courts at Golden Gate Avenue and Arguello Boulevard have shoes available. Other courts have no horseshoes to lend and players must have their own.

The second round of the play has been completed and all information as to standings and schedules for the next round have been posted on the intramural bulletin board, announced Postler.

Cross-Country Results

The cross-country run, which was run off last Friday, was captured by Don Venton in 12:43. In second position was Paul Zink, who negotiated the distance in 12:47. He was followed by Bob Howard who was timed at 12:51. Ed Ellis took fourth. Seventeen men started the race and 14 finished. According to Postler, the times were excellent considering the sloppy track and other hazards.

Softballers who have had their tournament postponed, delayed, and cancelled by inclement weather, played the final round of the schedule the latter part of the week. The results of the games were known too late for publication, but may be found on the intramural bulletin board. The Police Training was slated to meet the Beta Phi Beta, and the Eds were to play Pi Mu Gamma.

Rain Stretches Playing Days

Because of rain, the singles tennis tournament, which was to have been played off before now, is still going. The fourth round is under way and results of this round must be given to the intramural officials before Monday. Semi-finals will be played on the college courts some time next week, Postler said.

The fourth round of the doubles tournament must be finished by November 20, Postler declared. This has also been extended because of the rains. The absolute last second for the results to be in will be 8:30 that evening. These may be phoned to either manager, Evard Ellison at SEabright 2269, William Bauer at OVerland 7840, or Postler at DElaware 1878.

The results of these games must be in by November 20, but if there is no way of getting the result in by that evening, they may be given to Postler between 9 and 10 Thursday morning. Postler cautioned all entrants that unless there was an excellent reason for being so late, the result would not be accepted and the match would be forfeited.

Ski Team Members Plan Winter Sierra Trip

Members of the college ski team anticipate a trip into the high Sierra during the Christmas holidays, Alden Smith, team adviser, announced this week.

The region to be ventured is not accessible by automobile, but by horse only, Smith said.

All members of the team wishing to make the trip should get in contact with Smith, as the reservations are limited, he said.

At present the ski team is engaged in dry ski training which includes tennis, badminton, and basketball, enabling a person to be physically fit for the [illegible] competition.

Association Introduces Program Of Coeducational Folk Dancing

By NORA BAKER

This afternoon a coeducational program of international folk dancing to which are invited all men and women of the college who come in couples, will be held in the women's gymnasium under the sponsorship of the Women's Athletic Association, Laurine Bergin, physical education instructor announced this week.

Dancing will be held from 2 to 4 p.m., with accompaniment furnished by phonograph records, and piano music, to be supplied by Marie Polantas, she said.

To give variety to the afternoon's entertainment the group promised social dancing as well as folk dancing of such dances as the Bummel Schottische, Virginia Reel, Captain Jinks of the Horse Marines, Hungarian dances, American Circle dances, and the Spanish Waltz.

"Students need not know how to dance in order to attend, but should come and find out how. Jeanne Arnold, Barbara Gunn, Irene Weed, Betty Teter, physical education majors club members, will be on hand to instruct in the various folk dances," Mrs. Bergin announced.

If the attendance at this afternoon's dance merits it, there will be afternoons for similar dances set aside in the future, WAA officials said.

"Wherever one goes, he encounters folk-dancing, which has come again into vogue this year. Everyone should use this opportunity to learn various folk dances," Bertha Mae Keller, physical education instructor commented.

Kiddy Party Next Tuesday; Puppet Show Featured

Only five days remain for women of the college to prepare their six-year old kiddy costumes for the Women's Athletic Association Kiddy Party, next Tuesday, November 19, from 7:30 to 10 p.m., in the women's gymnasium, in celebration of the sixth anniversary of the WAA in this college, officials announced.

An original puppet show is to be presented by Theodora Ruegg, and a skit entitled, "School Daze of the Faculty," written by Dr. Andrewa Noble, faculty member, will highlight the evening's entertainment, according to Irene Weed, WAA program chairman. Principal players in the faculty skit will be Flossita Badger, Mary Jane Learnard, Helen Kelly, and Aileen Kinkel.

Singer Featured

Anita Welt, popular singer of the college who was selected to sing last semester at Junior College Night at the Palace, will carry out the theme of the evening by singing I'm Nobody's Baby, Miss Reed said. Appropriate acrobatic and tap dances will be presented by Laverne Lubertish Sophia Fischer and Irene Weed.

Everyone Invited

"Although this affair is under the sponsorship of the WAA, all women students and women faculty members are urged to come out and help the WAA celebrate its anniversary," Barbara Smith, WAA president, commented. Prizes for the most outstanding kiddy costumes will be presented to a woman student and a woman faculty member, Miss Smith said.

Contrast Made

"The Women's Athletic Association in the college, this year, is a far cry from the WAA as it was first organized six years ago," Bertha Mae Keller, physical education instructor, recalled. "An interesting parallel is drawn, however, between the women who first organized the WAA and the women frosh of this semester. There is evidenced in them the same enthusiasm, the same good-looks, the same friendly spirit that characterized the women frosh of the college six years ago. In order to make a success of the celebration of the WAA's sixth anniversary, we especially invite the freshman women to be present on that night," she added.

"The kiddy party will afford an excellent opportunity for the women of the college to meet each other in a friendly informal way," Miss Smith said, adding that checkroom facilities will be in operation on that night for the convenience of those attending.

Tennis Sports Day Set Tomorrow At San Mateo

Tomorrow, November 16, representatives of the Women's Athletic Association, comprising three singles and four doubles tennis teams will journey to San Mateo Junior College to compete in a tennis sports day there, Marie Richardson, WAA tennis club manager, said today.

Competing with the tennis teams from this college, will be those representing San Jose and San Francisco State, Salinas, Santa Rosa, and Marin Junior colleges, she said.

Power, Passes Plunder Pasadenans 18-0 In Armistice Day Tilt; Buccaneers Meet Eisanmen Tonight At Seals 8 O'clock

Trouncing

By K.H. '41

KEZAR STADIUM, NOVEMBER 11—Dominating the game from the kick-off, Lee Eisan's college Rams totally eclipsed a weary Pasadena Bulldog here today by an 18 to 0 score before 1000 rabid gridiron fans.

Sheer power masquerading under Jim Honnert's monicker, drove the blue-jerseyed Pasadenans relentlessly into the shadows of their own goal posts and boomed through the final marker for the first Ram score, less than 10 minutes after the opening kickoff.

Twice again the Rams passed the gold-colored silk pants clean off the southern Bulldogs; Elwood Bernstein getting the first pair while Jackie Medrano scooted home with another.

A recovered fumble on the Bulldog 30 started the first drive, six minutes after the referee's whistle began the game. Izzy Urbano drove off tackle for 7, and Honnert made it first down on the 17. Wilfred Slattery punched the line putting the ball on the 15, and Honnert, on a cross-buck, worked his way for a first down on the Bulldog 5.

First Six Of Eighteen

With first down and 5 to go, Urbano and Honnert banged down to the 2, where Honnert added 6 points to his scoring credit. Council's attempted conversion was wide.

A bad pass from center on the second play of the second half recovered by the Rams gave the college another chance, but Honnert's pass fell in the hands of Smith, who raced back to his 19. Jake Leicht made two, then faded back to pass. But safety man Dave Cunningham intercepted the pass, and bolted back to the Pasadena 27.

Bernstein Adds Six More

Jack Medrano made two at left tackle, then Cunningham skirted to the right, found Bernstein alone on the 5 yard line and tossed. Bobbling the ball, the end literally danced over the goal to score. Bernstein attempted the conversion, but failed.

Johnny Blakemore's punt from the 35 rolled out of bounds on the Pasadena 6. Leicht lost a yard, and elected to kick back on the next play, the ball going out of bounds on the 37. A reverse from Honnert to Cunningham added 9 yards, Honnert made it first down on the 26. Urbano plunged 9 yards on the next play to the 18 yard line, then was stopped cold on the following play.

Medrano Catches And Dives

Behind a fence of red-shirted linemen, Honnert searched the flat, found Medrano floating on the 7, passed complete and Medrano dived clear over the end zone embracing the ball. The completed pass was good for 18 yards. A fake placement kick with Bernstein trying center failed to score.

The only Pasadena threats came late in the last quarter. Swivel-hipped Leicht returned Luke Lowell's blocked punt to the 37, and an offside penalty gave them 5 more yards. A pass fell incomplete, and Leicht squirmed to a first down on the 27. Johnson added 8 more on a spinner and was brought down hard by Slattery.

Two Chances, But No Soap

But on the next play, Johnson again broke away through the center of the line, cut sharply to the right, and was finally brought down by Taylor on the Ram 4. Three attempts at the impenetrable wall gained nothing, and on what supposedly would have been a pass fluked when Johnson stepped back too late, the ball sailed over his head and Bernstein recovered on the 23.

A fumble on a reverse from Honnert to Lowell lost a drive on their own 34, and George Green recovered. Green made 11 yards on the succeeding play. Willie Shallhammer scooted to the 12. A pass was batted down by Dutch Danielson, and Green was spilled for a loss, ending the drive when the line met him cold on the 15.

Credit The Linemen

Linemen of both teams should be credited for the scores. Ends Bernstein and Ken Hagen, with Council and Donovan played brilliantly. Tackles Bill Windeler, Gene Short and Themis Nicolas flanked by Clark Johnson and Pinky Larracou in the guard positions surged through the interference keeping the fleet-footed Leicht from breaking in the open. Larracou, harassed with a charley horse, played one of his better games in spite of the swollen leg.

Finale

By Ken Rea

Tonight at 8 p.m., under the blazing lights of Seals Stadium, the college gridiron stalwarts bring down the curtain on their 1940 season, when they encounter the Modesto Pirates.

Coached by Fred Earle, the invaders from the valley come here with a record of four Northern California Junior College Conference championships in the last eight years. This year the Pirates have played Sacramento in their only league engagement.

Because Modesto is one of the four colleges in the N.C.J.C.C., this game may be of the greatest importance in the outcome of the title chase. As the conference now stands, this game could swing the balance either way for the college. In the two conference games played by the locals to date, the Rams have lost to Sacramento and splashed to victory on a rain-soaked field over San Mateo.

Pirates Tough

The Pirates' roster contains the names of some tough hombres who will give the locals quite a tussle. Jack Galvin, who hails from Redwood City, and George Harryman, an all-Southern California end from Hemet, fill in at the end positions. Another terminal, Leo Peccianti, is pressing these two for a regular berth.

At the tackles are Anthony "Duke" Demetro and Bill Gawron. Demetro is the heaviest man on the squad at 240 pounds and stands 6 feet 3 inches tall. Gawron, an immigrant from Chicago, is another 200 pounder. Neither of these men are fast or clever, but both are big and powerful.

Standing behind these two men is Harold Evenshank, who played at Harrison Tech with Gawron, and has had one year of experience on the Buccaneer varsity. Evanshank is lighter than Gawron but more experienced on a team where inexperience prevails.

Guards Strong

Another teammate of Gawron's, Tex Labno, holds down the running guard post for the visitors. Labno was a tower of strength at the standing guard post last year and his ruggedness put him into the running position. Ed Martin, a second stringer from last year, will hold down the standing position. Earl Strub, another veteran who saw little action, backs these two men.

At the center post is Roy Daggs, who starred on last season's ill-fated eleven. Daggs is only 160 pounds but has a lot of aggressive spirit. Russell Goodnight, from Frankfort, Indiana, is the other pivot man. Goodnight, although bigger and stronger than Daggs, is slow.

Backfield Experienced

At the fullback spot is Verdi Lionudakis, last season's left halfback. Characterized by Earle as "one of the toughest defensive men I have ever coached," the fullback spot will give Lionudakis a chance to prove his offensive ability. He also is reputed as having a terrific amount of power. George "Pony" Pinto and Carol Sinclair follow at the fullback position. Pinto was all city man from Oakland last season and Sinclair played second string full at Modesto.

In the quarterback niche is Johnny Bradley who played there on the championship 1938 outfit. Laid up last year, Bradley comes back when needed. Following Bradley is Harold Anderson who is probably the best running back on the team. Anderson, a letterman, has the fault of tightening up in the clutch.

Reserves Plentiful

Also fighting for the first string job are Earle Graham, the smallest man on the squad, and Gene Casey, another ex-Harrison Tech, Chicago, player. Casey played fullback for the Pirates last year.

At the left half spot is Nick Zannos, a 212 pound letterman. Zannos is the star of the invaders. According to reports, he can run the 100 yard dash in 10.4, hit like a truckhorse, block like a fiend, and is a wonder on defense. Chet Lievre and Joe Foster are the replacements.

At the right half post is Dick Davey who was a center on last year's cellar bound squad. His speed and blocking, led Earle to change him. The replacements are two Howards, Spencer and Riddle. Both have one year of experience.

Rams Invade San Jose State

Tomorrow morning the Ram soccermen invade San Jose for an encounter with a strong State team, in what looms to be a hard-fought contest.

The locals have had a week of rest, and are in top shape for the tilt tomorrow morning. Coach Joe Lantagne stressed teamwork in practice this week, and expects the Rams to put up a good fight.

If past performances are any indication, the battle tomorrow promises to be a real fracas. San Jose boasts of a rough, hard-charging soccer eleven, and will be hard to stop.

The Spartans look like a winner in the league this season, and will try hard to stop the hard-charging Rams. The locals, on the other hand, have nothing to lose, and will end their season in a blaze of glory if they manage to upset the highly-touted Spartans.

Lantagne will rely on his old standbys in the forward wall, Bert Korn, Johnny Lazar, Clarence Waddington, and Hank Kreutzmann, to carry the attack against San Jose.

The other remaining league contest against Stanford, will be played within the next week or two. As soon as a date agreeable to both colleges is selected, the game will be played.

Stanford is a dark horse in the league. Though the Indians started slow, they have risen rapidly within the past few weeks, and are also a serious threat for the conference title. Lantagne, a former Stanford man, isn't taking the Indians too lightly, and is preparing the Rams for a tough game.

Lantagne has made a few changes in the lineup for San Jose tomorrow. Micky Duzdevich has moved back to his old position at goalie, Frank Schneider has moved up to the right fullback position, and Lantagne hasn't announced the name of the player who would move up to occupy the right forward post held by Duzdevich.

Goof Squad Gets Deserved Tribute

By Joe Bryan

As the football season ends tonight it would not be out of place to devote a little space to some of the members of the squad whose efforts aided in making the season as successful as it was. These are the members of the so-called goof squad.

Coached by Mel Chicazola, the goof squad members had to learn a new set of plays every week, the plays of the varsity opponents, so that the varsity could prepare a defense for them. The rest of the time they spent on defense while the varsity polished plays.

Members of the goof squad were Norm Simon, Stan Young and Walt Seaborn, ends; Bill Garry, Gerald Bradley and Dick Clayton, tackles; Wally Griffin, Don Tobin and Mel Chicazola, guards; Mike Lunish and George Donavan, centers; Louis Vazquez, Bob Cavander, Bill Maurer, Al Crasse, Buck Silverberg, Parschel Hayes, George Cross, Mike di Fonseca, and Frank Molina.

Mel Chicazola enacted the role of a playing coach while an injury to Mike Lunich forced the goofs to use George Donavan at center. Donavan ordinarily played end. The high-light of the goof season was a scoreless tie with the San Francisco State Goof team.

Astronomy

Sun's Composition Latest In List Of Berman Talks

By Francis Chrisman

Louis Berman, astronomical instructor at the college, was the lecturer last Wednesday evening at a meeting of the Northern California Mineral Society, held in a lecture hall at the Main Branch of the San Francisco Public Library. His topic was "The Chemical Composition of the Sun."

The lecture, which was illustrated with slides and motion pictures, supplemented with actual specimens from meteorites, is another now added to the list of instructive talks given recently by Berman.

A few months ago he spoke before the Amateur Telescope Makers Society using the moon as his subject for discussion.

Berman, instructor in mathematics and astronomy, is also the author of a paper soon to be published by the Astronomical Society of the Pacific, in their periodical magazine.

Berman, who received his doctor's degree at the University of California and later did research work at Lick Observatory on Mount Hamilton, revealed that he is extremely anxious to secure a telescope for the dome atop the science building.

"It is interesting to note," Berman said, "that the dome supplied for our astronomy department is larger than that possessed by any other university or college in the bay region."

Hopes were expressed by the instructor that, when completed, the college would have one of the largest and one of the finest observatories on the Pacific Coast.

"We plan," he continued, "to make the observatory available to the general public and to students of other schools and universities as well as to members of our college courses."

Installation of the telescope, however, must wait until funds are appropriated for its purchase by the Board of Education, when it is planned to buy a 12 inch refracting telescope to be placed beneath the motor operated dome, which, according to Berman, has created a great deal of popular interest and a great deal of publicity for the college.

More than 80 per cent of the men on the Boston University football squad are members of the ROTC.

Library Plans Pamphlet File

Most pertinent information securable on current subjects can be found in pamphlet form in the college library, according to Marcus Skarstedt, librarian.

The college library is setting out to secure the best of these pamphlets and have them on file for the students' use, Skarstedt said. There will soon be a special shelf in the reading room for the pamphlets.

Most of the pamphlets deal with vocational subjects. Several booklets on the subjects concerned in the college social science courses are already on file in the library. These social science booklets deal mainly with the migrant problem, Skarstedt added.

Pamphlets dealing with the European problems are Wartime Britain and The Food Problem in Norway. National defense and democracy are represented by Education for Democracy, Economic Preparedness, and National Defense.

Other pamphlets of interest to the students are Employee Rating Methods, as used by an insurance company; College and University courses in Insurance; Optics and Wheels, which traces the evolution of light and wheels; Files and Saws, for use in the study of woodwork; and The Story of Western Pines, which illustrates and explains how trees are cared for and how manufacturing is carried on.

Typists S.O.S. For Victrola

College typing classes need more rhythm, announces Helen Reveal of the typing department. Typing to music improves rhythm, Miss Reveal says.

If anyone has a discarded victrola which he can donate to the typing department, it could be used to advantage she pointed out. "We would also appreciate some of Sousa's March records," Miss Reveal added.

Anyone having a victrola should see Miss Reveal in Room 303 before bringing it to the college.

Band

Odabashian Temporary Conductor

Although no permanent appointment has been made for student leader of the college band, Dick Odabashian, freshman student, will temporarily conduct the group at college football games, including tonight's fray with Modesto, Madison Devlin, instructor of the newly organized music-makers, announced this week.

Odabashian led the band for the first time last Monday at the Armistice Day game with Pasadena, and according to Devlin, did well for a "premiere" performance.

Tryouts To Continue

"Tryouts for student leader will continue to be held if there are other candidates for the position," Devlin said. 'Anyone who is interested should present himself at the rehearsal this afternoon at 4:15 in Room 200."

Since today's game is the last on the football schedule, the band will have no more occasion to play marches, and will turn to rehearsal of concert music, Devlin revealed.

Devlin Praises Band

Commenting on the appearance of his group at the college dedication last Sunday and at the Pasadena game the following day, Devlin remarked, "There was a good turnout for both occasions, and I may say I am proud of the group."

Edwin C. Browne, dean of men, indicated last week that an arrangement may be made next semester whereby students may sign up for the band at the time of registration and schedule their programs accordingly.

The material is in the college," he said, "and we hope a larger group may be built up next year."

Reorganized Welfare Council Headed By Powell

Welfare Council has been reorganized under the leadership of Gene Powell, who replaces John Mowbray as head of the group, Powell announced this week.

The membership of the group has been reduced to four members to make its functions more efficient, Powell said. Members of the committee are Isabelle Green, Mowbray and Powell.

At a meeting of the group held Tuesday they discussed the possibility of holding a dance sponsored by the student body at least every two weeks. The time and place for such dances will be decided later, but the most likely time will be on Friday afternoons between 3 and 5 o'clock, Powell declared.

Student directory plans are still indefinite, but Powell believes that all data on the directory will be completed within the next few days.

John Mowbray is conducting an investigation to determine the possibilities of placing a plaque at each end of "Hello Walk" to make the students more aware of the recently established school tradition.

First YMCA Meeting Today; Discussion Of Future Plans

First regular meeting of the Junior College YMCA will be held today in Room 140 at 3 p.m. The constitution committee will present a constitution for approval by the group, and definite plans for organization will be discussed.

Many interesting activities are planned by the club for the future, and all interested students are invited to be present this afternoon, according to Claude A. Shull, adviser to the organization.

Student Opinion . . . Surveys

AUSTIN, TEXAS, November 15—Unlike U.S. public opinion, majority sentiment among college students today holds that it is more important for the United States to try to keep out of war than to help England even at the risk of becoming involved.

Simultaneously over the entire nation, Student Opinion Surveys of America has sent its interviewers to query all types of students on large and small campuses, presenting to them a problem vital to American youth, a question many times discussed in a thousand dormitory and boarding house bull sessions. With the cooperation of The Guardsman and scores of other newspaper members, the Surveys has gathered and tabulated these opinions by means of scientific sampling methods. Here are the results:

Students were asked which of the two following things they thought was more important for the U.S. to try to do. Their answers, in percentages, are given after each statement:

Keep the U.S. out of war..........55%
Help England, even at the risk of getting into the war..45%

This is not what their elders think. A Gallup poll recently pointed out that the majority of Americans believe the British are holding our first line of defense and helping them is more important than merely trying to steer away from the conflict.

Students, however, have repeatedly shown their tendency toward isolationism and their strong desire to avoid another war. For two years the Surveys has been gauging collegiate sentiment the nation over. It has found, for example, that majorities (in October 1939) would not volunteer should the U.S. send troops to help England and her allies, opposed (in October 1939) changing the neutrality law to allow any belligerent to buy American supplies, opposed (in February 1940) compulsory military training, and felt (in February 1940) our most important problem was to keep the country out of war.

These opinions have been tempered somewhat by the impact of recent events such as the fall of France, U.S. conscription, and the spread of the war. An indication of this cooling of opinion is the large group, comprising 45 per cent of the students, who at this time approve helping England, even if we eventually have to fight.

Bible Forum Meets Today; All Members Should Attend

This afternoon the Bible Forum will hold a special business meeting at 3 o'clock in Room 194, according to Marcus Skarstedt, faculty adviser to the group.

Functions of the society will be planned, the constitution discussed, permanent officers will be elected, and an official schedule of future events will be formed at this meeting, Skarstedt said.

All members and those desirous of joining the group must attend this meeting without fail, he declared. This meeting will constitute the official registry for membership and no applications will be taken after this meeting, he added.

Chemist Addresses Paint Technology Students

Speaking to the Paint Technology students last Wednesday, Dr. L. A. O'Leary, Chief Assistant Chemist of the Fuller Paint plant in San Francisco, discussed the different kinds of paint pigments and their uses.

The speaker said that the pigments are divided into two distinct classes, natural earth pigments and chemical pigments, and included in these two classes are about 1700 different kinds of pigments.

"It is interesting to note," he added, "that cars are under-coated with a paint having a high percentage of inert pigments. These inert pigments have good sending properties, and are definitely beneficial to the car when put on before the lacquer."

Further pigments and processes of grinding, purification, and washing were discussed by O'Leary, who used as illustration, his plant, the Fuller Company, which has 125 different types of pigments out of the 1700 possible types available.

"If you think it's any easy job being completely familiar with so many different types of paint pigments," he said, "you are sadly mistaken. That is why a perfect chemist is practically an impossibility."

Editor's Note: The statement, "Parking Situation Better," referred to a decrease in the number of violators of the parking regulations. Apparently you are an exception. Ample warning was given to all the students regarding regulations. As for the parking situation, it is truly a "mess." Its improvement will necessarily take time.

• Editorial Termed Banal
Editor, The Guardsman:

This letter is in the way of an objection to the editorial re-printed from the Idaho Argonaut, which appeared in the paper on Tuesday, November 5.

The main point in the editorial on war hysteria, would appear to consist in "speaking out" against those who are guilty of externally induced emotionalism. It is not too late to "speak out." Yet it is later stated that the hysteria has gained too much momentum to be stopped by reasonable augmentation. The two alternatives to this course of action are violence, or anti-war hysteria. Neither of these is at all probable. How then speak out? There is simply a statement of the fact that war hysteria exists. It cannot logically be construed as a warning, if we are to credit the writer with ordinary powers of observation, because the "hysteria" mentioned has been deliberately inflicted by the United States Government upon the people in a manner quite transparent to the victims. The people know what is being done to them, even though their resistance is weak.

The rest of the editorial is no more than a rhetorical statement of the probable dark future of independent thought, and particularly action. There is nothing directly constructive here, but rather an unorganized discussion, which some will find moving, of a subject well known to any newspaper reader. The only possible excuse for writing this article is that perhaps the author intended an indirect constructivness—that perhaps he intended to create in his small audience an emotionalism against war in order to balance the rising sentiment in favor of armed conflict. From that viewpoint the editorial is creditable, but ineffectual. So universal and effecient is the government propaganda, that such a small voice in the wilderness must be abashed that it could dare speak and expect a material and consequential reaction. I doubt that the author was so lacking in good sense to raise his voice in such a futile cause. As he says, the movement has gone too far. Obviously, we must follow a rebel against the government.

Why was this article included? It is not a warning, it is, in no important sense constructive.

But it is, a statement of fact so frequently and universally realized, that its content amounts to banality.

Yours sincerely,
Chatham Forbes

NYA Job Applicants Asked To See Silva In Room 170

All students who wish to receive NYA work were urged today by Claude T. Silva, Assistant NYA director at the college, to contact him immediately in Room 170.

Silva explained that additional funds have been received from the government which have completely eliminated the waiting list and that there are many jobs available for those who wish them.

"If there are any students," Silva said, "who have previously filled out an application and who have received no word from our office, it would be advisable for them, if they still wish NYA work, to report immediately."

Sweetheart Contest

Five Candidates In Race; Entries Still Accepted

Entry of five college women into the Sophomore Sweetheart Contest was announced today by Elmer Hubacher, contest chairman.

Applications for entry are still being accepted by the committee, he added. They may be secured in Room 155.

Contestants at present, he said, include Freshman Dorothy Daft, Sophomore June Holmes, and Freshman Inga Freidman, all sponsored by Phi Beta Rho; Helen Wilson, sophomore, and Betty Fox, freshman, sponsored by Beta Phi Beta.

Plans for a silver trophy cup to be awarded the winner of the Sophomore Sweetheart title have not been completed as yet, Hubacher said, adding "It will be a really good-looking cup though—probably about nine inches high, surmounted by a woman's figure, and having the winner's name engraved on it."

In addition to the cup, this semester's Sophomore Sweetheart will be given the customary free bid to the High Sophomore Formal, January 11.

The contest winner will be decided by the votes of the student body, with the date for election set for January 3, according to Hubacher.

This semester's Sophomore Sweetheart will be the fifth student to hold the title since the inception of the contest in 1936. Her duties as Sweetheart will include reigning over sophomore week's events, starting January 6, and particularly over the high sophomore Formal.

All women of the college are eligible to enter the contest, Hubacher pointed out.

While Thinking

COLLEGE

ELECTION time is drawing closer, and it is time for everyone to look around for promising officer material.

Rumors concerning candidates and campaigns have been floating about for the last few weeks.

One of the most important points related to the election is the attitude of the student leaders concerning electioneering. It is entirely probable that a resolution opposing the expenditure of more than a certain sum of money for campaigning will be passed.

Elections in the past have shown what persons who are disposed to throw money around can do. As we recall it, during one election, candidates were passing out election cards, candy, cigars, ice cream cones, chewing gum, and women's nail polish.

No doubt such a procedure is a lot of fun for the students, but it is certainly a ridiculous way to conduct a campaign and win an election.

Last semester, the students running for office met and agreed to spend no money on campaigning. This semester something even stronger should be put into effect.

The students of the college should elect the most capable candidates and if a person does not have enough money to conduct a big campaign, he should not have to compete against others who are financially better equipped. • • •

NATIONAL

THE reports of the Dies Committee and the recent sabotage attempts in American munitions and airplane factories have finally opened the eyes of the administration.

President Roosevelt announced last week that definite steps will soon be taken to combat subversive elements in the nation.

All we can say is that it is about time. The country has suffered the aggravating attitude of the Communists and Nazis long enough.

We'd be willing to bet, however, that when the government arrests some of these people who have advocated its overthrow, their first cry will be, "I demand my constitutional rights."

FOREIGN

THE truth behind Britain's stubborn resistance has been reached at last. United Press reports that nothing less than the Germanic strain in English blood has enabled Britain to endure the German might.

Source of the story? Berlin, of course.

Its a wonder the Nazis didn't claim the British people were an oppressed German minority long ago.

ALTHOUGH they may have cancelled the 1940 Olympic Games, the nations of the world are at least getting a chance to watch the Italo-Grecian track meet.

These Italians must be pretty good runners, considering they are wearing heavy uniforms. Of course they threw away all their important material and accoutrements so it is no wonder the Greeks can't catch up with them.

There is one consolation anyway. If the Greeks chase the Italians back to Rome, Mussolini can step out on a balcony, throw his chin out, growl, glare at the Greeks, and scare them to death.

It looks as if that is the only way you can stop them.

Big Game Celebration

Tri Epsilon Holds Dance Sat. Night

Tri Epsilon, restricted social group, will hold a semi-formal dance tomorrow night at the Crystal Springs Country Club, Bob Bush, club member, announced this week.

Big game night will be the theme of the dance and tickets are selling at $1.50 per couple and may be obtained from any member of the organization.

Steve Sacco and his orchestra will play for the affair and dancing will be from 9 to 1. His band consists of 13 pieces and vocalist.

"We feel that many students wish to celebrate the big game," Bush said, "and as far as we know, $1.50 is the most economical price for any affair in the bay area on that night."

Crystal Springs is located about 15 miles from San Francisco in the peninsula, and is easily reached by automobile.

Students desiring bids to the dance should secure them as soon as possible as there is only a limited number available, according to Bush.

Sacco's band is the one which played for the Associated Students barn dance held recently at Alvarado Park.

Peace Society Concludes Poll; Plans Rally For Wednesday

For the past week, students have been noticing a chart on the walls outside the registrar's office which indicates the feelings of a cross section of the Associated Students toward various questions now of national importance.

This chart reveals the findings of a poll conducted by the Peace Society of the college on Wednesday, November 13.

All 1 o'clock classes will be excused on Wednesday, December 4, to permit students to attend a rally sponsored by the college Peace Society. An interpretation of the student's peace vote will be given by Harold W. Luenberger, of the college psychology department, and Major J. W. Middleton of the 30th Infantry and Rev. Edgar A. Lowther of the Methodist Church will be among the speakers.

About 25 per cent of the total students registered at the college participated in the poll, representing a fair sample of the entire student body, which included a cross-section of age groups and of subject majors.

These were the questions asked, and the resulting figures computed in percentages:

1. Do you believe that the rights and privileges guaranteed by the Constitution to all American citizens are worth defending regardless of cost?

Yes, 87.8 per cent
No, 5 per cent
Uncertain, 7.2 per cent

2. Are you unconditionally against thet entry of the U. S. into any war outside of continental U. S.?

Yes, 53.3 per cent
No, 34.3 per cent
Uncertain, 12.4 per cent

3. Do you think that economic domination over South America by the U. S. is necessary for our defense?

Yes, 51.2 per cent
No, 30.4 per cent
Uncertain, 18.4 per cent

4. Are you in favor of the passage in Congress of Rep. Marcantonio's resolution, which would repeal the conscription act?

Yes, 11.6 per cent
No, 70.9 per cent
Uncertain, 17.5 per cent

5. Do you think that partial or complete suspension of civil liberties at the present time is necessary for national defense?

Yes, 15.2 per cent
No, 73.7 per cent
Uncertain, 11.1 per cent

Three This Afternoon

Mixer Dance To Be Held In Women's Gym Today

First in a series of Associated Student afternoon dances will be held today from 3 to 4:45 p.m. in the women's gymnasium, Jean Arnold, chairman of the Social Committee, said this week.

"This is to be a mixer dance," she said, "and we hope that there will be a very large turnout."

Admission to the dance will be one student body card per person, and there will be an identification committee directed by chairman Ed Hardies, at the door. This precaution is taken so that no one will get into the dance through using a borrowed student body card.

"I would like to warn any 'would be' card lenders that if they are discovered, their cards will be confiscated at the door," Miss Arnold commented.

Chairman of the dance committee is Bill Lohsen, and working under him are, June Holmes, Loretta Egan, Gene Powell, and Bill Marius.

Music will be provided by records, probably contributed by students of the college.

"Since this is the first dance of this sort this semester," Miss Arnold said, "the social committee hopes that the student body will cooperate with it in making it successful. The main object of the dance is to acquaint the new students with some of the 'old timers'."

Welfare Council Working On Weekly Dance Plan

Members of the Welfare Council are working on plans to hold a student mixer dance, like today's once every week, Gene Powell, chairman of the council, announced.

"We believe that if a dance of this type were held for the students it would create greater school spirit," Powell said. "A mixer dance would give the students a chance to get acquainted."

John Mowbray is investigating the costs and possibilities of installing mail boxes in the college for student use. It was found that nothing could be done about obtaining the mail boxes this semester, but the plans are being made so that the next Welfare Council may continue the work, Powell said.

Bids for the printing of the student directory are all in and awaiting the sanction of the administration, according to Powell. Although the majority of the junior colleges and universities use student directories there is a great deal of opposition to having one in the college, Powell said. If it is felt that the students want the directory and would buy it, plans for the printing will go ahead, Powell said.

State College To Close Tudor Festival Today

Bringing its Tudor Festival to a close, the San Francisco State College announces a series of musical, dramatic, and dancing presentations to be held this afternoon and evening.

Feature attraction of the afternoon will be the performance of The Tragical History of Dr. Faustus to be given from 2 p.m. to 3:30 p.m. in the Little Theatre of San Francisco State College.

The festival has been in progress since Tuesday with plays, lectures, music, and dancing representative of the Anglo-Saxon Renaissance in English history, known as the Tudor period.

Already presented have been readings of Shakespeare's Twelfth Night, the morality play Everyman, and a presentation of John Heywood's Merry Interlude in the Frederic Burk auditorium on Thursday. Concerts and lectures on Elizabethan themes have been prominently featured during the week's program.

The festival will be concluded tonight with a folk-dance to be held in the Women's Gymnasium of San Francisco State College to continue from 9:30 till midnight.

The entire offering was under the student supervision of John Ward, former student of this college.

Symphony Tickets Still On Sale; See Miss Badger

It is still possible, Flossita Badger of the college music department announced, to secure student rate season tickets to the San Francisco Symphony Orchestra concerts beginning December 6.

Student tickets cost only $6.60 for the entire season of Friday presentations, Miss Badger pointed out, and added that ordinary prices for the same seats are four times that amount.

George Gershwin

Radio Program Today In 200

A musical radio program featuring the compositions of George Gershwin produced by members of the college radio classes will be presented at 12 noon today in Room 200, Marie Weller, radio instructor, announced.

The program, first in a series of musicals is open to all students who are free at that hour. Room 200 is being used because the loudspeaker system and acoustics are better there.

The program consists of recordings by Paul Whiteman and his orchestra of several of the modern pieces written by Gershwin, Ferde Grofe, Dana Suesse, and Frank Signorelli. A student commentator will give a brief history of explanation of the piece and its author.

An entire series of music appreciation scripts to be presented to interested students is now being completed by the script writing classes.

Selections to be heard today are the Paul Whiteman arrangements of the Rhapsody in Blue by Gershwin, On The Trail, from Ferde Grofe's Grand Canyon Suite, Blue Moonlight by Suesse, and Park Avenue Fantasy by Matty Malneck and Frank Signorelli.

The program is expected to last half an hour.

Students Desiring Coaching Requested To See Committee

Students who desire aid from the scholastic council are requested to submit their names, the subject in which they desire assistance, and the time when they can be coached to Room 155, according to Mary Frances Malone, scholastic council chairman.

"If students will leave that information in the file for messages to students, we will make the necessary provisions and arrangements for the actual coaching," Miss Malone declared.

Subjects available include mathematics, English, German, jurisprudence, biology, sociology, astronomy, chemistry, business, history, and economics, she revealed.

Also sponsored by the scholastic council was the assembly held yesterday, at which Dr. Lawrence Harper of the University of California was the guest speaker. The men's double quartet also participated in the program to which all honor groups in the college were invited.

"With the coaching staff organized and the program for the semester completed, we have yet only to provide for the awarding of an annual scholastic trophy," Miss Malone said. "We shall devote the rest of the semester to investigating fully the possibilities of such a trophy and shall announce our results in a later Guardsman."

Burton Wines To Be Next Club Board President

Burton Wines, Beta Tau head, last Tuesday was named president of the Club Advisory Board when nominations for new officers were held at a meeting of the group.

Nominated unopposed for this office, Wines will head the CAB in January, and in this capacity will also serve as member of the Executive Council.

Also named unopposed for office was Jeanne Spencer, representative of the newly chartered Theta Tau and present secretary of the club board who will retain this post next semester.

At the group's election meeting on December 10, therefore, only rivalry will be for the offices of vice-president, Bob Ogg, CAB head, said. Nominated to this post Tuesday were Earl Thollander and Helen Hamilton.

Because a few members have suggested that other nominations should be made before the election is held, a special meeting may be called.

But Officer, I Didn't Know

Traffic officers dole out more tags to and receive more fabulous alibis from student drivers between the hours of 12 noon and 1 p.m. than at any other time, Dean Edwin C. Browne reported this week.

Excuses given by the offenders were of varied classics. One student claimed that the car he was driving, was not his, and thereby thought he could get out of a ticket. When one student was given a ticket, he treated the officer to profanity. After much discussion, he claimed that the officer was threatening him, and demanded his constitutional rights.

Some of the offenders said that they had not seen the No Parking signs at both entrances of the front driveway.

The penalty for these violations amounts to $1.00. The fine does not multiply itself, for each offense thereafter, but, there is a good possibility of the fine being raised for a second, third, and fourth offense, according to the officer who was giving out the tickets.

Municipal Railway Extends Bus Service To College

Terminating the months-long negotiations between college officials and Municipal Railway representatives, bus service direct to the entrance of the Science building went into effect last Monday, November 18.

An extension of the Tenth Avenue Municipal bus line to the immediate entrance of the college was the first advance in the solution of the student transportation problem.

Tabulations of individual transportation difficulties were chiefly responsible for the extension of bus service to the college proper. Data compiled from these reports gathered earlier in the semester, enabled officials of the Municipal Railway to determine a schedule which would offer the greatest convenience to the students at large.

With the first bus arriving at the college at 8:42 every morning, and continuing throughout the day at 11 minute intervals during rush hours and slightly less headway during slack periods, adequate transportation will be provided until the last bus leaves the college at 5 o'clock in the evening.

Negotiations are proceeding toward the establishment of the K line continuation to the junction of Phelan and Ocean Avenues, Dean Edwin C. Browne said this week.

Accepted by students and faculty as a personal boon and a collective security, college officials believe that the new facilities provided by the Tenth Avenue bus service have increased the possibilities of rapid solution of the other transportation problems.

Microfilming To Record Latin American Culture

PROVIDENCE, R. I.—(ACP)—A unique project for microfilming rare and ordinarily inaccessible material on Latin-American culture is being started at Brown University as a world reference center for scholars of early Latin-American civilization.

The project, first of its kind, will be carried out during the next three years under a $35,000 grant from Rockefeller Foundation. Emphasis will be placed upon acquiring microfilm copies of printed works published in South America, Central America and Mexico.

It is said that no library in the United States has more than 25 per cent of the titles needed by students of the history and culture of Latin America in the colonial period. The material is widely scattered among the great libraries of Mexico and South America.

AWS Postpones Skate Party Because Of Dance

Because of time conflict with the Costume Ball, the Associated Women Students have postponed the ice skating party which was to have been held in honor of San Francisco State women students on December 6, Margaret Dougherty, dean of women, has announced.

When plans for the function were made, Mary Frances Malone of the AWS said, it was not known that the Costume Ball was to be on the same evening.

It has not been definitely decided when the State College AWS will be entertained.

Student Elections

Proposed Amendment May Limit Campaign Funds; Jan. 7 Set For Primary

To insure fair play among candidates in the forthcoming student elections, a constitutional amendment was proposed by Bob Dolman, vice-president of the Associated Men Students, forbidding them from spending more than $5.00 for campaign expenses.

Furthermore it was suggested that there be no elaborate campaigning. Candidates, it was thought, should put their pictures on posters, and place them on one bulletin board where all the other candidates would have their pictures.

It was also proposed that any candidate who was found guilty of coersive methods by the Executive Council would be disqualified.

The nominating assembly will be held January 3; the primary election will be held on January 7, with the general election being held on January 9.

The place of polling has not yet been determined, but there will be separate places for men and women. All voters will be registered, and only those having Associated Student cards will be permitted to vote. Regular polling machines are expected to be used.

Edward Hardies, George Meyer, and Charles Keiser are prospective candidates for the office of president of the Associated Students, with Mary Frances Malone running for the office of vice-president. For the office of secretary are Loretta Egan and Edith Callaghan.

Candidacy of these students is not yet definite. Additional candidates wiil be announced as they declare their candidacy.

Veteran's Auditorium Site Of November 13 Dance

The Low Sophomore Class-Associated Student Dance will be held December 13, in the Veterans War Memorial Auditorium, Jean Arnold, social committee chairman announced today.

This is the first dance held this semester at the Veterans Auditorium. "In past semesters, several dances have been held there and have met with the students' approval because of the amount of space in which to dance," Miss Arnold said.

An orchestra for the dance will be chosen next week.

Admission to the dance, which will be semi-formal, will be by Associated Students card, Miss Arnold said.

Commenting upon the success of low sophomore night at the San Francis Hotel last week, Miss Arnold said, "We'd like to thank everyone who attended, for making the affair such a success."

Costume Ball

Masquerade Given December 6

Sponsored by the college Ski Club and Alpha Delta Epsilon, a costume masquerade dance will be held in the women's gym, at 8 o'clock, December 6. The price of admission will be $1.10 per couple.

Anna Held, chairman of the dance committee, announced that masks would be given out free of charge, upon entrance. She added there would be prizes for the best costumes, and also for the most original and funniest ones.

It is expected that Don Mulford's band will be engaged for the dance, Miss Held said.

"The committee would appreciate it, if the students would make their reservations ahead of time," Miss Held said.

Special decorations and lights will be placed around the gym to give the dance appropriate atmosphere, she added, and a professional dancer, whose name has not been revealed as yet, will provide entertainment for the affair.

Mary Frances Malone Appointed Year Book Head

Mary Frances Malone has been appointed editor of Rampages, the college yearbook, to take the post left vacant by the resignation of Dorothy Trood, according to Lillian Hoyle, publicity representative.

Other staff appointments are Elma Oddstead, assistant editor, Robert Nossen, managing editor, and Ted Green, business manager, Miss Hoyle said.

Members of the staff are working on the dummy for the yearbook and plans are progressing rapidly under the direction of the new editor, the publicity representatives announced.

Anyone interested in submitting pictures for publication in Rampages may still do so, she added.

Open Letter To Martin Dies: We've Got A Fifth Column Here Too

By Francis Chrisman

With the thoughts of many Americans turning to national defense and the danger of saboteurs and fifth columnists, discovery of successive events somewhat indicative of treachery has recently been made here at the college by alert, keen-eyed operatives who are working for no one but themselves, but who have the interest of this institution at heart.

As revealed by these unofficial detectives the facts of the dilemma facing the college are something like this.

Since the beginning of the present semester an insidious influence has been at work within these walls. This influence, be what it may, has caused the disappearance of integral parts of telephones which are essential to the inter-communicating network of the college and in some cases has caused the disappearance of the telephones themselves. At this late date, however, there has been no clue uncovered as to the identity or indentities of the guilty party or parties, but all of the aforementioned non-commissioned sleuths are actively engaged in attempts to track down and capture the telephone snatchers.

Reports have been forthcoming lately which claim that actual evidence has been secured proving, without a doubt, the existence of a fifth column or at least an unnatural entity at the college.

"Previously," unknown and perhaps unknowing operatives announce, "we were not quite certain that this virulent thing really existed at all; but on the basis of our latest reports there can remain little doubt as to its existence and its proximity."

On the spur of the moment these facts were revealed by the head operative:

The heating system, which forms a huge network throughout this main building of the campus, has provided the means for subversive activity by innocently acting as a sort of communication system between two or more points. Mysterious tappings and weird hissings have been heard emerging from the radiators in various parts of the building, and it is believed, by those interested in the affair, that these tappings and hissings are messages being sent from one fifth columnist to another.

It is of little use to argue that all these noises are merely the result of a faulty section of the heating system; it is, in fact, even useless to argue that all the apparent action of saboteurs will no longer be present when the radiators are repaired.

For here at the college we have a group who insist that things are not what they should be, and, all facts to the contrary, they insist that we will shortly be at the mercy of a band of unimaginable monsters.

Municipal Railway Deserves Thanks

GENEROUS thanks are due the Municipal Railway Company for its cooperation in accommodating the large portion of students using the 10th Avenue bus line.

Student appreciation of the rerouting of the bus via the college doors is, of course, unanimous. Those who had to tramp over the rugged and often muddy terrain of the, as yet, undeveloped campus could not feel otherwise.

Unfortunately, however, the present bus schedule cannot allow the buses to stop at the college in time for 8 o'clock classes. After conferring with company officials, the college administration reports that the present system is the only possible one now. In the future, when more buses are made available, the situation may be altered to accommodate those having early classes.

Now that the railway company has made this concession in the college interest it is only right that the college should reciprocate and not abuse its new privilege. About the best way to cooperate is to maintain an attitude indicative of intelligent college students on the transportation facilities running to the college at least. We have been informed that several instances of inconsiderate behavior have been observed on some of the Municipal cars. Whether the reports are just idle rumor remains to be seen; in any event it might be well to foster an agreeable impression regarding the college.

Again, appreciation of the company's action and the promptness in which it was effected is owing to the Municipal Railway Company.

Hello Walk Tradition In Virtual Oblivion

WHAT ever happened to that Hello Walk tradition?

The first of this month the college Executive Council attempted to scrape the greeness off the practically traditionless campus by inaugurating the Hello Walk idea whereby students using the walk from the science building to the gyms would exchange hellos in passing.

Such traditions, on the whole, are worth having, especially in a new college, and impart intangible but valuable substance and unity. Thus far, little student cooperation in furthering the tradition has been forwarded. The first few days after its commencement, Hello Walk was the scene of a few sporadic greetings. At the present time, the idea seems to have fallen into virtual oblivion. Response to well-meaning hellos consists largely of blank looks.

Perhaps everyone has forgotten he is on Hello Walk. When the idea was first developed, the Welfare Council began to investigate the possibilities of erecting plaques at each end of the walk by way of explanation. Right now, one month since, the council still appears to be toying with the possibilities of erecting the aforementioned plaques.

While these investigations are in progress, might it not be well for the Welfare Council to contact the art department and perhaps arrange for temporary signs to be made?

Although we realize that establishing a tradition is always more difficult than simply observing it, the end results should more than make up for the troubles encountered in the process of giving this hitherto abandoned tradition life.

With the suggested temporary arrangement followed with real student cooperation, there should be no reason why life cannot be injected into our moribund tradition.

It's worth a try anyway.

Impersonally Speaking

WITH the greatest of chagrin, we recall reading a letter in the Ram's Horn by some sweet young thing who calls herself Miss Junior College. This letter bemoans the discourtesy of the local men. "Heh, heh", we laugh hollowly.

Men are forced to practice being mean and vile for 48 weeks a year to make up for the beating that they take on the other four. Meaning those weeks devoted to Christmas Shopping, which period is aptly dubbed by the defenseless male as "Hell Month."

Being as how this field day for Amazons is almost here, we say to the unwary men among us, "brethren awake!" For to be found alive in the central shopping district during the rush is to be found embalmed ere seven suns have set. That is, if the corpse is worth embalming.

With malice to the opposite sex, the vanguard of the feminine legion spots a man. Then, with a gleam of triumph in her blood-shot eye, she signals to her cronies. Using the old Indian strategy, they surround the now helpless quarry and proceed to close in on him.

As this solid wall of flesh closes in slowly, surely, irresistible, and merciless, like some gigantic baling machine, the victim frantically searches for an avenue of escape. His eyes rove in despair as he hopes against hope for succor. But he is trapped.

As the wall reaches the prisoner, he tries to fight, but to no avail. The determined attackers press relentlessly forward and the screams, the agonizing screams, and the heart-rending cries of the victim split the air. Still there is no letup as the sound of bones and flesh being slowly pulverized fill the ear with its horrible noise.

At last the wall draws back, but they have accomplished their purpose. As the victors go off in search of new spoor, there, in a shapeless heap on the floor, is the crushed and mangled hulk of what had but a few moments before been a man.

Had that bruised and broken mass once enjoyed the pleasure of life? Had he once suffered the pains of this existence? Had we even once loved and been loved? Who is to say?

Perhaps this poor unfortunate who met this untimely end had been marked to be another Caesar. Perhaps this is all that remains of a Jefferson, a Calhoun, a Henry Clay, or even a Lincoln. Indeed this may be an Aristotle nipped in the bud.

As we draw back from the gruesome spectacle, pondering over the small and petty troubles of life and the awesome vastness of the unsolable mysteries of death, we, too, become unwary and fall prey to the predatory herd.

Desperately, we seek to elude the foe. Cut off from hope of salvation, we resolve to defend ourself as becomes a good Republican and a good American. As our doom draws closer, we shout the ancient Irish battle cry, "Sinn Fein", and prepare to account for as many of the enemy as we can.

The fight begins, we are surrounded by piles of the bodies of fallen foe, but nothing can stem the flow of the irresistible tide that is closing in on us. Where one stood before, 50 now stand.

Another person would have met his end, but we are plenty skinny and that forestalled it for a while. Just as we were being overwhelmed by sheer weight of numbers, the closing hours of the store came.

The Spectator

THANKSGIVING vacations may come and go but the flow of motion pictures from the Hollywood "flicker factories" is an unending one. To attempt to probe into the status of the entertainment field, of the moment the Spectator focuses the spotlight on three films this issue. In order of excellence, they are Bittersweet, You'll Find Out, and The Letter.

Bittersweet, the noted Noel Coward operetta success, has been brought to the screen as a starring vehicle for Jeanette MacDonald and Nelson Eddy. Although not their best musical by any means, it still is far superior to some of their previous attempts. The producers have wisely made no attempt to chop up Coward's story. This factor, along with sympathetic direction by W. Van Dyke II, an inspired performance by Miss MacDonald, and the gorgeous technicolor lift Bittersweet high in entertainment values. Nelson Eddy is still too wooden, too stiff in his acting to give his singing partner any competition, but when he sings, you can forgive his underdeveloped thespian talents. As an ardent technicolor advocate, we point with pride to the lavish tinting of Bittersweet. It is one of the picture's highest assets. One slight reservation, however. Bittersweet is a must-see for MacDonald-Eddy-Coward fans, alone. To a theater audience devoid of any interest in these three, the picture would be slightly boring.

ANOTHER musical in a far lighter vein, You'll Find Out also is excellent. Certainly not a great picture in any sense of the word, You'll Find Out still is sure-fire entertainment with laughs galore, and in these troubled times, laughter is a prime necessity in cinema fare. The film is Kay Kyser's second starrer, and it combines a terror-mystery element with music to a surprising satisfaction.

Kay and his band are hired to entertain at Helen Parrish's 21st birthday party in one of those sprawling, snooky mansions. Monsieur Karloff, Lugosi, and Lorre are present to start those chills a-rolling as they attempt to murder the girl. Through some hilarious sleuthing, Kay balks the nefarious plot.

The story is evident from the opening scene, the humor is mostly slap-stick, but it's good fun, just the same. Kay Kyser has a field-day as the frightened band leader. With careful grooming, he might be a second Harold Lloyd for he possesses all the attributes of a comedy star. Director David Butler deserves credit for smart placing of the comedy and spooky sequences. It is perfect balance. The musical portion of the program is top-notch. Harry Babbit's rendition of "What Are You Gonna Do About It" captures vocal honors. Kay's organization is certainly smooth.

Just a word about Warner Bros' The Letter, starring Bette Davis. We were very disappointed in this 1940 adaption of W. Somerset Maugham's drama of passion on an isolated rubber plantation near Singapore. The Letter is dour, bitter, overly grim. It can be praised as a marvelous example of how to build atmosphere and suspense through the use of the camera. William Wyler has directed with this end in mind—creation of a mood of impending disaster and despair. And Bette Davis and James Stephenson are excellent in difficult parts. But The Letter is still a creaky, drab example of overemphasized melodramatics. However, the ladies may like it. They can cry to their heart's content.

What's Your I.Q.?

Sylvester Higgins, our pet book worm, has been delving into encyclopedias, dictionaries, and history books, and wiggled out cram full of data.

One night when my slithering friend is comfortably settled in his armchair by the fire, puffing on his Kirsten, we start swapping facts.

Sylvester proudly informs us that, 1-There has not been a case of yellow fever in the United States since 1905. 2-Paul Muni's real name is Muni Wesenfrend. 3-All colors of the spectrum blended together give white. 4-A Wou-wou is a specie of the Gibbon.

Thanking notre ami, the worm, we look at him slyly and say, "Well, you never thought that," 1-Warren Harding's middle name was Gamaliel. 2-Georgia had 287,931 acres of peanuts in 1925. 3-One cord equals 3.6245 steres. 4-One cubic meter equals one stere. (Figure it out for yourself.)

"Heh, heh," Sylvester snickers, "listen to this," 1-The Merula Migrateria is commonly known as the robin.

We are amazed, but valiantly give out with this information, 1-March 13, 1938, Hitler entered Austria. 2-Dr. Townsend, on April 18, 1938, started a thirty day stretch in the jug, for refusing to testify before a Congressional Committee. 3-There were 4,500,000 colonies of bees in the United States in 1938.

We sit open mouthed and completely awed, and timidly come forth with the following, 1-Don't stand under a tall oak in a lightening storm, as it is the most susceptible to lightening. 2-Spinach is good for the nerves. 3-Married couples should be separated at a formal dinner table. 4-Sponge your raincoat to keep it in good condition.

On The Feminine Side

THE most engrossing problem to the majority of the master minds of this college is not "What will Bulgaria do?" or "Should we give Britain more credit?", but instead "Who's going to win the Big Game and what odds will you give me?"

Accordingly the equally important problem of what to wear both before and after the game at Berkeley is receiving no small amount of recognition where the college women are concerned.

College colors will, of course, be most popular with feminine rooters for both Cal and Stanford. We've seen some knock-out suits and dresses in the approved colors recently, especially since brilliant shades of red have come into their fashion's own.

At The Game

For those enthusiastic Cal boosters who want to do the thing up brown, we saw a lush blue and gold three piece suit in one of the downtown stores only the other day. The skirt and jacket were in a soft shade of harbor blue with a dull gold overplaid and were neatly tailored; incidentally, the jacket was unusually long even in these days of the "long torso" fad. A well-cut harbor blue coat, ideal for tossing over one's shoulders in the chill last half of the game, completed the suit.

On the other side of the fence (or stadium, to be more exact) will be the Stanford red in great profusion. To stick to the smart and practical three piece suit idea, we saw a tremendously smart pro-Indian outfit recently. A strictly tailored skirt and jacket in a practically screaming fire-engine red was combined with a navy woolen coat lined in the same vivid red; a novel touch was added by the red-bound revers of the coat.

Absolutely partisan will be the choice of chrysanthemums to complete one's ensemble, whether they be gold or white; perhaps we have been too much influenced by Hollywood's conception of all Big Games, but we think that huge chrysanthemums really add the finishing touch of collegiate atmosphere.

Big Game Night

And when the game is over and the shouting has quieted down (a little), there's always the jolly little question of clothes for the evening. While there will be some women in street-length dresses as per usual, it's safe to say that the majority will be wearing their dinner dresses or formals for a gala evening.

Among the more beautiful formals is the one featured by another of the local stores. This dress, which comes in the softest pastels imaginable, has a tight-fitting bodice of mettalic cloth with a scalloped neckline; the short sleeves of the bodice carry out the same scalloped motif. The very full and very festive skirt is fashioned of yards and yards of billowing chiffon.

The woman who prefers tailored dinner clothes to the more feminine styles will find a perfect foil for her taste in a beautifully cut gold lame shirtwaist dress with long fitted sleeves. Blue jeweled buttons (ye goode olde Cal spirit) add a rather different touch to the outfit.

In high favor at present are those striking red or green dinner dresses with or without long sleeves. Gold kid trimming about the simple round neck and sleeves gives an extra lift to the dresses, and they're expecially good for those nights when the object is to dress up but not too much.

Wise is the woman who will line up her outfits for tomorrow in advance, for after the kick-off it's quite doubtful that such minor items as Hitler's war or clothes will receive any consideration.

Shots At RAMdom . . .

PROFESSOR A. BEFUDDLEBRAIN invited us to dine in his hectic little house last Sunday. Each week, you know, over BCN's Aquamarine Network, the professor conducts the program, Let's Go Befuddling with Professor Befuddlebrain.

Armed with vest-pocket editions of Bulfinch's Mythology, Who's Who for 1940, a 2nd edition Merriam-Webster, Bartlett's Familiar Quotations, and several minor reference works, we approached the Befuddled brain household just bubbling over with trepidations. The nightmare began when we read an inscription on the doormat: Are you Welcome? Yes or No. Smiling wanly we pounded a brass knocker on the Befuddled brain escutcheon: a salient question mark crossed by a bend sinister.

JUNIOR BEFUDDLEDBRAIN let us in with a quaint: "So, you're the sucker this evening. Well, don't chill the house; come in."

We found the professor ensconsed in a double wing back chair blowing reasonable facsimilies of question marks with a meerschaum pipe. "You met Junior, huh? Bright boy, isn't he? Some day he'll carry on the Befuddledbrain tradition."

"Most certainly," we replied, rising to extricate a thumbtack from a painful predicament.

The dinner began auspiciously. Rash person that we are, we asked Mrs. Befuddledbrain to pass the peas. Smiling sweetly, she poised the dish just out of reach and said, "All other things being equal, just how many peas do you think contained here? And no coaching, Junior."

SMILING JUST AS sweetly, we replied, "963"; we worked in a cannery in our youth.

The professor was next. Eying the main dish, a horribly amorphous mass of what appeared to be meat balls, he queried, "What would you say, as an average man, you were eating?" What a jolly fellow.

At that moment a blinding light flashed in our face from the wall. It developed into a neon sign reading, "SORRY, NO SCORE ON THAT." In the course of the evening, several such signs ranging from "CORRECT—100% CORRECT to the former message blinked on and off—all controlled by push buttons from the professor's place.

MIDWAY THROUGH DESSERT while our scores were being tabulated, we learned that the low man did the dishes. Junior's greeting flashed to our mind; we glanced about wildly for an open window. But it was too late. The score card was being solemnly passed around the table.

Junior excused himself, casting us a pitying expression. The professor coughed, rose, gripped our shoulder reassuringly, and left without a word. Mrs. Befuddledbrain smiled sweetly at us and retired from the dining room, leaving on our lap a lovely magenta colored apron with organdy ruffles.

• Bus Misses 8 O'Clocks

Editor, The Guardsman:

It was considerate of the Municipal Railway to extend their bus service up to the very portals of the college. I am sure all students who will profit thereby are immensely grateful. A long walk, frequently through rain and mud, has been spared them.

But, since the service doesn't start until 8:45, what about the ones who come earlier. What about the students who have 8 o'clock classes every morning like myself. Must we still trudge through rain and mud and sleet just because we have an early class. We should be considered as well because we too contribute to the support of the bus line.

Surely the Municipal Railway officials can be persuaded to have the buses drive up to the college one or two trips to accommodate all the student patrons of their line.

Yours respectfully,

E. M.

• College Out Of Ink

Editor, The Guardsman:

Don't you think that something can be done about the ink situation. I mean what the heck can you do when you run out of ink in the libe and you're miles from any ink? In other junior colleges and universities in the bay region there are bottles of ink in convenient places for the students to use in such an emergency. Even in the high school I went to ink was available.

A pen cap hold just so much ink and after you have been to three or four lectures and writing out home work, etc. for a couple of hours the thing goes dry.

• Dust Bowl Makes Tramps

Editor, The Guardsman:

I would like to comment on the dusty condition of the lot across the street from the college. Those of us who are not lucky enough to have machines to get to school have to come daily across this lot. Would it be possible for a gravel walk to be put in so that a person who has to cross the dust bowl?

It is practically foolish to shine one's shoes for they look like they've never been shined by the time one gets to the other side of the lot. It may sound silly but it would keep some of the students from looking like tramps quite as much as they do at present.

Season Ends In Winning Streak; Crown Hopes Rest On San Mateo

By The Guardsman Sports Editor

With equipment safely put away to gather dust until spring practice rolls again, the Grandstand Gridsters and Sunday Afternoon quarterbacks look over a season, 'tho finished for the Rams, holds a spark of a possibility that may blaze the college eleven into the ozonic heights of league champions.

Decisively defeating the strong San Mateo Bulldogs 7 to 0, as well as defeating Modesto 19 to 7 in their last encounter of the season the Rams placed within a leap of crowning glory. There remains a so-called Gordian Knot that must first be unravelled, however, to crown the Rams champions definitely. San Mateo Bulldogs must defeat Sacramento.

Simply, the standings are thus:

There are four colleges in the league. Modesto, Sacramento, San Mateo and the college. Modesto has lost two games and therefore is definitely out of the running. San Mateo and Sacramento have one more league game—the one which they play each other. San Mateo has won one over Modesto and lost one to the college. Sacramento has managed a tie with Modesto and defeated the Rams, so far, placing them on the top of the heap.

Should San Mateo defeat Sacramento, however, the Panthers will have won one, lost one, tied one, thus lowering the average below that of the college. The Rams, having defeated the Bulldogs, will have a higher percentage, although both teams will have won two and lost one.

Therefore, the championship hopes fall not on the college, but on an outsider and once an enemy, the Bulldogs of San Mateo. But to look over the season—

The Rams have won 6 games, lost 2 and tied 1. On the opening game of the season, a twice defeated Placerville eleven swarmed over Seals Stadium and routed the highly touted Ramsters 7 to 0.

An intercepted pass in the third quarter lead to the defeat when Ostrom of Placer caught the ball and scooted to the Ram 17. Ostrom again broke loose and got down to the 2, from where Chidester whammed over to score. Ostrom place-kicked clear out of the park.

Defeats State 19-13

Frenzied by the second successive defeat, the Rams, displaying a tremendous increase in offensive power, blasted the four year college of S. F. State by a tune of 19 to 13. Considered by many as the best game of the season, the Rams, lead by Al Nauman, fought nip and tuck with Chad Reade and State for three quarters deadlocked 13 all.

On a crossbuck after an interception by Dick Wilson deep in State territory, Al Nauman whacked the line, broke loose and scored, winning the game.

Cal. Frosh Defeated For First Time By A J.C. 6-0

For the first time since the history of the University of California Frosh donned suits, did they taste defeat from a junior college eleven. A series of passes from Nauman to Herb Taylor and Luke Lowell broke the jinx midway in the third quarter.

After charging from their own 28, the Rams worked their way to the Cub 10. Two line bucks failed, so Nauman was called upon to pass. Drifting through the secondary, Lowell snagged the pass on the 2 and waltzed over to score. S.F.J.C. 6—Cal Frosh 0.

Travel To L.A., Honnert Plays Here 7-6

A 67 yard spurt in the second quarter by Jack Fellows of LACC that resulted in their touchdown almost lost the game for the Rams. However, badly battered and taped from head to foot, Jim Honnert whacked the Angelenos' line carrying the whole team on his back, scored from the 4 yard line, then came back and place-kicked the winning extra point.

The 7 to 6 score showed well the fighting spirit of both teams, scribes of the south describing the game as one of the most closely fought junior college games thus far.

Lose First League Game, Trip Costly

Suffering a 6 to 0 defeat by an underrated Sacramento eleven, the Rams lost their first conference opener when a sustained drive from their own territory ended with an intercepted pass on the Panther 10, and a 90 yard breakaway touchdown by George Jensen of the Capital City.

Playing his next to last game of the season was spark-plug Al Nauman, called to duty by the Naval Reserves. Conscription also hit fullback Joe Johnson, alternating with Honnert and Warren Nelson.

6-6 Tie With USF Frosh, Nauman Plays Farewell Game

Moved from his spot at left end, Herb Taylor created a stir with his ballpacking, which held the touted USF Frosh to a 6 to 6 tie. A pass of 40 yards by Jim Honnert to Elwood Bernstein, who wormed his way for the remaining 10 yards tied the score after an intercepted pass by Martin, and a lateral to Sheridan made the first score.

Al Nauman, benched for half the game, broke away late in the third quarter for a 90 yard sprint to a touchdown, but was called back on the 38 where referees said he had run out of bounds.

Rout San Mateo 6-0, Rain Fails To Stop Ram Machine

In a rain-soaked field, a select group of true spirited rooters saw the Rams swim to a 7 to 0 victory over the San Mateo eleven for the first league win of the season. Eugene Short, new to the Ram roster, recovered a Bulldog fumble on their 19, and drives by Taylor, Honnert and Urbano made possible the chance for the first to score. Bernstein converted. Kenny Hagen, college end, played one of his best games, and Bernstein brought his chances for all-conference a niche higher with his coverage of punts.

Slaughter Pasadena 18-0 In Armistice Day Tilt

Less than seven minutes after the referee's whistle opened the game, the Rams roared 30 yards on power plays to score the first 6 of 18 points that defeated the Pasadena Bulldogs. Early in the third quarter, Dave Cunningham passed to Bernstein to add 6 more, and then followed five minutes later when Honnert passed to Jack Medrano for the final 18 to 0 score. Out of three chances at conversions, the college placement kickers failed to score a single one.

Jimmie Honnert added two more touchdowns to his credit when he went over for the first and second scores of the 19 to 6 Modesto slaughter. Taylor, the shifted tailback whammed the line for the final score, and Bernstein converted. Dick Davy of the Bucs made their lone score.

Defeating the Bucks by the decisive score terminated the college gridiron career for nine men. most of them from the first string. Ken Hagen, rated by many to be of all-conference calibre, and Elwood Bernstein finished their playing with a blaze of glory.

Bill Windeler and Pinky Larracou, tackle and guard respectively, and Clark Johnson, demon running guard also saw action for the last time. Pivoting between the two guards, Dick Wilson played his final game of the season for Coach Lee Eisan.

Backfield men lost to universities were Herb Taylor and David Cunningham, tailback and half respectively. Al Nauman, spark plug of the team was lost to the Naval Reserves earlier in the season.

So, while the fighting Rams finished in a blaze of glory, they must wait for another college to defeat another college that defeated them to win championships. Funny, eh wot?

Field Day To Open Activities Dec. 7; Gunn Named Chairman

Plans for the Women's Athletic Association traditional Tourney Week, to be held December 7 to 12 are now being formulated, Barbara Smith, WAA president, announced this week.

Tourney Week, which has always been held at the close of each semester's WAA sports program, will start with a Field Day on December 7, and will terminate with a banquet on December 12.

Exhibitions of all WAA activities will be held on Field Day, in order to inform spectators of the aims and ideals of the WAA in this college.

Tourney Week chairmen are Barbara Gunn, general chairman; Pat Greenley, invitations chairman; Ruby Klistoff, program chairman; Irene Weid, entertainment chairman; Lydia Reidman, decorations chairman, and Dorothy Ann Kraull, rearrangements chairman.

Recently elected by the WAA council was a nominations committee, consisting of Ruby Klistoff, Pat Greenley, Blanche Noyes, and Dorothy Nel. They will be in charge of nominating the club managers for the various WAA sports clubs of next semester.

Hostesses for the week include, Mary Frances Malone, Dorothy Trood, Virginia Hubbert, and Jean Arnold.

Women May Abolish Block Award System

Abolition of the Women's Athletic Association Block Society will be discussed at a meeting of the entire organization, to be held next Tuesday at 3 p.m., Barbara Smith, WAA president, announced this week.

No classes will be excused for the meeting, but all WAA members who are free at that time are urged to attend, Miss Smith said.

Prior to this semester, Block awards have been allotted to the woman attaining the highest number of points in WAA competition. Those few who received the awards, automatically became members of the Block Society, whose only function is to vote upon and select the outstanding member of the WAA, to whom the block letter will be awarded.

Feeling that since there were only three Block Society members, a very small percentage of the WAA, a committee began investigations to discover if the point system of first, second and third awards, was being used in other colleges.

Questionnaires were then sent out to Wellesley, Purdue, Wayne and Michigan Universities, with a majority of them answering that they did not favor the point system of first, second and third awards.

Three out of four answered "yes" to the question of whether they were noticing a tendency away from the award system. Three out of four answered "yes" when asked if participation in sports was increased by doing away with higher awards.

"We feel that the awarding of only first, second, and third block emblems causes participation in the WAA sports to rest on too high a competitive basis and discourages women who are not quite so adept in sports from coming out to play," Miss Smith commented.

The present organization of the Block Society in this college was copied six years ago from the plan in use by the University of California, Bertha Mae Keller, physical education instructor, said.

"Proposed plan of awards now under consideration," Miss Smith explained, "is that of awarding a letter to each woman participating in a sport, if she merits it, through her attendance at the sports practice period, and her enthusiasm for the sport."

George Humphrey, Ken Reichart Lead Ram Rifleers To 933-870 Victory Over U.S.F. Sharpshooters

In a match held November 19, the college rifle team defeated the University of San Francisco rifleers by a decisive margin on the home range according to Captain Fred McFarland, team coach. The score was 933 to 870.

George Humphrey and Ken Reichart led the team to victory. Humphrey scoring 191, Reichart 190. Charles North, Hal Pack and Akimasa Uyeda all registered 184. Ed Turman led the USF team with 186.

Last Monday night the college B team was defeated in the first round of the Class C city championships by the Industrial Rifle Club in a match held on the Golden Gate rifle range. The score was 899 and 882.

Fred Ward of the Industrial Rifle Club garnered the individual honors of the match with a mark of 189. College scores were Bob Jones and Phil Miller 181, Bill Hart, Leo Michaels and Phil DeGroot 172.

Boxing

Preliminary Bouts Completed, Classification, Training Soon

Preliminary bouts were held yesterday and Wednesday in the elimination tourney to decide participants in the Associated Men Students fights, Joe Lantagne, boxing coach, announced.

Bouts were held too late for publications, but results will be announced in The Guardsman soon, it was said.

The fighters will be divided into weight classes and the winners of the preliminaries will meet in the finals which will constitute the AMS fights.

Lantagne set Monday as the deadline for latecomers, explaining that anyone who wishes to sign up late can do so if he has kept himself in condition by participating in some other sport. The members who have signed up must present Lantagne with a medical certificate before they will be allowed to take part in the preliminaries.

Entrants Must Train

Lantagne emphasized that anyone out of condition would not be allowed to fight.

Medals have been procured to give the champions of the various divisions according to Ted Theodus, AMS president. The first place winners will get gold medals. If arrangements go through as planned the runner-up will get a bronze medal but this is not definite as yet, Theodus said.

The AMS fights will find eight bouts of three, two-minute rounds which is the standard intercollegiate method.

Judo Bouts Featured

In addition to the fights there will be two exhibition wrestling matches and some Judo bouts. Lantagne describes Judo as an old Oriental sport.

Though it is still too early to name all of the students who will compete in the final bouts, Lantagne mentioned a few who are expected to compete. Bill Edwards, two-title winner of last semester, will be back to defend his 145 title.

Bud Callaway, who lost to Edwards in the fights last semester, will be back to attempt to revenge his defeat. Tak Momii, diminutive Japanese boxer, will appear if a small enough opponent can be found to meet him.

Wrestlers Named

Three of the men who will wrestle in the ten minute exhibition bouts include Ed Epling versus John Getas, who appeared last semester, and Angelo Getas, brother to John, who will meet an unknown opponent.

Captain Fred C. McFarland, intramural director, announced that winners in the intramural sports program would receive their medals at the fights.

All men and women students are urged to attend the bouts. All students will be admitted free of charge, and are promised an evening full of entertainment.

Intramural

Swim Meet This Afternoon

This afternoon at the Jefferson Union High School pool in Daly City, the intramural swimming meet will take place, Paul Postler, intramural manager, announced earlier this week.

Under the tutelage of John Hurley, college swimming coach, the aquatic luminaries of the college have been pointing toward the tourney, Postler said. Two of the leading swimmers are Bill Lucas and Eric Bower, he claimed.

Eight Events Listed

The events are to be 50-yard free style, 50-yard breast stroke, 50-yard back stroke, 100-yard free style, 220-yard free style, 75-yard medley, relay, and diving competition. According to the manager, the events are slated to run off in that order.

All entries for the tourney must be in by noon today, and can be handed in at the main gym office, Postler said.

Volleyball competition is scheduled to start either Monday or Tuesday of next week. The games will be played in the men's gym, he said. All teams that have signified intention of competing are advised to watch the intramural bulletin board for the schedule.

The Eds, Beta Phi Beta, Marshmallow Pushers, King's Men, Newman Club, and Tri-Epsilon have entered teams. The tourney will be played off on an elimination basis, Postler declared. Teams may compete with six men, but a squad must consist of eight men. Failure to have at least six men ready at game time will result in the team being disqualified, he warned.

Boxing Matches On Dec. 11

The boxing matches are to take place on the evening of December 11, Postler revealed. The matches are under the eye of Joe Lantagne, college boxing instructor.

As a further attraction, the intramural winners will be awarded their medals at the boxing show.

Soccer Season Not So Bad At That!

By Willard Akers

Though the Ram soccer team failed to win championships this season, the boys did themselves proud. The classic upset pulled by the men in red this season was the 1 to 1 tie with San Jose State two weeks ago.

The Spartans from San Jose were highly touted, and were supposed to breeze through Coach Lantagne's Rams. Lantagne had shifted his team lineup for the contest. The boys played an inspired game, and led the wonders from San Jose until the last five minutes of play, when a weary Ram eleven couldn't halt the Spartan rally in time. That one tie made a mediocre season into a good one.

San Jose Undefeated

San Jose State has remained undefeated for the past two years of league play, according to Lantagne. The Rams are the only team to have tied the Spartans within this period, and San Jose admits that it was lucky to escape from the last Ram encounter with a tie.

Lantagne's lads finished their season a week ago, when Stanford's Indians administered the locals a 4 to 1 trouncing at Palo Alto.

Lantagne Satisfied

"I am satisfied with my first season here at the college," Lantagne commented early this week. I was new to the college, and we had to start out with a green team in a tough soccer league. Our record showing only two wins against three losses explains only half of the story."

The Rams tied three league games, and lost two by the narrow margin of one goal. Only once were they definitely defeated, and that was the Stanford tilt last week, Lantagne said.

Next season looks like it will be a good one, since all but one of the regular soccer stars will be returning. Henry Kreutzmann, hard-charging forward will be lost to the team next season, but Lantagne hopes to replace him with newcomers when next spring rolls around.

Start Season With Upset

With an upset victory over a reportedly strong California Aggie team, the Rams started off in their quest for the championship.

Meeting San Mateo the next week, the rolling Ram machine struck a snag, and luckily pulled out of the contest with a 1 to 1 tie, after trailing until the final five minutes of play.

The following week, at Berkeley, the Rams lost to a strong California Bear team, 2 to 0, after fighting against the umpire for the entire game. The Rams looked good in that contest, and might have won if they had the breaks.

Returning to San Francisco and the Beach Chalet field the next week, Lantagne's men battled the U.S.F. Don eleven to a 1 to 1 deadlock. The Rams led for most of the game, but the persistent Dons managed to push through a fluke goal in the last of the third quarter. The tiring Rams tried, but couldn't manage to put through another game to win the game.

Resuming their winning ways with a 4 to 0 slaughter over Menlo the next week. Menlo had the weakest team in the league loop, however, so the walkaway score really didn't show much about the power of the Ram attack.

The axe fell on Ram championship hopes the following week, when San Francisco State walked away from the fighting Rams to take the ball game 2 to 1. That game wasn't nearly as close as the score seemed to indicate, since State had the situation well under control throughout the contest, and were constantly deluging the Ram goalie with tries for goals.

After a week's layoff, the red and white soccermen invaded San Jose to play that upsetting tie with the Spartans.

One of the noticeable defects of this semester's soccer team was the lack of capable reserves. Micky Duzdevich, one of the best goalies to play in the league, was moved up to strengthen the forward attack in mid season. His absence from the goal was felt in the following contests, when several fluke goals got by the hard-working goalie Francis Schneider.

Another noticeable fault of the team was their losing of early leads in the closing minutes of play. Both the U.S.F. and San Jose State contests were lost in that manner. Had the locals been able to hold out, they would have finished much higher up in league standings than they did after tieing three tilts.

Lantagne Deserves Credit

Joe Lantagne worked hard this season to produce a winner from the green material he had to start with. Lantagne deserves credit for the gallant fight put up by his team in several league fracases, and he alone, is responsible for the excellent condition shown by his players.

Lantagne was regarded as a "slave-driver" by his players, yet he constantly insisted that they train every day. Many a strong league team was nearly upset when opposed by the stamina of the well-conditioned Rams.

The players have been neglected in the handing out of praise. Duzdevich has been mentioned before, but not enough praise can be heaped upon little Micky.

Bert Korn, speedy right wing, played outstanding ball throughout the season. Korn, time and again, fooled opposing players, and managed to dribble the ball into scoring territory. Though Korn didn't make many goals, he was responsible for most of them.

Clarence Waddington, reliable left wing, did much of the scoring for the Rams, and was constantly helping in every scoring drive made by the local team. Another outstanding shinkicker is Johnny Lazar, diminutive fullback, who found himself in the last two games. Lazar had played fullback in high school, but was moved to center forward this season.

Lantagne later moved Lazar back, where his booming kicks kept the Rams out of many tight spots in the San Jose game. Bill Fairfield, another outstanding fullback, persistently kept the ball away from the Ram goal.

Formal Bids On Sale Soon; 11 Enter Sweetheart Race

Bids for the high sophomore formal, climax of sophomore week's festivities, will be placed on sale within a short time, Alden Thorogood, high sophomore president, said this week.

The bids, he emphasized, will be sold only through the college bank. Present plans indicate, he said, that the sale will be necessarily limited to 150 bids, and cost of the bids will be $1.25 per couple.

The dance is scheduled to be held at the California Country Club, which was also the location of last semester's formal. No orchestra has been decided upon as yet, Thorogood said.

January 11, date set for the dance, will be the first time the traditional formal has been held on a Saturday night.

Setting an all time high, 11 college women have entered the battle for the Sophomore Sweetheart crown, contest chairman, Elmer Hubacher, disclosed today.

Election date for the contest has been set for January 3, with balloting restricted to men students, Hubacher said. Explaining the committee's decision to exclude women from voting in the election, he said, "After all the contest is for the sophomore sweetheart, so we think the men should elect her."

The eleven entrants, who will compose the largest group of candidates since the inception of the contest, are as follows:

Contestants will be formally introduced to the student body at the low sophomore class dance December 13, according to Hubacher. Pictures of all entrants, which he said were taken last Wednesday by Bill Quandt, student photographer, will be placed on display in the halls next Monday. Announcing the purchase by the contest committee of a sun-ray trophy cup to be awarded the winner, Hubacher said the cup, 10 inches high, will also be on display next week.

In addition to the trophy, the winner of the contest will be awarded the traditional free bid to the high sophomore formal, January 11.

Muni Extension To Phelan To Be Decided By Survey

Results of the second student transportation survey conducted last week, will be released at the end of this week or early next week, Edwin C. Browne, dean of men, announced on Wednesday.

This second survey, taken on November 19, will chiefly determine the traffic on the Municipal K line, Dean Browne said.

"It is hoped that its results may be an influential factor in adjustment of the K line on Ocean Avenue," he commented, "to the end that a switchback may be installed at Phelan and Ocean Avenues, thus preventing the trek by foot that students are forced to take along the muddy trail from Ocean Avenue to the college.

The new service of the Tenth Avenue bus line, established after the first survey was taken last month, has proved a great boon to the students, Dean Browne commented. Final tabulation of the second one may possibly show a transfer of traffic from the K to this busline, it is believed.

Library Has Geology Material For Reference

The library has purchased a private collection of geological material to be used for reference by the geology department of the college, according to Marcus Skarstedt, librarian.

Much of this material has been out of print for sometime and was difficult to secure, Skarstedt said.

The collection contains 100 large United States geological survey folios, several United States geological survey bulletins of various kinds and publications of the American Institute of Mining Engineers.

Several seperate volumes dealing with geological material have also been secured for the library's collection, the librarian added.

College Artists Display Excursion Paintings

Alpha Delta Epsilon, college art club, which recently made a painting and picnic excursion to Shelter Cove, is currently displaying its work in Room 160 as a part of American Art Week.

Indications are, according to Richard Allman, college art instructor, that other work of the art department may be displayed some time this semester.

Fliers Get Course In Teaching

An apprentice - instructors' course, designed to train advanced aviation students for positions as flight instructors, will be inaugurated into the aviation curriculum next semester, Capt. George D. Richards, head of the department, announced today.

Upon the completion of the minimum 75 hours of flight training, college flight cadets will be eligible to register for the course, Richards said, and applicants will be selected on the basis of their flight records and their adaptability and potential skill in flight-training posts.

Those registered in the advanced course this semester have completed their advanced-flight solos, and intensive training in aerial acrobatics and maneuvers now comprises the greater part of the program. Ground school training in conjunction with the course is preparing students for the Army's Randolph Field lieutenancies, and others will have made the initial step in careers in commercial aviation.

The primary flight-training program students have completed their solos and have passed the half-way mark in the semesters quota of 35 flying hours. Students in this course will register in the advanced aerial program next semester.

Paint Tech Students Hear Chemist Harry Eastwood

Harry Eastwood, Chief Chemist of the R. N. Nason Company, spoke to the paint technology students last Tuesday on paints and paint pigments, Walter D. Forbes, paint technology instructor, announced this week.

Eastwood is the president of the Golden Gate Paint, Varnish and Lacquer Production Club.

The speaker noted that paint pigments are of two types, zinc oxide, and zinc sulphate, and white lead is the best single pigment.

"When selecting a paint," he said, "one should consider its cost, quality, type, wear under weather, and the time element between coats."

In answer to a question put to him by Forbes, concerning the opportunities of employment for students after they have completed the paint technology course, the chief Chemist answered that there are positions open in many plants for salesmen, cost accountants, production men, and foremen.

"It is unfortunate," he continued, "that so many of the paint salesmen know so little about their jobs."

He stressed the fact that the length of time required to train a man—not necessarily a paint technician—for a place in a paint plant ranged from two to five years.

"I had to spend four months," Eastwood said, "looking for a bright young man qualified for the position the plant had to offer in its laboratory."

The speaker concluded by noting that the National Paint Varnish and Lacquer Association is making great efforts to make the public paint conscious—particularly with respect to "paint styling."

Business Students Placed In Full Time Jobs

Several students of the business courses of the college have been placed in full-time jobs, in large companies, F. Grant Marsh, college business instructor said Wednesday.

The students who have been placed lately are as follows:

Mathew Barulich and James Collings with the Associated Indemnity Company. Bill Leahy with the Southern Pacific as a checker; Muriel Weiner, Phoenix Mutual Life Insurance Company; Betty Fagerston, Sun Life Insurance Company. Silvio Bessome passed the Federal Civil Service examination and classified as a junior typist. Jack Stein was placed with Bullock and Jones, Haberdashers, as a clerk.

According to Marsh, most of the jobs which are secured for the students of the business courses are clerical.

Silva Offers Employment Suggestions To Students

Claude T. Silva, instructor at the college and head of the recently formed college employment bureau, today offered suggestions to those men and women interested in entering the business world upon completion of their studies here at the college.

"There are a great many calls for male typists and stenographers," Silva said, "and quite a few calls for women capable of operating office machinery."

Silva stressed the fact that jobs can always be secured for those who are capable and efficient workers and that there is a lack of positions only for those who are not well versed in their chosen fields.

"These facts," Silva commented, "are substantiated by the California State Employment Bureau and by experience gained in the operation of such a bureau as we have here at the college."

College Band To Practice Light Concert Selections

With the end of the football season for the Rams, the college band will turn to light concert music for their remaining rehearsals this semester, according to Madison Devlin, leader of the group.

No attempt at heavy concert music will be made, he emphasized, since the music-makers are but newly organized and have not had enough foundation for this type of work.

New talent for the group, particularly in material for student leader, is still being sought, Devlin announced, and those who wish to qualify are asked to attend this afternoon's rehearsal, to be held in Room 200 at 4:15 p.m.

Wilson College, Chambersburg, Pa., recently awarded honor scholarships to 11 students.

City Sponsors Contest For Rose Bowl Float

Announcement of a contest, sponsored by the City of San Francisco to determine a theme for the city's float in the annual Tournament of Roses at Pasadena was made today by Claude Silva, instructor at the college.

General theme of the tournament, Silva explained, will be early American history, and the contest is being conducted to discover a special and appropriate theme for the San Francisco float.

Winner of the competition will receive recognition and a cash prize and should submit his entry within the next two weeks at the latest.

All students interested are urged to see either Richard M. Allman or Evans M. Ecke, art instructors at the college, and obtain all established rules.

Market Car Tickets On Sale At Bank

Market Street Railway car tickets are now on sale at the finance office and are available to all junior college students regardless of age, Michael M. Zarchin, assistant comptroller, announced recently.

"I would like to urge junior college students to purchase their tickets at our finance office instead of other places," he stated.

"Unless we can show the Market Street Railway Company that it is worth while to allow our junior college students to buy their tickets, I am afraid the company might withdraw this privilege," Zarchin explained.

Two car ticket blanks may be bought at one purchase, instead of the one that was formerly allowed, Zarchin added.

AMS Boxing Matches Scheduled For Coliseum Bowl December 11

Associated Men Students fights will be held Wednesday, December 11 at the Coliseum Bowl beginning at 8 o'clock, Ted Theodus, AMS president, announced this week.

"Joe Lantagne, fight trainer, has the boys practicing to make this fight something to remember," Theodus said.

During the night of the fights, it has been planned to have the intramural medals awarded, he said.

"We are hoping that Louis G. Conlan will announce our fights," Theodus revealed.

Besides the main events, Theodus hopes to secure certain sport dignitaries to officiate.

"I hope to make this fight even better than the one held last term," Theodus said.

Last semester the winner of the gold trophy for being the outstanding fighter in the championships was Bill Edwards who boxed and fought his way to titles in two divisions—the 159 and 169 classes.

About 1000 members of the student body witnessed last semester's fights.

Entrance Exams For S. F. State Given December 14

Entrance qualifying examinations at San Francisco State College will be given on the following dates: Saturday, December 14, from 9 to 12 o'clock, the Aptitude test; English fundamentals on Saturday, December 14, from 1 to 3 o'clock.

All entering freshmen are required to take these tests and all junior college transfers must take the aptitude test. Admission to the college depends in part upon this test.

The same tests will be given on January 27 for spring entrants who did not take them on the advanced date. Students who are planning to enroll in the spring semester should file transcripts and make personal application to the registrar during the Christmas holidays.

Judicial Committee To Appoint New Members

A meeting at 12 o'clock today will decide the new appointments to be added to the judicial committee because of the resignation of some of the members of the committee, Ed Hardies, judicial committee chairman, announced this week.

"We will probably discuss the problem of putting pictures on student body cards for identification purposes at this meeting," he said, "and we will either start working toward such a plan, or disregard the plan entirely if the members of the committee find it impractical."

W. J. Gillstrap

Banker Speaks To Students

Speaking before the college business 97a class, W. J. Gillstrap, manager of foreign exchange at the Wells-Fargo Bank, said that a study of foreign exchange will afford a better understanding of foreign affairs.

Foreign Economy Controlled

"Foreign exchange trading is rapidly dwindling. Not a country in the world with the exception of the United States, has currency that is not controlled by government," Gillstrap pointed out.

Rates in this country must be kept the same as other open markets in foreign countries in order to trade, he said. Political and economic developments influence the foreign exchange trade.

American Dollar Unique

"Practically the only free currency in the world today is the dollar. Our country cannot sent anything to the invaded countries without securing a license from the United States," Gillstrap continued.

The foreign exchange markets are open 24 hours a day. Either Europe, New York, San Francisco, China and Japan, or India are open for exchanges, he explained.

"The job of a foreign exchange trade requires that he must calculate quickly and accurately. He must be wide awake to the changes made around him every day," Gillstrap remarked.

COLLEGE

THE failure of Ski Club and Alpha Delta Epsilon members to sell enough tickets for the masquerade ball is unfortunate, to say the least.

The college hasn't had a masquerade dance for some time. As a matter of fact the last one was a year and a half ago when the Block Society sponsored a suppressed desire dance.

Of course, with many social affairs on the calendar at this time, some lack of interest might by expected, but it is to be hoped that enough tickets will be sold by tomorrow that the dance may be held.

CITY

REMEMBER the Golden Gate International Exposition, the beauty of Treasure Island at night?

That memory will soon be erased and another in its place instead. The future vision will be one of sailors, sailors, and more sailors, swarmng over the island.

This is of course providing that plans go through to turn Treasure Island into a naval supply base. The navy usually gets what it asks for however, so we may expect an influx of navy men any day now.

San Francisco and East Bay business ought to pick up a little if the island becomes a naval base.

NATIONAL

THERE is one point upon which most Americans agree. It is that nothing should interfere with the strengthening of our national defense.

Taking this opinion at its face value one wonders why at a time like this, the nation's two labor organizations persist in bickering and throwing monkey wrenches in the machinery.

Regardless of differences, the welfare of the nation should never be secondary to the welfare of any other organization. There is absolutely no excuse for internal strife and dissension where the national defense of the country is concerned.

These strikes and walkouts in vital American defense industries should and must be stopped if we are to proceed at a rapid rate.

It is time the leaders of the two warring labor factions forgot their grievances and united for the benefit of all concerned. If they are wise they will do this of their own accord before pressure is brought to bear and they are forced to accede.

FOREIGN

SOMETHING is slightly confusing in the British attitude. A few weeks ago when the Nazi submarines were bragging about their victories, the British and other neutral sources came out with a statement claiming that shipping losses were less than those at a comparable time in World War I.

A few days ago, however, the British Ministry announced that they would be in a very grave situation if they did not receive more ships from the United States and that their shipping losses were endangering the English cause. This statement seemed to be a lead into a request for American money.

What does it add up to? First we hear that the U-boat damage is negligible compared with the losses in the last war (a statement which happens to be true) and then they hint they may lose the war unless we send more ships.

It sounds suspiciously like the old shakedown racket.

(Note: No, we are not pro-German or a member of the bund. This is merely an attempt to be objective.)

Associated Students

Electioneering Regulations Near Completion

Regulations to control unfair and unnecessary practices in the coming student elections are now being drawn up by an election committee under the chairmanship of Hugh Waite and will shortly be submitted to the Executive Council for approval, Lyle Shultz, president of the Associated Students, announced today.

"The regulations will be completely established in time for the nominating assembly, to be held on January 3," Shultz said, "and will probably deal with methods and expenditures involved in campaigning for the various offices."

Date for the primary election has been set for January 7, while the final elections will be held on January 9.

For the first time in the history of student elections at the college, voters will be registered. As in the past, however, only holders of Associated Student cards will be allowed to vote.

Prospective candidates for the office of president at this date are Edward Hardies, George Myer, and Charles Keiser while Mary Frances Malone will run for the vice-presidency. Loretta Egan and Edith Callaghan are prospects for secretary of the Associated Students.

The polling place for the election has not as yet been determined but there will be separate polling places for men and women and it is expected that regular polling machines will be used.

College Library Receives New Shipment Of Books

A shipment of new books, covering a wide range of subjects, has been received by the college library and will soon be on file in the library for students' use, Marcus Skarstedt, college librarian, announced this week.

Some of the topics covered by the books are: statistics, history, science, radio, quantative analysis, war propaganda, economics, journalism, and music. Several of the books have not been chosen for use in any particular course, but are to be used just for student reading, Skarstedt explained. Among the latter type are Music for the Multitude, Teaching With Books, and Christianity Goes to Press.

Books chosen for reference work in the various college courses are War Propaganda and the United States, Comparative Economic Systems, Economic History of the People of the United States, Elemental Statistics, America's Economic Growth, History of Science, Economic History of Europe, Economic History of the United States, Background to Modern Science, The Reporter and the News, Editing a Small City Daily, Newspaper Makeup, and Interpretations of Journalism.

Each month the books that have been added to the library are compiled in a list by Irene Mensing, assistant librarian, which is distributed to the college faculty and posted for the students use.

These new additions will be included in the December list, Skarstedt said.

Hasn't Anybody An Old Victrola? Business Students Need One

By Jeannectta Hershon

With the approah of Christmas and its accompanying good will, Helen Reveal, instructor of business, hopes that someone will remember her plea for an old victrola.

There is only one victrola available for use in the entire San Francisco public school system, she says. Even this, Miss Reveal adds, can be used by any one group for only two hours in a week and is then taken away with little probability of ever getting it again. Such an arrangement is useless in business courses, where a victrola is needed consistently, she pointed out.

Besides playing march music to gain rhythm in typing, Miss Reveal announces that a victrola would be useful in shorthand classes for dictation from records which she herself would furnish. These recordings are by a man and she believes they would go far in accustoming future secretaries to taking dictation from a male voice.

Miss Reveal emphasizes that she is not asking for a new or particularly good victrola. All that is wanted, she says, is one of the many old victrolas that have lain, dusty and unused, in basements or attics since the advent of the radio.

Santa Claus will not wear a long white beard or come down a chimney for her this year Miss Reveal comments. Instead, he will arrive in the person of a college student coming to her office in Room 231 after 3 p. m. to tell her he has an old victrola which he will donate to the cause—she hopes.

Vacation—

NYA Work Available

College NYA workers will not find it necessary to lose hours because of the coming Christmas vacation, Claude T. Silva, instructor at the college, who is now handling most of the NYA activity, announced today.

"All workers," Silva said, "will have an opportunity to work their full quota either before the vacation or during the two weeks when classes are not in session."

Students working on NYA were cautioned, however, against working without the knowledge of their immediate superiors. "Such personal attempts to regain lost time," Silva commented, "will not be credited to the worker unless he has been authorized to work either by the NYA office or by his supervisor."

In regard to NYA activity for the next semester, Silva explained that the college has received additional funds from the government which will allow an increased NYA payroll at this institution.

"Also," he added, "any students now doing NYA work who desires to continue on the project next year may do so without filing additional applications."

Student Surveys Guided By Board Of Four Experts

Student Opinion Surveys of America, the national weekly poll of college thought, sponsored by the University of Texas and 150 undergraduate newspapers, has established an advisory board of four experts in the fields of education, youth welfare, and statistics, Joe Belden, editor of the poll, announced this week.

Helping to guide the samplings of American student opinion that The Guardsman conducts by polling students of his college will be:

Dr. Homer P. Rainey, president of the University of Texas and former director of the American Youth Commission, Washington, D. C.; Dr. George Zook, president of the Rockefeller Foundation-supported American Council on Education; and Dr. Luther Gulick, director of the Institute of Public Administration, New York, N. Y. Dr. Gulick directed the "Regents' Inquiry Into The Character and Cost of Public Education in the State of New York," and has done many other such researches.

Dr. F. A. Buechel, statistician of the University of Texas Bureau of Business Research, will act as consulting expert on sampling techniques employed by the Student Opinion Surveys in polling the million and a half collegians in the United States.

Judiciary Committee Sets Plans To Curtail Cheating

At a recent meeting of the judicial committee, an initial set of recommendations designed to curtail cheating during examinations was formulated, according to Ed Hardies, judicial committee chairman.

That instructors should stay in the classroom for the entire duration of the examination, was one of the recommendations.

Alternate examinations should be used whenever possible, but if this is not feasable, then instructors should require students who are seated in adjoining seats to answer alternate questions, the committee recommends.

Desks should be cleared of all material except the examination papers, and books should be placed on the racks under the seats or on the floor, according to another rule set up by the judicial group.

Students should be seated at least in alternate seats whenever possible, is the final recommendation.

Costume Ball Cancellation Looms Unless Tickets Sell

Unless enough tickets for the scheduled costume ball sponsored by the college Ski Club and Alpha Delta Epsilon are sold by tomorrow, the dance will be cancelled, Social Committee members said yesterday.

The ball is scheduled for December 6 at 8 p.m. in the women's gymnasium, and tickets are priced at $1.10 per couple, according to Anna Held, chairman of the committee in charge of the affair.

Masks, to be given out free at the door, and prizes for the best costumes are to be highlights of the affair, Miss Held said.

Peace Society

Poll Results To Be Discussed At Rally Tomorrow

As an aftermath to the recently held poll of the college Peace Society, a rally will be held tomorrow for which all 1 o'clock classes are to be excused, according to Administration officials.

Purpose of the rally, as announced by Peace Society representatives, is to present various interpretative analyses of the student poll by qualified observers.

Two Prominent Speakers

Speakers on the program will be Major J. W. Middleton, of the 30th Infantry, and Rev. Edgar A. Lowther of the Methodist City Church in this city.

Major Middleton will offer comments concerning the question in the peace society poll that dealt with American entry into any war.

Rev. Lowther has planned a discussion of what he calls the "contradictory aspects of two of the questions asked in the peace poll."

Poll To Be Analyzed

Harold W. Luenberger, of the college psychology department will present his analysis of the poll and the entire meeting is to be conducted by Harold White, member of the Peace Society.

Prior to the actual ceremonies of the rally the well known Ballad To Americans, which features the voice of Paul Robeson, will be played.

College In Joint Peace Society Meet With State

A joint meeting of the San Francisco Junior College and San Francisco State College Peace Societies will be held at the home of Gertrude Bolton, history instructor at the college, 830 Hyde Street on Thursday, December 5, at 8 p. m.

John Horowiz, college psychology instructor will speak on a subject entitled: A Perspective of American Foreign Policy, and later will conduct a discussion period.

There will be no admittance charge to the meeting but a buffet dinner, which will be served from 6 to 8 p. m., will be priced at 15 cents.

All interested students are urged by the Peace Society to attend the meeting which is the first venture of this kind since the organization of the group.

State College Entrance Examinations December 14

Students desiring to enter San Francisco State College for the spring semester must take the entrance qualifying examinations to be given on Saturday, December 14. Junior college transfers must take the Aptitude test which will be given from 9 to 12 o'clock on that date and all entering freshmen must also take the English test to be given from 1 to 3 o'clock that afternoon.

Admission to the college depends in part on this test. The same test will be given on January 27 for spring entrants who do not take them on December 14. Students who are planning to enroll should file transcripts and make personal application to the registrar during the Christmas holidays.

Psychologist Says War No Longer Unavoidable

LOS ANGELES—(ACP)—War is no longer considered unavoidable and instinctive by enlightened psychologists, according to Dr. Knight Dunlap, professor of psychology at the University of California.

"The instinct doctrine still persists in psychological backwashes," he says, "but the main current of psychology is relatively cleared of its mark.

Dr. Dunlap points out that our shaggy ancestors once had a nonbathing habit, commenting "it would have been no more foolish to say, a thousand years ago, that since men had been generally dirty, there was no hope of their becoming cleanly in their habits, than it was to say a few years ago that since men did make war, nothing could change them into peaceful people."

It is Dr. Dunlap's belief that wars will be reduced by advanced methods of social psychology.

Music

Choir Goes On Concert Tour Today

Climaxing the college A Cappella Choir's activities for this semester is its fall trip, today, to Pittsburg, Danville and St. Mary's College, Flossita Badger, music instructor, announced.

The choir and the men's double quartet, which is also participating in the event, left this morning at 8:30, when they will perform at a concert at the high school in Pittsburg. From Pittsburg, the group will travel to Danville, where they will also sing at the high school.

To Dine At St. Mary's College

"There is an especially chartered Greyhound bus for the occasion," Miss Badger noted.

The A Cappella choir includes the following students: Jeanne Arnold, Walter Alpern, Lawrence Anderson, Florence Baldwin, Ruth Berryessa, Georgiana Bockris, Ruth Breuer, William Cothran, Alice DeQuine, Fred Faber, Tesja Filaton, Helga Friedrickson, John Getas, Clarice Giannini, Frances Hastings, Bill Hong, Diane Hudson, Arthur Jarl.

Look For Sadie At Tennessee

KNOXVILLE, Tenn.—(ACP)—Scores of colleges have been observing Sadie Hawkins day, but the University of Tennessee claims to have the original.

Al Capp, creator of Sadie Hawkins, Li'l Abner, and other characters of Dog Patch fame, and United Features syndicate, have given Tennessee sole claim to the title of "Sadie Hawkins Days Originators" on college campuses.

As a feature of the recent observance at Tennessee, the campus poolroom was open only to women one afternoon.

Block Society Applies To CAB For Charter

Application of the college Block Society for charter renewal under the Club Advisory Board has just been received, Bob Ogg, CAB president, announced last Wednesday.

The society is the only recognized club in the college which is now under suspension for failure to renew its charter, and its application will be presented at the CAB meeting next Tuesday for approval, Ogg said.

Scheduled to be held also at this meeting will be the election of a vice-president for next semester's club board. Voting for the other offfices will not take place because of unopposed nominations, whereby Burton Wines, Beta Tau head, was automatically named president and Jeanne Spencer, representative of Theta Tau, secretary.

Aero Fraternity To Hold First Meeting Soon

A local chapter of Alpha Eta Rho, national aeronautic fraternity, will hold its first meeting in the near future, announced Captain George D. Richards, aviation instructor.

With the head chapter located at the University of Southern California, the fraternity has organized additional groups on campuses throughout the country at most of the large universities in the East.

Comprising all of the enrollees in the college aviation courses, the fraternity will also include those women members who have registered in the program, he declared.

Administration

Bulletin Board Material Must Conform To Rules

Notices appearing on the bulletin boards in the main college building will henceforth conform to cerain specifications as outlined by a newly appointed faculty Bulletin Board Committee this week. These will be posted only at assigned places and for a limited time, the registrar's office has announced.

The new ruling will aim to correct the haphazard appearance of the bulletins, Registrar J. Paul Mohr said. To regulate the posting of notices, the committee has classed them under six types, each to be confined to space which will be set aside for the respective purpose and labeled accordingly.

The classifications are listed as follows:

1. Club announcements: Two bulletin boards, one located on the main floor, one near the library.
2. Special college events (dances, football games): On the main floor, near club announcement space, and on club bulletin near the library.
3. Departmental: Distributed on all three floors according to location of departments.
4. Office notices (registrar's notices, civil service exams): Near registrar's office.
5. Physical education (intramural, WAA): Main floor.
6. Outside posting material (notices from other schools, concerts, community events): Main floor.

Further regulations for posting of bulletins as formulated by the committee and approved by the registrar are these:

1. All clubs and departments which have regular announcements (from time to time will have a standard printed form with opening in which to insert typewritten information. These will appear only in the two designated places on the main floor and outside the library.
2. All outside matter will be posted for a limited time of one week only.
3. Announcements of special college events will be made by NYA students under supervision of the art department, and will be posted only in the space specified above. Groups desiring such notices to be made must give the department two weeks' notice.
4. Space on departmental bulletin boards will be used only for the department specified, and when not in use, will remain empty.
5. Each bulletin board space will carry a heading designating its purpose, and use of it will be confined to such designation.

Heading the faculty group which has been appointed to control the bulletin boards is Evans Ecke of the college art department, and aiding him are Joan Nourse of the publications department and Claude T. Silva, assistant NYA director.

The ruling that all bulletins be approved by the registrar's office before posting will continue to be enforced, the administration announced.

College Choir, Quartet Present Radio Broadcast

Under the direction of Flossita Badger, music instructor in the college, the A Cappella choir and the Men's Double Quartet presented yesterday a radio program over Station KYA.

"This program was sponsored by the Second District PTA," Miss Badger said, "and it was our second program for them, as last year we gave a similar program.

Miss Badger also announced that the music students would give their Christmas Concert on December 12.

"Since there are no facilities in the college for an affair of this sort," she continued, "we will present our concert at the First Methodist Church, 1600 Clay Street."

It is open to the public and all students, their parents and friends are cordially invited to attend, according to Miss Badger.

AMS Fights

Announcer Not Yet Selected

As yet the announcer for the Associated Men Students sponsored fights to be held at the Coliseum Bowl, Wednesday, December 11, is not definitely known, Ted Theodus, AMS president, disclosed this week.

"We are trying to get Mr. Conlan for our announcer, but he has not definitely been engaged," Theodus added.

Theodus has planned to have several sport dignitaries to act as officials for the fight.

"Joe Lantagne is coaching the boys so that they will give the best exhibition of their fighting ability the night of the fight," Theodus said.

It has been planned to have the intra-mural medals awarded the same night, Theodus disclosed.

"The fights will start at 8 o'clock and one student body card per person will entitle admittance to see some hard fought fights," he pointed out.

Last semester's AMS fights were announced by Elmer Hubacher, with Lyle Shultz, then AMS president, acting as master of ceremonies.

Judges were Harry B. Smith of the Chronicle, George Malley of USF, and Walt Daly of the Call-Bulletin.

'Poor Church Attendance No Indication Of Atheism'

KENT, Ohio—(ACP)—Contradicting the popular idea that college people are atheistic because they do not ttend church, Dr. John F. Cuber, professor of sociology at Kent State university, points out that students who do not attend church manifest many traditional doctrinal and moral views of the church.

Not only that, he continues, they possess a decidedly favorable attitude toward churches as institutions—more so, in some instances, than do church members.

Hotel Division, St. Nick To Meet At Dec. 7 Party

On Saturday evening, December 7, two and a half weeks before Christmas Day, the hotel division of the college will hold its annual Yuletide party at the Claremont Hotel in Berkeley.

Mrs. Hilda Watson, chairman of the division, announced that the early date is a result of the Christmas vacation, and declared that "the Claremont is truly a fitting location for the party."

A planned feature for the occasion will be the appearance of Santa Claus, who will enter to greet guests via the chimney of the hotel. The entire affair will be an elaborate dinner dance, and all facilities of the Claremont will be turned over to members of the hotel division.

Previous parties have been for members of the division only, but this year they will be allowed to bring guests.

This is the fourth annual party of its kind by the college hotel group, and the opinion was expressed by Mrs. Watson that it is expected to be the best.

- Rams Tie With San Mateo For League Title

With a 25 to 13 defeat over Sacramento, San Mateo tied for first place with the college Rams in the Northern California Conference title race last Saturday at Sacramento.

San Mateo and the college have each won two games and lost one. Sacramento ended its season with one win, on loss and one tie, thus placing third, while Modesto finished last with two losses and one tie.

However, San Mateo was defeated by the college 6 to 0. This may mean the Rams have the title, despite the fact that the college lost to Sacramento, 6 to 0.

True Patriotism Not Based On Flag Waving

THE current atmosphere of flag waving, lusty singing of "God Bless America," in theaters, "I am proud to be an American" stickers, and other patent signs of patriotism show too clearly the fear that is pervading the nation.

True patriotism is a basic tenet, something that is deep in the hearts of the patriots themselves—so fundamental that it need not be dragged out, reiterated, and forced into their consciences every day. It is only when our fundamental beliefs are badly shaken that we feel the need of going over them in concert, to reassure ourselves with the [illegible] of our fellows.

It is hard to believe that Americans' faith in their country has been so severely shaken as the current wave of super-patriotism would seem to indicate. We believe, rather, that all this flag waving shows that those who like to think they mold public opinion lack confidence in the American public and innate love of country.

Once that public becomes convinced that it must wear an American flag on its lapel, or display an "I am an American" sticker in the window of its home, a certain quiet, firm faith in our government will be destroyed, and in its place will come the blatant, superficial, unthinking brand of patriotism that is antithetical to the best interest of the country.

Carefully staged, shouting, cheering patriotism is about as firm as the fuzz on a dandelion. Hysterical patriots cannot be counted upon in a crisis. Theirs is the lip service, not the belief.

Love of country is not something that can be fostered by display. To be of any truth, it must have been born of a knowledge of the principles upon which our nation is built, and it must be nourished upon understanding and love of those principles. The American flag itself can mean very little unless we know what it symbolizes.

What need is there of "I am proud to be an American" stickers? What criterion of patriotism do such stickers furnish?

It is not enough to shrug one's shoulders and say, "what harm can it do?", for this kind of short-sighted display is no longer merely superficial. It is reaching the bounds of a Wilhemstrasse parade. When its citizens feel obligated to shout their patriotism, when love of country is no longer spontaneous but must be whipped up by advertising, then America will have real cause to worry. Then we will not know upon whom we can really count when, and if, the need ever arises.

Weekly Informal Dances A Desirable Tradition

IF present plans of the Welfare Council work out properly, the dance last Friday afternoon in the women's gym should be the forerunner of weekly afternoon informal dances at the college.

The success of this first dance will no doubt determine the fate of future affairs. Similar arrangements, however, at the University of California and State College, have proved highly successful over a long period of time.

In all lights, the possibility of weekly afternoon dances should be met with enthusiasm. A splendid chance to get generally acquainted—an opportunity not always present at outside dances—would be offered.

If you feel this proposal is a good thing, drop a note to the Ram's Horn and let your student leaders know about it.

Impersonally Speaking

PROBABLY we'll be accused by less aggressive journalists of giving away professional secrets. While admitting the justification of the charge, nevertheless, we are about to reveal to a breathless and wondering public how to get a story for a newspaper.

First, though, (lest people think this be more boasting) we do this reluctantly and only after much arguing. Frequently, we are unable to fathom the cause. It can't be our slip showing, we don't wear one. (We are male.) Making sure that our eyebrows and eyelashes are on straight, we put the mirror away, and it dawns upon us that we have been recognized by our army of fans.

To get back to the point, a story for a newspaper is a tough thing to get and great stories like ours come only through a combination of talent, science, psychology, and effort.

To elucidate, our patented method is to investigate the person from whom we are to get the story. As the wary quarry approaches, we wait in one of our many disguises. Then we grab him, put a hammerlock on him, throw him, and hogtie him.

Here the psychological aspect of the situation enters. As the victim is moaning and writhing, we cross-examine him. If he is the agreeable sort, this will get enough results. If, however, one plays coy and hard-to-get, a black-jack (standard equipment) usually convinces him. For this purpose, we have found the Little Daisy No. 134 (2½ lbs., black or natural finish) the most effective.

The effort comes in interviewing the people. All ethical reporters take care of their victims as a purely sporting gesture.

The next step is correlating that information and shaping the story that appears in the paper. Here is where many aspiring journalists fail.

Many a time and oft, less able and efficient journalists hand in excuses for failing to get a story. Such a multiplicity of reasons is unimaginable. Only once have we failed to hand in a story, and that was for a darned good reason. Indeed, a perfect reason.

"Interviewee died during interview."

AMES, Iowa—(ACP)—Going to school by radio no longer is a fantasy to Iowa high school students.

Hundreds of them put aside their books every Monday afternoon for radio classwork. The series, "It's Your Future," is being broadcast from WOI, Iowa State College station, by the department of vocational education.

Its purpose is to acquaint high school students with vocational opportunities. Vocational guidance speakers, leaders in their fields, are interviewed by Prof. A. H. Hausrath.

The Spectator

TODAY, the Spectator tosses tradition to the wind and focuses attention on the lower half of the double-bills gracing the movie citadels. Having paid justice to Bittersweet, and The Letter in our previous column, we'll take a peek at the supporting entertainment (?) in each instance.

From 20th Century-Fox's less pretentious producing unit under the fond eye of Sol W. Wurtzel has emerged an unassuming bit of nonsense titled Charter Pilot. A typical B picture in every way, Charter Pilot escapes the depths of pure mediocrity only through the engaging performances of Lloyd Nolan and Lynn Bari.

The case of Mr. Nolan is a convincing example of Hollywood's folly in its short-sighted treatment of excellent talent. Nolan is as clever and capable a performer as has ever graced the screen yet his film roles have been comprised mostly of stereotyped, inconsequential parts in second-rate melodramas. Some day, an alert minded producer will give Nolan a role to fulfil his capabilities. Then watch this boy go.

Charter Pilot details the story of "King" Morgan (Nolan), an ace flyer working for Charter Pilots Organization. His company performs all types of services utilizing airplanes. To get his girl (Lynn Bari) to say yes to his marriage proposal, King gives up his flying job to take a more substantial one behind the company desk. But when a pal involves himself in trouble in South America on a company job, Morgan takes the sky road again to head south with his angry sweetheart close behind. This potpourri of tribulations comes to as wild a climax as a perspiring script-writer could engineer.

Nolan and Bari contribute the only performances of note. Arleen Whelan is in for a brief scene or two as is George Montgomery as Nolan's pal. Neither help the anemic plot much. Give credit for any entertainment derived from Charter Pilot to the humorous pretending of Nolan and Miss Bari. There's not much else to the picture.

The supporting feature to The Letter proves to be the Hit Parade of 1941. Here we have what purported to be an "A" musical but through the defects of a very weak story and common, unimaginative direction has become just another hammy musical. The cast is expansive and composed of well-known personalities, but most are mere walk-on bits. The comedy seemed strained and artificial particularly in the case of Hugh Herbert and Patsy Kelly. The rest of the large cast are subdued by the poor material provided. Only praise-worthy note about the Hit Parade of 1941 is the musical interludes pleasantly supplied by the ear-tickling Frances Langford and the personable Kenny Baker.

What's Your I.Q.?

"Learn something new every day," is a time worn and trite expression, still it is good sensible axiom.

Reversing our usual procedure of questions, we will put forth some answers, hoping that they will enlighten our readers anew.

These are "Famous First Facts" all of which are taken from the book of that name by Joseph Nathan Kane. The data include a "record of first happenings, discoveries, and inventions in the United States."

THE FIRST BATH TUB was installed by Adam Thompson, a wealthy cotton and grain dealer of Cincinnati, Ohio. It was encased in Nicaraguan mahogany and was lined with sheet metal. It was seven feet long, four feet wide and weighed 1,750 pounds. On December, 1842, he had a party at his house and invited his guests to try the new bathtub.

THE FIRST JOURNALISM COURSES were given in 1869 at Washington University, later Washington and Lee University, Lexington, Virginia. The idea was introduced by General Robert E. Lee.

THE FIRST FOOTBALL INTERCOLLEGIATE CONTEST in the world was played at Brunswick, New Jersey, on November 18, 1869. Captain William S. Gunmere of Princeton, challenged Captain Legget of Rutgers to a friendly game. Each team consisted of 25 men. Rutgers won with six goals to Princeton's four.

THE FIRST ORDER OF DE MOLAY was founded by Frank S. Land and nine young men in Kansas, Missouri, in 1919.

THE FIRST "JAZZ MUSIC" was created by William Christopher Handy, a Negro, who composed "Memphis Blues" in 1912. He is known as the "Father of the Blues," having composed "St. Louis Blues," and "Beale Street."

THE FIRST OPERA HOUSE MUNICIPALLY OWNED was the "War Memorial Opera House" of San Francisco, California, which was opened on October 15, 1932 with a performance of "Tosca" by the San Francisco Opera Company.

THE FIRST PRESIDENT WHO HAD NOT BEEN BORN A BRITISH SUBJECT was Martin Van Buren. He was elected on the Democratic ticket and served from 1837 to 1841.

On The Feminine Side

ONE of the most unusual social affairs for the year is scheduled for this Friday night in the Women's Gymnasium. For that's the night that the Ski Club and Alpha Delta Epsilon, the college art society are going to join in sponsoring a Costume Ball.

Of course, as in most costume balls the masquerade idea is going to be carried out in this one, so it would be impossible for us to guess what this person or that is going to wear. But then perhaps a few suggestions concerning what certain people (who shall remain anonymous) will probably choose would not go amiss.

One of the sophomore women (and there will undoubtedly be more than one) is definitely going to turn up in a pirate costume. The short flared skirt is to be of black satin, and her white shirt will be topped by a brilliant red jacket. A huge black hat with a gruesome skull-and-cross bones design will top off her costume, while on her feet she'll wear white kid boots (the better to step all over the men with, so she claims. At last, revenge!) Her date is going to get a chance to wear his old Saturday morning jeans with ragged shirt et al.

The Western Influence

The cowboy and cowgirl theme is one that seems to be inevitable whenever a costume affair is in the offing. Broad stetson hats and chaps or riding breeches can be combined with loud plaid or satin shirts in wild color schemes. Bandanas, riding boots in the decorated Mexican styles, and bejeweled gauntlets always add the good old Hi-yo Silver flavor. Personally we bear a slight grudge against all men who turn up as cowboys out of fond remembrance of one kind soul we once encountered who went Western to the point of wearing spurs. Ouch!

The usual number of girls will aspire to appearing demure and attractive in old-fashioned hoop-skirts and white powdered wig, but it's a safe guess that they'll meet their doom in the persons of their dates who constitutionally object to satin knee breeches. Not that we blame them.

From the Funny Papers

Comic strip characters are generally fun to adept in costume balls. The Li'l Abner-Daisy Mae combination ought to work out fairly inexpensively and with hilarious results, always provided the bare feet idea isn't carried to extremes. Mickey and Minnie Mouse should not be impossible, although a bit more difficult to copy. And of course there's always Flash Gordon with Dale, if one really wants to go to a fair amount of trouble.

Some bright soul might try to fashion a costume out of old issues of Life magazine or even out of past issues of The Guardsman, in striving for a slightly different effect. A sadist could even go to the extremes of fashioning a costume of discarded (and we do mean discarded) blue books, but that would border on the morbid side to finals-conscious students.

In keeping with the plaid or tartan popularity this season, a couple with a little ingenuity could whip up a striking looking outfit. If the man could only borrow the woman's knee-length socks, he would be set for the evening (and probably for the rest of his career at the college).

We think that the really crafty couple would come wearing flowing artist's smocks complete with drooping hat and elegant bow. And with a pair of skis strapped on their feet—comprendez?

Shots At RAMdom . . .

EVERY NOW AND THEN

An amazing news story finds its way on to the copy desk in The Guardsman office. As a rule the paper's ever-alert proofreaders are on the job and perk these shining examples of journalese off the assembly line. Consequently it is rather seldom that the college is treated to reading what happens when a reporter, who somehow slipped through the English A examination, forgets about such things as reference of pronouns or is merely careless.

If a story received last week regarding Friday's dance in the women's gym had been printed verbatim, you would have been apprised that admission was one student body, and you were warned that it would be confiscated if loaned. C'es la vie.

WHILE RICHARD ALLMAN

of the college art department is an obliging gentleman, we hardly thought he would be on continuous display in Room 179 during the dedication day open house as a story quite definitely stated. The reference was, of course, to a group of watercolors by Mr. Allman.

Some more pronominal juggling was responsible for a really intriguing story that Band Leader Fred Waring would doubtless have appreciated. Telling of a petition requesting Waring to write a song for the college, a reporter blandly said that the petition and six young things of the college were to be dispatched to the maestro forthwith. As if that weren't enough, the following paragraph expressed the hope of the college that Mr. Waring would be favorable impressed by the offering. What futility of expression! The man's only human.

It seems that what really was sent to bechiseled Waring was a PICTURE of the college sextet. Just one of those things. Moral: watch your pronouns! A misplaced "it" or "they" can prove very embarassing.

THE PENALTY FOR such masterpieces usually consists in suspension—by the thumbs—from the ceiling for a length of time proportionate to the offense.

By way of a reminder, all Guardsman employees must commit to memory the following bit of verse:

Make the punishment fit the crime
So say we all the time.
Pray write what you mean
Or we'll be mean
And hang you from a beam.

It goes on indefinitely, but you get the idea.

Letters To The Editor

RAM'S HORN

Chem Labs Are Criticized; "Interviews?"

EDITOR'S NOTE:

Any student desiring to express an opinion on any subject is urged to use the Ram's Horn for this purpose. Letters should be left in the publication's office, Room 184. Deadline for the Tuesday issue is the preceding Thursday. Deadline for the Friday issue is the preceding Tuesday. All letters should be in by 10 a.m.

• An Interview Column

Editor, The Guardsman:

This is a suggestion to The Guardsman: that you have a column titled "Interviews" and let it be of all student points of view, and in this way it will be a more democratic newspaper.

I should like to hear for example their views ranging from war and peace, or the economic system (or lack of system) in general, to the current radio and movie programs. It would be a relief thus to hear some free expression in these chaotic times of force on all sides; and I would suggest it would iron out prejudices and childish notions.

College students are often misquoted as liberals, when in reality they are as conservative as old men with fixed interests. For education today is a misnomer; it is sophistication. It is echoing words instead of process. Fear has destroyed their initiative, fear of being out of place with their elders. We are led around like cattle before the slaughter, instead of evolving to a high standard or goal.

This letter is not an emotional reaction or criticism but simply one person doubting if our adults are as clever as they seem to be. For in the sadism apparent everywhere, wisdom is still a premium that demands the price of salvation, which in this day and age amounts to consistency. Man's only enemy is himself and his refusal to include others in his thinking and higher objective in his living.

• Lecture "Sweat Shops?"

Editor, The Guardsman:

Why is it that students who take up chemistry must sit in a veritable sweat house all during the two hour lecture? It is impossible to remain awake when the heat and humidity are far above normal. It would be appreciated by most of the students if it would be possible to keep the furnace off and the fans on during lecture hours. I believe that the average student would be able to get much better grades if they could have conditions not so condusive to sleep in which to absorb knowledge.

Thank you for correcting this unforunate situation. We knew we could count on you.

The Six Hot Ones

Editor's Note: Correction please. You have come to the wrong source for this matter. All matters pertaining to the building and class periods are handled by the administration. We suggest you consult the registrar.

• Use Vacant Rooms

Editor, The Guardsman:

At every hour we see students who cannot find seats in the library standing in the halls or sitting on the steps while attempting to prepare their lessons.

Now this is detrimental to efficiency and makes for congestion on the steps. Nor does the cafeteria provide a satisfactory substitute, for the chatter and eating (which goes on all day) prohibits careful study.

Throughout the day there are certain classrooms not being used, which would furnish ideal spots for those turned from the library.

I suggest that The Guardsman staff compile a list of these vacant rooms, noting the hour which they are unoccupied, publish it in The Guardsman and post it on the several bulletin boards.

AMS Boxers Weigh In Tomorrow, Thursday For Dec. 11 Bouts

Standard inter-collegiate boxing weight classes will be the order of the forthcoming AMS fights, according to Joe Lantagne, college boxing coach. The three rounds of two minutes each also conform to this set of rules, he said.

Most of last week was spent in weight reducing processes to enable the men to participate in the weight divisions which would be best suited to them, Lantagne said.

Tomorrow and Thursday will be the preliminaries to decide the men who will fight for the championships on December 11. These will be held in the men's gym after 2 o'clock Wednesday and Thursday afternoon and at 12 M. Thursday. Officials will be members of the physical education department who are available at that time, Lantagne announced.

Medals For Champs

Medals will be presented to champions in eight divisions and the runner-ups. The first place medals will be gold and the runner-up medals will probably be silver, Ted Green, boxing manager said.

The weight divisions are bantam, 120 or under; feather, 127 or under; light, 135 or under; welter, 145 or under; senior welter, 155 or under; middle, 165 or under; light-heavy, 175 or under, and unlimited, over 175 pounds.

No officials have been chosen for the AMS fights as yet, but Ted Theodus, AMS president, says that it will probably be someone who is important in sporting circles in the city.

Spectators Welcomed

Anyone who wishes to see the preliminaries at the men's gym is welcome to do so, Lantagne said, explaining that the fights will be more or less informal but will conform to the rules.

If Lantagne has his way there will be no knockouts or even technical knockouts in either the preliminaries or the AMS fights. He is insisting on a strenuous training program. The boys weigh in for the fights tomorrow and Thursday and are not required to weigh in again. This will prevent any of the boys weakening themselves by keeping on a strict diet, Lantagne announced.

Basketball

Cage Team In Practice

Facing a hard schedule for a junior college basketball team, the local cagers are shaping into a first-rate squad, Tom Wilson, college basketball mentor, said today.

Although only three men on the squad have letters in basketball, other prospects too are catching Coach Wilson's eye. The returning lettermen are Joe Pfahnl, George Mossler, and Bob Staynor. The first two, Pfahnl and Mossler, are guards. Staynor was a forward on last semester's team.

In the first game of the season, the local stalwarts engaged the Bank of America Industrial League teams. In two games, one with a class AA team and the other with a class A squad, the college cagers split a double-header with the bankers. The AA team edged out the Rams, 39 to 37 while the college men dumped the class A team, 43 to 39.

First Conference Game Way Off

The first conference game of the season will not be played for quite a while and the schedule is full of practice games that should, Wilson hopes, give the varsity casaba men opportunity to improve the brand of ball that they have been playing.

Wilson declared that he could put a team on the floor that would average six feet, two inches in height. "The men would be, at the same time, as fast as the average small team," the coach said.

Ed. Picks All-Conference Team Without Assistance

Just about now, practically every sports writer and his kid brother is trying to pick an All-American team, or an all-coast or an all-conference team or some such. So, we, the above signed, do hereby attempt to pick an all-conference team of junior collegians. Any similarity to any other team thus picked is purely coincidental, and it is the opinion of the writer, not of anyone else—believe us.

At offensive right end we start off with Ken Hagen of S.F. His uncanny ability to snag a ball within smelling distance and his speed, as well as a "Rock of Gibraltar" on defense make him practically indisputable as our first choice. We would even go as far as to say that if he isn't picked on the conference team, we would eat our girl-friend's hat—one of those fuzzy, feathery affairs.

Offhand, the other end would go, we think, to the Negro sensation Sacramento possesses. The college's Elwood Bernstein would be close behind Carston, probably Hardaman Hardaman of Modesto alongside.

For the tackle spots, Johnny Blakemore, and Bill Windeler of the college loom, with Dimitri of Modesto about as equals. At guards, it's just as bad; Al Larracou, Bill Brown shine for the college. Modesto claims one and Boensch of San Mateo played brilliantly. Centerspot would go to Negro of Sacramento hadn't Dick Wilson played so well during the last few games.

But we'd hate to see a backfield of Al Nauman of the college at quarter (boy, can he call the right signals—wow!) Daly of Modesto and Lyle Taggart of San Mateo (he averaged some 40 yards per kick) and Rainone of Sacramento. Reserve backs would be Jim Honnert and maybe Dave Cunningham and Herb Taylor of the college, Chapman of Sacto, Clay and Benham of San Mateo.

Reserve linemen—well, name the whole Ram roster—first string. Gene Short, should he have begun the season, would undoubtedly be first string all-conference, and had Taylor stayed at end, he too would have been a lead-pipe cinch. Of course, if there are any other opinions, we'd be glad to take 'em, but this is only our opinion, and as far as we're concerned, what you think can go to.

School Spirit—Whither Flown?

Under discussion in a recent bull session was the subject of "school spirit" in different institutions. Which brought to mind the recent prep school big game. Lowell High held a rally two days previous to the game in a neighborhood theatre—kids got in for reduced rates, and after the feature had ended, literally shook the whole block with yells, songs, etc. Under yell leader Al Heyman's leadership, the school band, five yell kings, all school officers and students jammed the Empire theatre full to the aisles.

So what? Just this. We are a body 3000 strong. The attendance at most of the games has been slightly anaemic. Always it is the same crowd. What held Poly to a mere touchdown when they were supposed to dump the Indians by at least 6 touchdowns? School Spirit. It seems to us the most vital thing in an organized institution seems to be sadly lacking in the college.

Rooters For Rifleers

Which brings to mind the fact that the college rifleers should have a group of followers and a rooting section too. Sight would be a mighty R-A-M-S after each shot. What with each man (there are five to a team) shooting 200 shots, things would be mighty interesting with a rooting section for the Rifleers.

Coliseum Bowl

Intramural Winners Will Receive Awards December 11

December 11, at the Coliseum Bowl, the winners in all intramural sports will be presented with their awards, Paul Postler, assistant intramural manager, said this week.

The semi-annual Associated Men Students' fights, which are part of the intramural program, are to be held there. The intramural managers have selected that time and place for the awarding of the medals, Postler said.

Boxers this semester will be in the best of physical condition, according to Postler, because of the program instituted by Joe Lantagne, college boxing coach. The manager believes the fights will find all of last semester's champions and many new faces. Among the college champions will be Tak Momii and Bill Edwards.

Boxers In Golden Gloves

Edwards and Momii are both entered in the Golden Gloves Amateur Boxing Tournament that is current at the Civic Auditorium. Momii, the diminutive Japanese, fights at 105 pounds. Edwards is a welterweight. Both are entered as novices, having no tournament boxing experience.

The swimming tournament results, which were received too late for publication, will be announced on the intramural bulletin board and at the boxing matches. The meet was held at Jefferson Union High School of Daly City. The pool there is reputed to be one of the best high school pools in the state, according to Postler.

Volleyball competition is now beginning, he said. Squads have been entered by the Eds, Beta Phi Beta, Tri-Epsilon, Marshallow Pushers, Shoulders Men, Newman Club, and Police Training. A chart on the bulletin board gives all information as to schedules. Further information may be obtained by phoning Postler at DElaware 1878.

Further Announcements On Board

Winners of the tennis tourneys, singles and doubles, will be announced as soon as the play is completed, he said. As the play now stands, Greely and Friday are to play Johnstone and Schiller for the first place medal. The loser will get the second award. The place position is being sought by McMeekin and Mavor, who oppose Bauer and Blout. The winners of the medals will receive their awards a week from tomorrow.

In the other sports, some of the men, and the sports in which they competed, who are to get medals are Don Venton, Paul Zink, and Bob Howard, who finished in that order in the cross-country run. The U.S. All-Americans, winners of the basketball competition, are Jack Cuneo, Jack Weiss, Fred Ruether, Martin Foley, John Belton, Jim Fleming, Charles Smith, and Art Fairchild.

The second place award will be given to Warren Ho, Stanley Ng, Joe Chinn, Bill Hong, John Leong, Bob Dare, and Louie Suey, members of the Chinese Students cage squad. The softball teams did not have a list of squad members available for publication. The teams that won are Beta Phi Beta, and The Eds are two of the winners.

All Honored At AMS Fights.

Golfers, who were among the first to end their play, will be also honored December 11 at the AMS fights.

The winners, as announced by Bob Atkinson, golf manager, and the scores were Paul Pabst, with a fine showing of 71, Bob Epperly, who took second with an 89, and Joe Riss, who garnered third position when he carded an even 90.

These men, and other intramural winners, have their names and accomplishments in the various sports in which they competed, listed on the intramural bulletin board. Any further information that is not given there may be obtained by telephoning Postler at DElaware 1878, between 5 and 7 in the evening.

Here Comes The Basket Season

By Joseph E. Bryan

The backs go marching by no more this year. The football season is over. Ram athletes now turn their attention to basketball.

In past years the Rams have fared pretty well on the court. They inaugurated the college's opening by winning the conference championship. Red Lowans and Captain Ralph Hillsman were voted as all-conference players.

In 1937 the college team finished third in the conference, starring Ernie Loustalot, later of State fame, as the all-conference forward.

The Rams repeated in 1938, placing third in the conference. Alex Opalinski garnered individual laurels as all-conference guard.

Moving up a notch in '39, the Rams were second in the conference. Opalinski repeated as all-conference guard and Ed Curcio joined him on the team as the other guard.

In 1940, inexperience slowed the Rams down, and they finished in fifth place. This is the lowest the college quintet has ever placed.

New Coach For Rams

This year the Rams start the season under a new mentor, Tom Wilson, who coached the jayvees last year. Wilson has to build his team around Joe Pfahnl; George Mossler and Bob Staynor, the only returning members from last year's squad, plus those who moved up from the jayvees and new candidates.

From last year's squad Ed Cerf, Tom McCarthy, and Vern Genesy did not return to school. Red Kirwin and Joe Johns used up all their competition.

Lack of experience and a change in offense may hamper the team in its early season games. It is difficult to predict what a green team will do. With the array of talent the team has it may make up its lack of experience in ability.

Rifleers

College Team Loses To P G & E

Meeting defeat for the second time this season the college rifle team was downed by representatives of the Pacific Gas and Electric Company in a match held at the college range Wednesday, November 27. The score was 916 to 913.

Captain Fred McFarland says that this is a very good showing for the college team. The company possesses one of the three strongest teams in the league, and the margin of three points by which the college team lost didn't discourage McFarland.

McFarland pointed out that the winner uses scope sights which make for better shooting. The college, University of San Francisco and the 159th Infantry teams are the only ones in the league which still use iron sights, and the college already has a victory over U.S.F.

Although on the losing team, Bob Rath garnered the individual honors in the match with the score of 189. Other college scores were Charles North 184, Al Templeton 183, Jim Juri 179, and Myron Pierce 178.

McFarland says that the rifle team is living up to his early season predictions. It has lost only two matches and those by slim margins. On the average the team is shooting better scores than did last year's team.

Slow Pokes, Blue Bells Win In Touch Tackle

After seven weeks of hard play, the Slow Poke Apes and White Blue Bells touch-tackle teams have won in their respective classes, according to Lee Eisan, physical education instructor, who sponsored the play.

The Slow Poke Apes, who won the 10 o'clock Monday and Wednesday competition consisted of Bert Tuckey, Richard Wood, Kenneth Mackenzie, Charles Sutton, Howard School, Julian Riskin, and Bill Nieth, Eisan said.

Eleven o'clock classes on Monday and Wednesday have just completed their football tournament also. The White Blue Bells, consisting of Jim Kinoshita, Matt Hill, Fred Hong, Harold Juster, and Ray Machitti, triumphed over their classmates, to win the laurels.

College Education—And Radio Actor Slams Doors

HOLLYWOOD — (ACP) — Every time the script calls for a door slam on the Burns and Allen airshow, a disgruntled voice is heard to remark, bitterly:

"Four years at Harvard and THIS (door slam) is what I do for a living!"

Incidentally, it's a nice living. Elliot Lewis' portrayal of a frustrated college graduate pays off substantially, as do Elliot's other radio performance. He is the busiest airwave actor in Hollywood.

He often gags his own gag-line by saying: "Two years at Los Angeles City College and THIS (meaning his radio emoting) is what I do for a living.

Field Events Saturday To Launch Tourney Week

By Nora Baker

Sports activities of the Women's Athletic Association, in kaleidoscopic fashion, will be displayed during traditional WAA tourney week from December 7 to December 12.

Tourney week will start officially with a Field Day to be held on December 7, which will present a bird's eye view of all the sports activities of the WAA.

Official program of Field Day is as follows:

10 a.m.—Swimming exhibition at the YWCA.

12-1:15 p.m.—Tennis at the college tennis courts.

1:15-3 p.m.—Hockey exhibition at the college hockey field, San Francisco State College vs. college WAA hockey club.

2:15-2:45 p.m.—Archery exhibition at archery field.

2:15-2:45 p.m.—Horseshoes exhibition at college horseshoe grounds.

3-3:30 p.m.—Fencing and rifle in the women's gymnasium.

3:30-4 p.m.—Badminton exhibition in women's gym.

3:30-4 p.m.—Volleyball exhibition. WAA Council vs. WAA volleyball club.

4-4:30 p.m.—Dancing exhibition by WAA dancing club in women's gym.

8 p.m.—Horse show at San Francisco Riding Academy, presented by members of the college riding club.

December 9, 10 and 11, will be set aside for the election of club managers for next semester. A nominations committee appointed to nominate candidates for the offices of club managers is composed of Ruby Klistoff, Pat Greenley, Blanche Noyes, Dorothy Nel.

Activities of the week will close with a banquet, the location of which has not been decided upon at yet.

Amendment Rally Date Moved To Next Thursday

Formerly scheduled for today, the Women's Athletic Association amendment rally, has now been set ahead to next Thursday at 2 p.m. in Room 194, according to a recent announcement by Barbara Smith, WAA president.

Purpose of the rally will be the presentation of arguments for the abolition of the Block Society of the WAA. At a recent WAA council meeting it was stated that the Block Society, which is composed of only those members who have attained the highest award in the WAA, and which has at present only three members, was serving practically no purpose at all.

If WAA members are unanimous in disapproval of retaining the present Block Society setup, a new plan of awards will then be submitted to the gathering, Miss Smith said. It will call for the awarding of a letter to each woman participating in a sport, if she merits it through her attendance at the sports practice period, and her enthusiasm as evidenced in the sport.

Through the sending of a questionnaire to leading universities, such as Purdue, Wayne and Michigan, members of the WAA council, gained the information that the trend is definitely away from giving first, second or third awards to women.

"We would like to place participation in WAA sports activities more on the basis of playing for the fun of playing, rather than for the sake of winning high awards," Miss Smith said.

Horse Show Highlights Week's Program Dec. 7

Members of the college riding classes will play host to San Francisco State, San Jose State, and possibly Marin, San Mateo and Salinas junior colleges, at a horse show, to be held on December 7, at 8 p.m., at the San Francisco Riding Acadamey, Eleanore Leitner, riding club manager, said recently.

Prizes of first, second, and third place ribbons will be awarded to winners, as well as trophies for singles winners, she said.

The following program of riding events will highlight the horse show, which will terminate in a barn dance, to be held afterwards.

For Beginners:

1. Walk trot canter—Single
2. Walk trot canter—Pairs
3. Ribbon game

Intermediate Riders:

1. Walk trot canter—Singles
2. Walk trot canter—Pairs
3. Musical chairs

Advanced Riders:

1. Walk trot canter—Singles
2. Walk trot canter—Pairs
3. Walk trot canter—Fours
4. Jumping

The committee selected to help at the affair includes, Barbara Smith, who will register women, Betty Teter, who is in charge of ushering, and Donna Smith, in charge of refreshments.

Baseball Prospects For Next Spring Outlined; Look Good

By Willard Akers

It is a bit early to attempt to forecast the finish of next spring's baseball season, but this department will attempt to outline the possibilities of the 1941 varsity at this time.

The football season has just been completed, and Jack Gaddy, hard-driving baseball and assistant football coach, is beginning to worry about the turnout for next semester's Ram nine.

Finishing in fourth place in league standings last season, the Rams will attempt to do better next year. Gaddy can count on a good pitching staff when spring rolls around, if all pitchers attending college at the present time are eligible next season.

Hvidt Gone, Bryant Arrives

Bob Hvidt, the only consistent pitcher of last season, isn't attending college this semester, and hence won't be able to compete next season. His place will be aptly filled, however, by another Berkeleyan, Gene Bryant, first-string hurler for San Francisco State last season.

Bryant hurled winning baseball all through his competition at Berkeley High, and looked good when he tossed for the Gators last semester.

Assisting the above will be Joe O'Neill, who was with the team last season, but didn't see action during the league season. O'Neill has learned to control his southpaw hurling, and is expected to do great things during the coming season.

Aleo Sold To Brooklyn

The infield has been entirely disrupted. Harry Aleo, pitcher who was changed to second base, has joined the Brooklyn Dodgers. Frank "Moon" Mullins, colorful shortstop has not been seen around the campus this semester, so he will not be eligible.

Ross Wolcott, heavy hitting second baseman, is expected to return. Wolcott was an important factor in the winning streak of last season's Ram nine. He finished the season with a batting average of .345, and received more walks than any other two members of the squad put together. Gaddy will have to make his infield out of new material, but it is expected that many more athletes will turn out next season than in the past.

Plenty Of Men For Outfield

The outfield will probably be well filled when next March rolls around, since many of the outfield prospects of last semester are planning to return, and we have seen and talked to several outstanding athletes who plan to sign up for baseball.

One of the hard playing soccer stars, Henry "Steamboat" Kreutzmann plans to try out for center field. Though the college has not seen Hank compete in actual play, it is known that he starred in softball play this semester.

George Moreira, one of the catchers of last season, plans to try the outfield next season. Moreira, slow to start, was hitting at a mad pace when the season wound up for the Rams last May.

Where—Oh Where Is A Catcher?

Only one position remains in doubt at the present time. To date no catcher has been found. Last season Leo Mezzetti and Moreira did the backstopping for the college yokels. Leo is rumored to have returned to his home state of Michigan to continue his schooling.

Gaddy can call upon Moreira to do the catching, if necessary, but he is hoping that a new man appears next semester.

High Sophomores May Engage Franky Wells For Formal

Possibility of engaging Franky Wells, East Bay orchestra leader, to play for the high sophomore formal, January 11, was voiced today by Alden Thorogood, high sophomore president.

Wells, Thorogood said, has one of the few orchestras in this country which uses the "celesta," a French piano-like instrument popularized recently by Dick Jergens orchestra. Wells, he said, also has a soloist and a trio.

Possibility of arranging several intermission acts are being considered tentatively by the dance committee, Thorogood said.

150 Bid Limit

Inasmuch as present arrangements with the California Country Club limit attendance to the affair to 300 persons, only 150 bids will be available Thorogood pointed out. The bids will be sold through the college bank and will go on sale shortly, he said.

"I would advise those interested in going to the dance to reserve a bid," the sophomore president said. "They can be guaranteed one by simply igning with the secretary at the Associated Students office, Room 155.

Formal Climax of Soph Week

The formal will be the climax of sophomore week, January 6-11. Plans for the week are developing rapidly Thorogood said, adding, "The sophomore committee is working hard on the program for the week."

A series of events open to high sophomores only has also been planned for the week by the special events committee headed by Hugh Waite, he said. All high sophomores should be registered at the Associated Students office inasmuch as notices of these events will be sent only to those registered, Thorogood added.

Queen of the college for a night, the winner of the sophomore sweetheart contest will be presented with a free bid to the formal. She will also be awarded the Sophomore Sweetheart cup, which is now on display in the hall showcase, together with pictures of the eleven candidates.

Men To Elect Sweetheart

1941's title holder will be elected solely by the votes of the men of the college, Elmer Hubacher, contest chairman, declared.

"After all," he said, "It's a SWEETHEART contest."

Rivals in the fight for the title are as follows:

Marialyce Bourland, Margaret Dougherty, Betty Fox, June Holmes, Lydia Laine, Suzanne McFall, Ronnie Neal, Barbara Joyce Norman, Lial Stafford, Loretta Egan, and Helen Wilson.

Alpha Gamma Sigma

Honor Society Incorporated !!

Alpha Gamma Sigma, California honor society, has been incorporated under the laws of the State of California, according to Alice C. Cooper, adviser to the college chapter of the group.

The corporation is known as the Alpha Gamma Sigma, California Junior College Honor Scholarship Society, Miss Cooper said. This incorporation of the society, which has been pending for some time, gives the society a standing which it has never had before, Miss Cooper added.

Advisers of the society met at Santa Maria early in October of this year to discuss the incorporation and the financial support of the organization, Miss Cooper announced.

The Alpha Gamma Sigma wishes to continue the work it has done to stimulate scholarship in the junior colleges, and, as a corporation, its activities will be greatly facilitated, Miss Cooper said. The incorporation makes it possible to ask for competitive bids for pins and they hope to receive better quality and lower prices by this method.

Members of the college honor society who want pins must pay their deposit at the student bank before December 10, Miss Cooper disclosed.

Now that the society is incorporated it can protect its name and accept donations or scholarships, Miss Cooper announced.

President Cloud:

"More Prepare For Junior College Posts"

That interest in the junior college as an integral part of today's educational system is on the increase, may be evidenced in the larger number of students preparing specifically for teaching and administrative posts in this field, according to President Archibald J. Cloud.

As an example of the kind of interest shown by those studying for such work, he described the visit of 14 Stanford University graduate students, who came here two weeks ago with Dr. Alvin C. Eurich, Professor of Education.

Approves Semi-Professional Courses

The group greatly approved of the semi-professional courses offered here, largely so because they were a means of preparing the student for coping with the world upon leaving school.

"We are interested in the extent to which the San Francisco Junior College and many other junior colleges are attempting to meet the needs of all student groups," Professor Eurich commented. "We are particularly interested also in the attention which the junior college gives to personal problems and the personal progress of the students, and its attempt to help them adjust to various conditions in the outside world."

The Stanfordites were members of the class in junior college administration and guidance which the university conducts. In trying to obtain as broad a picture as possible as the actual operation of a junior college, they had visited or were visiting several other institutions on the Pacific Coast, including San Mateo, Sacramento, and Marin.

Welcomed by President Cloud

Upon arrival at this college at 8 o'clock, the group was welcomed into President Cloud's office, where both the president and Harold Leuenberger of the psychology department reviewed briefly for them some of the principle functions of the institution. Escorted by the college deans Edwin C. Browne and Margaret Dougherty, they toured the building to see for themselves the actual work being carried on.

Concluding their visit, Professor Eurich and his students went down to the cafeteria, where Mrs. Hilda Watson, in charge of the hotel and restaurant division received them, and where they lunched before proceeding to Marin Junior College in the afternoon.

College Building Theme Of Proposed Yearbook

Theme of the first edition of Rampages, college yearbook, will be the new college, Mary Frances Malone, newly appointed editor of the publication, announced this week.

Dummy for the book has been completed and plans for the composition of the book are progressing rapidly, according to Miss Malone.

Bids for printing and engraving the yearbook will be open within the next week, Ted Green, business manager, announced. When all of the bids are in, the method of selling the yearbook will be announced, Green said.

Rampages will be sold by a script book method, the exact system of which have not yet been definitely decided upon, Green added. "We expect to have the script books on sale immediately after the Christmas holidays," he said.

The new auditorium at Tulane University has a concrete dome measuring 110 feet in diameter—largest in the U.S.

Sophs To Be Immortalized??

By Eve Burkey

That sophomore committee which vowed at the start of the semester to outfit the college with the kind of tradition every young institution should have, has come up with an idea.

The idea is to turn the somewhat barren center quad into a unique high sophomore court, with bronze plaques commemorating each graduating class.

Explained the high sophomore president, Alden Thorogood, "Each square of the pavement in the quad would be raised, and a metal vault, with the class records and pictures in it put underneath. Then the pavement would be replaced, and a bronze plaque, with the class inscription engraved on it would be fixed on top. Starting with the present graduating class, each graduating class would erect its own plaque until the court would gradually be covered with them. Such a gesture on the part of each graduating class would create a sophomore court tradition which could grow each semester."

Far from being only an idea, however, the creation of a sophomore court is a potentional reality. The committee is working on its plan, and, according to Thorogood, there is a strong probability that the class of January '41 will be able to install the first of a long series of plaques in the court.

Hughes Ordered To Active Army Duty For One Year

James Hughes, political science instructor in the college, has been ordered to active duty in the army for one year.

Ranking as a captain in the Officers Reserve Corps, he will be stationed at Fort MacArthur, San Pedro, California.

Hughes left yesterday for his post, and while he is gone Charles McKiernan will take over the captain's Speech and English classes, and John Selig will take over his American Institutions class. Major Fred MacFarland will conduct Hughes' one Military Science class.

Students Hear Phases Of Marine Paint Industry

Because marine growths, such as barnacles and grass, on the hull of a ship can increase fuel consumption as much as 50 per cent, H. A. Henry, manager of the local branch of the International Paint Company, said in a lecture to paint technology students of the college last Thursday, that paints constructed for the purpose of eliminating these growths are among the most important in the marine paint industry.

"Even in mid-ocean there are approximately 50 million organisms per square foot which will attach themselves to a ship unprotected by a so-called anti-fouling paint," Henry, who is a graduate of Annapolis, pointed out. These anti-fouling paints are put on over two coats of steel priming paint and two or three coats of anti-corrosive paints, he said.

Mercury and arsenic bases are good for paints intended to prevent shell growths, while copper is better for the prevention of grass formation on a ship's hull, he added.

Ship Painting Difficult

In line with the renewed ship building beginning in the Bay Area, Henry said that modern methods of construction do not make it easy for even an organization like the International Paint Company, which is the largest manufacturer of marine paints in the world, to develop paints that give absolute satisfaction.

"Welding and riveting upsets the molecular arrangement of the steel plate and causes an electrolytic tendency which disintegrates the metallic base of the paint shortly after application," he said. "Although the navy "pickles" the steel plates for its ships in sulfuric acid solutions, no practical method has yet been found for commercial use that will get rid of this mill-scale."

Brush Painting Preferred

The best way of painting a ship is still the brush method, he emphasized. In spraying, drops of paint are likely to form and harden, and after a number of paintings, these drops become so heavy they fall off, leaving an exposed spot of steel, Henry said. He stressed the fact that solvents in anti-fouling paints evaporate into the air when they are sprayed, leaving only a coat of pigment which is useless in preventing marine growths.

University of Arkansas medical school's department of pathology recently performed what its officials described as the largest autopsy in the school's history.

"Tessie, 7,000-pound circus elephant," was the subject.

Using axes, saws and other carpenter shop instruments, physicians and students discovered Tessie died of tetanus and that she also suffered a lung congestion.

University of Minnesota students have started a move to publish a list of all jokes used by their professors; a list that will classify and number all wisecracks and favorite stories of the pedagogues. Saving of time is the main reason for the effort, for in the future when the instructor feels the moment has arrived for a dash of levity he need only give the number of the joke.

Men about Duquesne university's campus who think they know a lot about women have been challenged. Deciding there was plenty the MADUC could learn on the subject, the Duquesne library has provided a ten-volume encyclopedia on women—women of all races and nationalities, their psychology and temperament.

Incidentally, a book that hasn't left the Duquesne library for two years is "College and Life." The students apparently have been too busy making college life to bother reading about it.

It's not particularly unusual for a boy to be happy because of a girl. But it was at the University of North Carolina one day recently.

Walking into class several minutes late with a smile on his face and a cigar in his hand, one of Dr. E. E. Ericson's students startled the professor into stopping his lecture.

"HAVE A CIGAR," he said.

Dr. Ericson and the class raised eyebrows and stared.

"I'VE JUST BECOME THE FATHER OF A BABY GIRL, 7 POUNDS, 2 OUNCES," the latecomer explained. "YOU'RE NOT GOING TO GIVE A QUIZ, ARE YOU?"

And he took his seat.

After the class recovered its poise, the professor continued with Chaucer. The student was Roy Gibson, 19-year-old sophomore. After class, Dr. Ericson offered proper congratulations.

Frank Wells' Orchestra At Soph Dance

Highlighting the Low Sophomore class dance, which will be held at the Veterans Memorial Building, December 13, will be the music of Frank Wells, Bill Williams, class president announced this week.

"Admission to the dance," he said, "will be one student body card per couple, and all students are cordially invited to attend."

Wells orchestra is one of the best in the Bay area, and it was chosen for this affair after the committee had auditioned many other bands in this area, according to Williams.

The orchestra possesses a celesta, which is an electric piano, Williams noted, and should greatly add to the novelty of the music.

As usual, the identification committee will be present at the door of the dance, to make sure of the fact that no persons are admitted on someone else's student body card. Persons found lending cards will have their cards confiscated at the door.

"The committee does not like to take the cards of the lenders," Williams said, "but this is the only precaution we can take to prevent lending of student body cards."

This dance is the first one to be held this semester at the Veteran's Auditorium. Past dances there have found large favor because of the spacious ball room.

While Thinking

This column was written by Francis Chrisman.

WE see by the morning papers that the United States government is pondering over the question of sending a merchant marine from this country to England. Undoubtedly this is due to the effectiveness of the German U-boat campaign in the waters surrounding Britain. The British have admitted that the submarines are sending a great many ships to the bottom and are damaging others.

Now in the attempt logically and impartially to observe the operations of warring nations a writer is open, oftimes, to accusations of "Communist," or "Nazi," or something else just as foolish.

There seems to be no reason whoy a report of a German victory should not be made with the same consideration as is given to the report of a British victory.

But the existing situation in the United States is certainly far from the cry of "we are neutral," raised by a great many assuming Americans.

There is absolutely nothing wrong with favoring the British in the present struggle, but why on earth do we have to claim that we are neutral? Countries have themselves for oversights of much less importance become involved in wars.

WE were wondering what would happen if the Greeks ever entered Italy. The general consensus seems to be that the Italians will win out in the end much the same as did the Russians, but the Italians have not got the man power to waste nor the resources to squander that the Russians had; and furthermore, it would seem that the Italians have had too much of war already. It is reported that Mussolini is beginning to worry about feeding his people through the winter.

It has been said that an army marches on its stomach; perhaps Mussolini will find that his people have a great concern for their stomachs too.

IN the past few weeks there has been an ever increasing number of explosions and fires at factories engaged in national defense work.

There was a time when the FBI came out with an explanation any time something of this nature occurred. But lately the secret service has made absolutely no comment. This can only mean one of two things. Either they have an explanation for these disasters or they have none at all.

It might be well for the FBI to give out at least a semblance of a report to the public, because if they continue in this way somebody is going to think that they are stumped.

LAST week the new president of Mexico was inaugurated, with much brotherly love exhibited both coming and going, and we may marvel at the fact that the expected revolution did not come off. We might at this time observe that a member of the college faculty predicted a revolt in the neighboring republic and we must truthfully admit that we were somewhat disappointed at the inaccuracy of his prognostication. In the past we were definitely guilty of believing some of his predictions.

Ruling

Welfare Group's Directory Plan Abandoned

Officially banned by a school department ruling, the Welfare Committee's plans for compiling a student directory have been discarded, Gene Powell, committee head, disclosed today.

"The plans for the student directory have been abandoned," he announced, "on the recommendation of Louis G. Conlan who was handed an opinion by the Board of Education."

The directory was planned to be ready for sale by the end of the first month of next semester, and was to consist of the names, addresses, and telephone numbers of all registered students and faculty members. Two thousand copies, to sell for 10 or 15 cents each, were to be printed.

It was felt that a directory would promote general friendship among the students as well as tending to unify the college. Commented Associated Student president Lyle Shultz, "Such a directory would have been valuable to the college. If a student wanted to check his homework assignment or something similar, he would only have to look up some member of his class and telephone him for the work."

College Collects Extra Vacation Day For 14 Total

One day of vacation more than other divisions of the San Francisco School Department was garnered by the college this year.

The registrar's office announced this week that the college Christmas vacation would begin Monday, December 16, and extend through Wednesday, January 1, 1941. Instruction will be resumed Thursday, January 2. Other city schools are scheduled for a vacation period from Monday, December 23, to Monday, January 6, 1941. Deduction shows a gain of one whole day for the college.

To keep within the budget allotted The Guardsman this semester, Leonard Gross, editor, announced that publication would be suspended after Tuesday, December 10, to be resumed Tuesday, January 7, 1941.

Radio Classes To Present Play For Sophomore Week

Members of advanced radio broadcasting classes are working on a short play, The Wedding, to bepresented during Sophomore Week, the first week in January, Marie Weller, radio broadcasting instructor, said this week.

This is the first attempt of the radio broadcasting classes to produce a play of this kind, as the skits presented on Dedication Day were the historic or factual type.

Constitution

Ex-Council Asks Students To Vote Changes Dec. 12

As an outgrowth of constitutional changes made last semester, members of the Associated Students will be asked to vote minor corrections and additions to the constitutions at a meeting tentatively scheduled for 1 o'clock, Thursday, December 12, Executive Council members said today.

The corrections involved are minor and apparently insignificant, members of the council explained, and were a result of confusion arising out of the rush in which the changes were made. These corrections, however, were deemed necessary by the Executive Council and will be presented for student vote according to the constitution.

They are as follows:

Article II—Section 1 "The officers of the Association shall be a president, vice-president, and a secretary," will be changed to read, "The officers of the Association shall be a president, vice-president, a secretary, and a rally commissioner."

Article II—Section 5 was ommitted. It will read, "The Rally Commissioner shall have attained at least High Freshman standing at the time he is a candidate. He shall be the Chairman of the Rally Committee and shall represent this committee, including the yell leaders, on the Executive Council. He shall be in charge of all rallies and programs as defined by the Executive Council."

Article II—Section 6 was ommitted. It will read, "The Yell Leader shall be a registered student of the San Francisco Junior College and a member of the student body. He shall serve as a member of the Rally Committee. He shall be elected in the same manner as the officers."

Article III—Section 1—Subsection 2. "The secretary of the Associated Students," will be changed to read, "The vice-president of the Associated Students."

Article III—Section 1—Subsection 3. "A representative of the Social Committee," will be changed to read, "The secretary of the Associated Students."

Article III—Section 1—Subsection 4. "A representative of the Rally Committee," will be changed to read, "The Rally Commissioner."

Music

Choral Groups Sing Twice This Week

Closing the semester's musical activities, college choral groups will make two appearances before the Christmas holidays, Flossita Badger, music instructor, announced today.

Appearing this afternoon at 1 o'clock before the students of Mission High School, the Men's Double Quartet will present a program of choral music attuned to the Christmas season. Accompanist to the group will be Ruth Berryessa, and the assembly will also hear a piano recital by Betty and Marion McKillop.

In their only full Christmas concert offering, the college music groups will sing at the First Methodist Church, 1600 Clay Street, on Thursday, December 12, at 8:15 p.m. Considered one of the finest choirs ever to represent the college, the A Cappella group will be supplemented with piano solos by Betty McKillop and David Leonard, whose musical talents are of professional caliber.

"The Double Quartet will also present songs, and the choral offerings in their entirety deserve the support and esteem of students' parents," Miss Badger said.

Being the final performance of the year, the program Thursday evening should be attended by students and parents alike, and the musical achievements of the college should merit the attention of all.

Bulletin Board Forms Ready Next Semester

Systemized, standard forms for the posting of notices on the bulletin boards in the main college building will probably be printed and ready for use by the beginning of next semester, Evans Ecke, art instructor in the college, announced this week.

"These forms will regulate the posting of all notices and no announcements can be put on the board unless they have been approved by the posting committee and the registrar's office," he said.

In regard to posters, Ecke noted that persons or associations wanting them on the board should leave only the information for the poster with the registrar's office.

To regulate the posting of notices, the committee headed by Ecke, has classed them under six types, each to be confined to space which will be set aside for the respective purpose and labeled accordingly.

Brother Leo's Last Public Lecture December 13

Brother Leo of St. Mary's College will make his last public lecture appearance at the War Memorial Opera House, on Friday, December 13, at 8:15 p.m.

Choosing as his subject, Saint Thomas More, Brother Leo, who has contributed for more than 30 years to the cultural life of this community, will deliver an address for which tickets are available here through Lloyd Luckmann of the faculty.

Saint Thomas More, one of the most colorful figures in history will be portrayed as one possessed of those qualities which men need so much today.

Loring Concert Tickets Available To Students

Attendance at the Loring Club concert, to be held at the Veteran's Auditorium on Tuesday evening, December 10, will be available to college students at reduced prices, Dr. Claude A. Shull, club music committee chairman, announced today.

"Tickets to the concert have never been sold for less than one dollar," Shull said, "but the board has made provision for students at the price of 40 cents."

NYA Time Cards Must Be Filed Today

Today is the deadline for the filing of NYA time slips, as announced by Edward H. Redford, college NYA director.

"All schedules handed in must, as usual, be made out according to the established rules which prevailed for the filing of past time slips," Redford said, "and a recent ruling has come in from the government offices stating that fractions of hours must be made out in decimals, but only as quarters or halves of hours."

Redford indicated that the filing of slips has been extremely prompt in the past and declared that he saw no reason why the same condition should not exist this month.

Paint Students Hear About Zinc Compounds

Speaking to the paint technology students of the college last Tuesday, R. S. Beale, Pacific Coast manager of the New Jersey Zinc Company, discussed the use of zinc compounds in paints, Walter D. Forbes, paint instructor, announced this week.

Other processes and relative subjects were discussed by the speaker, but Forbes noted that the students were most interested in the fact that Beale said the future in the paint industry for beginners is very promising.

"I advise students going into the paint industry to specialize in vehicles, that is the liquids in which the paints are suspended," he said.

Beale also stressed the fact that there were 400 men in the research department of his plant which were working on formulae for paints which the manufacturers could put to good use.

Tourney Week Banquet Tickets At College Bank

Now on sale at the finance office are Tourney Week Banquet tickets for Thursday, December 12, Michael M. Zarchin, college bank director, announced this week.

"Anyone wishing these tickets should come to the finance office between the hours of 11 and 1 p.m. They are priced at 50 cents," Zarchin added.

Low Soph Dance December 13 Open To College

Open to all members of the Associated Students, the low sophomore class dance will be held Friday, December 13, at the Veterans Memorial Building, class officers said today.

Admission to the affair will be one student body card per couple, Ogden Wheeler, class vice-president said. Urging a large attendance at the dance, he commented, "The dance will be paid for by Associated Student funds from money paid in to the fund by students who purchased Associated Student cards, therefore students should take advantage of their purchase by attending the dance."

Music for the affair, which is to be semi-formal, will be supplied, Wheeler said, by Frank Wells' orchestra, which is, he noted, one of the best in the bay area. Dancing will start at 8:30 p.m.

The necessary ban on lending of Associated Student cards will be strictly enforced by the identification committee at next week's affair, Wheeler warned. Would-be-card-lenders were asked by Wheeler to use their cards themselves and attend the dance. "It's your own card, you paid for it," he pointed out, "why let someone else get the benefits of it?"

All borrowed cards will be confiscated at the doors by the identification committee, he added.

Pink Ice Cream Fails To Impress

By Eve Burkey

THIS is the tale of a pink ice-cream cone.

Martin Dies wouldn't have cared for its color scheme.

Phyllis Haley, college psychology instructor, didn't care for any part of it.

Pink ice-cream cones didn't fit into her idea of the ideal Psychology 15 classroom.

Even an instructor has limited patience.

Being leered at by a blob of strawberry-colored cream is one of them.

Delivering herself a few terse but well-chosen sentences, to wit: "Is today's college student retrogressing?" (retrogressing—going backward fast), Miss Haley coldly banished the errant cone from her lecture.

Showing no emotion save a slight tendency to melt at the top, the pink cone bowed politely to Miss Haley's edict, and, escorted by a student friend, closed the door carefully behind it. Feeble crunching sounds presently floated through the open transom . . .

THAT is the end of the tale of a pink ice-cream cone.

Moral: To eat pink ice-cream cone in class—bring one for teacher too.

Civil Service Curriculum To Undergo Reorganization

That civil service courses at the college next semester will undergo a decided change was announced today by Lloyd D. Luckmann, instructor at the college, who revealed that new courses will be substituted for those now being given.

"One new course," Luckmann said, "will be called civil service 50 a-b, and will be open only to sophomores as a three unit course. However those students who have completed civil service 52 or 53 will also be admitted."

Civil service 50a will concern state government, while civil service 50b will have to do with the public administration.

The present course entitled civil service 55 will be extended to 55 a-b, and will be a first semester course.

"Future students in civil service work," Luckmann added, "must take political science 65, which supplements the training given at the college in government work."

Next semester courses in civil service 31, 32, 53, 54, and 60 will be suspended.

Student Elections

Committee Warns Candidates To Obey Constitution Rules

Qualification of candidates and regulations for campaigns in the forthcoming elections were called to the attention of members of the Associated Students by Hugh Waite, election committee chairman, this week.

These regulations are incorporated in the Associated Students constitution and serve as a guide to election machinery which will swing into action at the nominations assembly, Friday, January 3, 1941.

Qualifications for candidacy as laid down in the constitution include registration in college during the semester, proceding that for which the office is desired, a second midterm grade of "C" for at least 12 units of work, and presentation to the chairman of the election committee a petition or intention on or before December 11, he added.

The committee which consists of Waite, Dean Edwin C. Browne, Bob Dolman, and Bob Ogg, is to serve as a final judge regarding the elegibility of candidates, Waite revealed.

Offices To Be Filled Named

Twelve offices are to be filled at the coming elections, according to the provisions of the constitution. First on the list are the officers of the Associated Student organization, a president, vice-president, secretary, and head yell-leader.

Members of the Associated Men Students and Associated Women Students respectively elect four officers each, president, vice-president, secretary, and treasurer.

Other organizations within the Associated Students, the Women's Athletic Association and the Club Advisory Board, conduct separate elections. WAA officers for next semester will be elected next Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday. Club Advisory Board officers have already been elected.

Primary elections determine candidates for the final voting which will be on Thursday, January 9, Waite said.

Nominations January 3

"Candidates will be presented for the various offices at an assembly scheduled for January 3," Waite declared. "At this meeting Lyle Shultz, Associated Students president, will introduce each candidate with a brief resume of the candidate's previous experience in extra-curricular activities. Each candidate may also be allowed two minutes in which to present a nominations speech."

The Executive Council for this semester has adopted a measure frowning upon the use of election cards or campaigning of any type other than the candidate's actual speech at the nominations or presentation assembly on January 3.

"Campaigning Unnecessary"

"Not only is campaigning unfair to the student who is financially handicapped, but it is also considered unnecessary to a sensible college election," Waite said, explaining the measure. "Last semester the various candidates joined in a written agreement to dispense with campaigning, and it is thought that this semester's candidates will be willing to participate in a similar plan out of a sense of fair play and sportsmanship."

Actual procedure for election day on January 7, has been outlined, Waite revealed.

Election will take place between the hours of 9 a.m. and 4 p.m. on the campus, where there will be two voting machines in operation. One will be for women students and the other will be for men students, he explained.

Election Committee At Polls

"In attendance at the polls during the voting hours will be one faculty member, one member of the election board, and at least three members of the election committee," he said.

Waite emphasized the fact that each voter will be required to show his student body card before he is allowed to enter the polls, and that each voter will be registered and his student body card numbered and punched.

"We would like to request the cooperation of the students in facilitating election procedure," Waite commented. "That is, each voter is asked to vote and move on and not to loiter within 10 feet of the polls."

He added that complete details as to the exact location of the voting machines and a list of candidates will be forthcoming.

Denman Awards

Women Win Scholarships

Mary Frances Malone and Virginia Proschold were recently awarded the James Denman scholarship here, it was reported this week by Margaret Dougherty, dean of women.

The scholarship which amounted to $250 and was divided between the two women, is awarded each semester to women students who have the best academic average for the semester at the college, according to her.

A committee of three awards the scholarship semi-annually. They are President Archibald J. Cloud, John McGlade, deputy superintendent of schools, and Miss Dougherty.

Miss Malone is feature editor of The Guardsman and is also editor of the college year book. This is her fourth semester at the college. Miss Proschold is a business major, and this is her first semester at the college.

The scholarships come from the James Denman medal fund. Medals for scholastic achievement were awarded girls graduating from the eighth grade preparatory to attending high school. They were discontinued 20 years ago by the Board of Education because of the absorption of the eighth grade into the junior high schools. Meanwhile the money from the fund accumulated. Later, Judge William Denman decided to use the fund for a series of scholarshiops to the college.

Judge Denman is the son of James Denman, who was the first superintendent of schools in San Francisco.

Opened for the first time this semester, was a junior high school, located near the college, named in honor of James Denman.

Transportation Survey Shows Little Change

Final tabulation of the second transportation survey of the college taken last month indicates that no material change has been made in street car and bus patronage, in spite of Market Street Railway ticket sales here and the extension of the Tenth Avenue bus line, according to Edwin C. Browne, dean of men.

Conducted under the supervision of Dean Browne, this second survey had been made to determine whether these two new factors had shifted student street car traffic.

"The fact that the bus runs directly to the front entrance of the college has relieved the K line somewhat," he commented, "but this extra load occurs chiefly at the Forest Hill Tunnel Station, to which students transfer from the K or L line."

"It has been hoped that the results of the second transportation poll would be an influential factor in adjustment of the K line on Ocean Avenue, to the end that a switchback may be installed at Phelan and Ocean Avenues," he continued. "However, no notification has been received from the Municipal Railway concerning this change."

The K line continues to carry the heaviest load to and from the college, the survey indicated. The completed figures show that an average of more than 400 students arrive on the K each day at 8 o'clock and 500 at 9. The load decreases from 10 o'clock on but grows again on the cars going downtown as the students return home from classes. Heaviest outgoing traffic is at 3 and 4 p.m., the survey shows.

The figures compiled show also that nearly 500 students arrive and depart by automobile. This fact has accounted to some great extent for the congested parking on the college grounds.

Faculty Committee Should Be Commended

ESTABLISHMENT of a faculty Bulletin Board Committee to exercise control over the bulletin boards located at various places on the campus was recently announced by the administration of the college.

Although the need for such a committee was not very apparent to the majority of students previous to the authorization of the committee, it is now conceded by the majority of men and women at the college that the improvement in appearance and content of material posted on those boards was not only existent but pressing.

To review very briefly the regulations adopted by the committee might be advisable at this time. They provide for the division of the various announcements into six departments or types: club announcements, special college events (dances, football games), departmental bulletins, office notices, physical education notices, and outside posting material from other schools or groups. Each of these departments is to have a special space which will be kept for specific purposes or information concerning its group, so that students may know where to look for information concerning their activities.

Certain other regulations have also been established, which can be obtained from the committee.

Although these various requirements seem complicated on the surface, their simplicity is evident on second reading. It should be a relief to harassed club presidents and department heads who have had to trust more or less to chance to know that there will be a definite order to follow in obtaining notices. Moreover, students who previously had to examine practically all the college bulletin boards to learn about college functions can now have a definite place for their organization or department's information.

The advantages of having such a committee should be realized by the students of the college, who are, after all, the main beneficiaries of the committee's hard work.

M. F. M.

Cheating A Student, Not Committee Problem

ACCORDING to a recent announcement appearing in The Guardsman, the college judiciary committee is going to adopt more stringent action against students who cheat in college examinations. Cooperation of the faculty in making it difficult for dishonest students to take advantage of their classmates has also been requested.

It is probable that over a thousand students read that article with only a half-hearted interest and without thinking analytically about the meaning behind the words. It is also possible that more than a few students read that article with a semblance of dismay, for all their chances of cashing in on their friends' ability were being dangerously threatened.

Stop and think a minute. Here is a so-called college with a student body of fairly intelligent men and women, not boys and girls. And a group of students is established primarily to check on the honesty of apparently adult men and women, to adopt certain measures to prevent downright cheating. Silly, isn't it?

One would hardly expect to find a committee at college similar to those prevalent in the grammar schools and junior high schools to see that one's shoes are polished or teeth brushed. And yet, shouldn't a sense of honesty be as natural to us as cleaning our shoes?

The problem of stopping cheating and other childish dishonesty at this college should not depend upon a judiciary committee; the responsibility for eliminating cheating at the college depends on you.

Impersonally Speaking

IT is really a wonder how news gets around so fast, but already we are receiving requests for advice to the lovelorn. How the students of the college found that we were a male Beatrice Fairfax is beyond us, but discover it they did.

Being unable to meet all of these people who wish advice on affairs of the heart and give them that counsel personally, we will use this time and space to answer their questions and hope that others in similar straits will profit by this action.

The first question, from A. P., wishes advice on the proper thing to do upon receipt of a warning from 200 pounds of brawn and muscle to quit fooling around with his girl. According to the writer, the warning is totally unjustified.

There are three courses open to A. P., that would be of any consequence. He can heed the warning and end what may develop into a beautiful friendship, or he can call the bully's bluff. The best procedure to follow would be to make use of a dupe who would ignore the warning, and then A. P. should act on the result of what happened to the tool that he employed.

"Is it wise to scratch, pinch, pummel, kick, and otherwise malreat physically a person of the opposite sex in order to endear oneself to him," plaintively inquires a Miss J. L.

The only answer that can be given to any question of this nature is a positive and powerful negative. Even though the victim may possibly escape without being scarred for life physically, the injuries to his pride are irreparable.

Plumbing the depths of human despair, the request comes from J. M., who wishes to know how to forget a woman without joining the foreign legion, or embracing some other drastic way of attempting to relieve the memory of Her.

Never let it be said that even a question like this is too tough for us to solve. On the surface, this looks plenty hard to solve, but actually it is a cinch. Follow the procedure of the immortal Abraham O'Cohen, who, when faced with the same situation, merely shrugged his shoulders and said, in his own fashion, "Well, fancy that."

Another inquiry, this one from F. B., gives a description of himself and, acting on the erroneous theory that this is a lonely hearts club, asks for introductions. He also wishes to know how to go about, as the plebians put it, getting a girl.

We often wonder.

Most of that menace bids fair to drop to pieces in time from lack of balance and overweight." Dr. Herbert I. The Spectator

Today's column was written by Hugh McDonald.

BATTING .400 in the best-seller columns this week are two works which might be called "different": Hemingway's For Whom the Bell Tolls and Thomas Wolfe's You Can't Go Home Again. Flick their pages for a moment and you will see that the barriers are down, in style and in subject matter. Both are rebels against the form of the novel as we know it, and neither of them are great books. But both have a common thread, a faint one, but visible: they were both unharnessed by a man who will never write a best-seller. For James Joyce is too busy trying to write great books.

At the back of all the freedom of expression which has been the leitmotiv of books for the last 20 years is Joyce. Like religion and politics, his name is tabooed in polite circles. Battering through his pages discourages nearly all who try to read him, but some have done it: Hemingway and Wolfe and Virginia Woolf were at one time inspired by him. And any man who can be a springboard for young writers as Joyce has been deserves a word at least once a year in every college paper.

When he was born in Dublin nearly 60 years ago, Joyce began the process which he was to complete in his lifetime: depersonalizing himself from his environment. Before he was 20 he had disavowed his church and his country, and had exiled himself in Paris, hardly Siberian in its stresses. He completed his exile when he published his Portrait of the Artist As a Young Man in 1914. He rocked the world, precariously shaking on its post-war Puritanical haunches, when he published his Ulysses in 1922. That, in aptest terms, was the pay-off.

No book has had such a lurid history as Ulysses; erudite minds burned the copies in England and in New York, and it has since been the rage to have a copy about the house, upstairs with the etchings. The Supreme Court judged it as sincere, even great literature, in 1929, and last year it achieved a dubious foothold when the Modern Library made it available for a dollar and a quarter. This, then, is the reception accorded Joyce's greatest work, slandered in Decameronian fashion, and every object of the author disregarded.

It is not written for entertainment; to enter it with that purpose is to miss the author's trends. If you believe that English Literature died with Tennyson—if you vote a straight ticket at the polls—if you've never missed a Bingo night at the Bijou—in short—if you standardize easily and expect conformation from the rest of the world—for your sake and for Joyce's sake DON'T read Ulysses!

What's Your I.Q.?

"FACTS, names, notes, and dates," our pet book worm Sylvester Higins was bemoaning his fate with this wail of woe.

"Must I," he moaned, "be forever delving into pages upon pages of print, just to look up data for a columnist?"

"You're getting good pay," we comment, "remember if you don't like it, you can quit."

Much to our dismay and amazement he did just that, and so we were forced to cram ourselves a little and dig up some data.

Hot off the press: 1—The ace of clubs is often called the "puppy foot." 2 — Dickens' "Christmas Carol," in the original, contained 50,000 words. 3—Skunks can be driven from under a porch by smoking them out. 4—Napoleon's son died from over-indulgence in violent exercise. (Athletes please note.) 5—Sing Sing prison is so named for the Indian phrase meaning stony place.

Scoop: Thomas Jefferson introduced finger bowls into American society. Unscoop.

Dashed off data: 1—Priscilla Alden's family name was Mullens. 2—If a lobster loses a leg, another will grow in its place. 3—Chalcopyrite is commonly called "fool's gold." 4—Paul Revere rode about 10 miles. (Gad, look at all the fuss that's been made about a 10 mile jaunt.)

Complicated connotations: 1—Gumbo file is a powder made by drying sassafras and bay leaves, and grinding them. 2—If you have a young alligator, feed it earthworms and minnows. 3—The identity of the author of the Waverly Novels was kept a secret for 13 years. (Shhh! Don't tell a soul.) 4—A 25 pound turkey has 3,860 feathers.

Concluding crax: 1—El Brendel is not Swedish, but Dutch. 2—Shakespeare's grave was dug 17 feet deep.

On The Feminine Side

CHRISTMAS shopping with all its stress is upon us once again, as any battered and bruised person who has visited any of the downtown stores recently can undoubtedly testify. Crowded elevators, crammed aisles, teeming counters, squalling babies, worried mothers, distracted salesgirls, desperate floor managers, and disgusted shoppers are all intent upon adding to the enjoyment of the season.

As if the physical duress of this time of the year were not enough, there is always the extra little problem of what to get for Willie or Mary Lou. And this is where we step in, in the hope that perhaps a suggestion or two would not go amiss.

First of all, you must make a decision between giving something practical (horrible word) and giving something that you would honestly like to receive yourself, always assuming that you're the same sex and age as the person to whom you are giving the present.

If you are one of those despicable persons who spend all your spare time thinking of dull and uninteresting gifts to present with a smug, "I knew you could use it," read no further. You don't need any suggestions, because from practical experience we know that your mind is all made up weeks in advance. Of course, we may be bitter about it, thinking about Ogden Wheeler, who threatens to give his mother a mop and a bucket for Christmas. But he's only joking (we hope).

If, on the other hand, you are the ordinary man or woman who wants to give something both unusual and practical, your problem is none too easy and is one that requires a lot of hard thought.

For The College Woman

The college woman who is interested in clothes is not such a very difficult person to buy things for, if you know her personal likes and dislikes or her favorite activities.

One of the nicest gifts we can imagine would be a subscription to a fashion magazine for young women. It's a present that keeps its interest and is just a bit different, if you're in doubt as to what the woman would actually enjoy.

The realm of purses is practically limitless for the shopper in doubt. The stock from which to choose includes everything from huge bags for school to small bags or pouches for dates or street wear to gala evening bags. We're especially fond of those saddle leather bags with one's name branded across one corner for campus wear, and of huge red or green broadcloth bags to wear with one's black street clothes. Those snakeskin carry-all pouches are also new and wonderful for college.

Gloves and mittens of all types are a safe bet, too. Incredibly soft bunny mitts with bright red leather palms are just about the last word for college, especially for those mornings when you have to stop to take inventory to see if your fingers are all there (as if you didn't know). Colorful Tyrolean or Czechoslovakian mittens or natural pigskin gloves are also warm and desirable for wintry days besides being inexpensive. More dressy gloves include the suedes and doeskins in colors ranging from black and darkish colors through the new winter and spring pastels. We saw some super fringed suede gauntlet gloves of four button length that any woman would open with delight, and some neat black suedes trimmed with a single gold initial on each cuff.

Odds and Ends

Unusual cosmetics and perfumes are generally exciting to the feminine mind. One of the nationally known perfumes has come out with two tiny Christmas bells filled with two lush scents, one for evening and one for day-time wear. Then there is the inexpensive little key ring equipped with mirrors on which dangle three lipsticks in shades to blend with various colored dresses; it can be monogrammed to add a "just for you" touch which seems to lift any gift out of the ordinary class.

IF YOU HADNT YET

received your copy of the 1941 San Francisco Social Register, you must have been as shocked as we to learn of the typographical fox paws (F. faux pas) as discovered therein by Miss Robbins of The Chronicle society section. (We do anything to get material.)

Just in case you missed Miss Robbins last Sunday, may we point out that that sharp journalist observed no fewer than TWO typographical errors; Heaven knows how many more still remain undiscovered. (This column is usually a seething hotbed of typographical errors.)

We wonder just what similarly slighted socialites do after, of course, they have taken care of the typesetter.

DO THEY ACTUALLY

change the chrome monograms of their station wagons? Do their great Danes really stride away from them in scorn?

The situation is hardly funny; consequences resulting from such seemingly mild errors are staggering. We remember the sad plight last year of William Persiflage. His name was spelled William Qersiflage. You can imagine his feelings every time he received the morning mail. His postman even refused to ring twice. The fact that his name wasn't included on the social register but was spelt wrongly on a shirt manufacturer's and punchboard operator's mailing list doesn't alter the gravity of the case.

WHEN YOU DO

receive your copy—ours has been delayed in the mails too—will you check the spelling of your name carefully? If a mistake has been made, please inform this column or Miss Robbins at The Chronicle. The information will be relayed to the proper authorities.

Editor, The Guardsman:

Once again you have missed the boat.

You have the unintelligible gall to come out with a crack at the soldiering of the Italian Army. Who are you to offer your puny opinion on a subject of which you know next-to-nothing, as evidenced by your typical man-on-the-street snap judgment of the Italian Army's efforts in Greece. (Both my parents are 100 per cent Scotch as regards ancestry, so this complaint is not biased.)

Time and Life magazines and other periodicals along with two military strategists in particular have accredited the Italian Army's setback to the inefficient Italian staff work and have been quick to point out that these setbacks in no way reflect the courage of the soldiers. Such intimations as yours, as well as being false, are lacking of tact since they serve indirectly to promote American disunity.

Let's have no more of such insulting falsifications, for I fear if we do, some of J. C.'s cosmopolitan studentry will be knocking at your office door, and it won't be to hand you a letter, comprendez?

Editor's Note: How well you know your French, and so much better than your English—if your objections indicate your ability to read the language. May we quote the notice to which we assume you made reference:

"Although they may have cancelled the 1940 Olympic Games, the nations of the world are at least getting a chance to watch the Italo-Grecian track meet.

"Those Italians must be pretty good runners, considering they are wearing heavy uniforms. Of course they threw away all their important material and accoutrements so it is no wonder the Greeks can't catch up with them.

"There is one consolation anyway. If the Greeks chase the Italians back to Rome, Mussolini can step out on a balcony, throw his chin out, growl, glare at the Greeks, and scare them to death.

"It looks as if that is the only way you can stop them."

Hurrying to catch the boat, may we add that we are awaiting eagerly the promised visit. We sincerely hope that careful reading will further your intelligent understanding. Comprendez?

• More Afternoon Dances

Editor, The Guardsman:

It was a very good idea and plan to have a dance in the gymnasium last Friday. It also was a good idea to plan having these dances every week. However, it was stated that this plan would depend upon the success of this last dance. Not many people were at this affair for they did not know about it. If it is planned to discontinue the Friday afternoon dances because of lack of attendance, I think it would be advisable to have another dance and announced it in the Tuesday issue of The Guardsman which would give the students a chance to keep the afternoon open and make dates for the dance.

I talked to many students and they would appreciate it very much if the dances in the gymnasium would be made a weekly affair. Many of us like to be able to dance here on the campus not having to go to the hotels or some of the Following is a program of the day's scheduled events:

10 a. m.—Swimming exhibition at the YWCA.

12-1:15 p. m.—Tennis at the college tennis courts.

1:15-2 p. m.—Hockey exhibition at the college hockey field, San Francisco State College versus College WAA Hockey club.

2:15-2:45 p. m.—Archery exhibition at archery field.

2:15-2:45 p. m.—Horseshoes exhibition at college horseshoe grounds.

3-3:30 p. m.—Fencing and rifle in the women's gymnasium.

3:30-4 p. m.—Badminton exhibition in women's gymnasium.

3:30-4 p. m.—Volley ball exhibition. WAA council versus WAA volleyball club.

4-4:30 p. m.—Dancing exhibition by WAA dancing club in women's gymnasium.

Elections To Be Held

On Monday and Tuesday, December 9 and 10, from 9 a. m. to 4 p. m., and on Wednesday, December 11, from 9 a. m. to 12, election of WAA officers for next semester will be held. Balloting will be done near the main office of the women's gymnasium.

Unopposed for the office of WAA president is Jeanne Arnold, while Blanche Noyes will also run alone for vice-president. Two candidates, Maria Polantas and Elma Oddstead, will vie for honors as secretary of the organization. For the office of treasurer, there are two candidates, Bernice Strube, and June Hobson.

Banquet Finishes Week

Terminating the week's activities, a banquet, centering around the theme, The House That WAA Built, will be held on December 12, at 6 p. m., at Veneto's, 639 Bay Street. Featured speaker of the evening will be Louise Cobb, from the University of California.

Theme of the banquet was chosen, according to WAA officials, because this year marks the 6th anniversary of the college WAA, but more especially it marks the unifying of the organization in a home of its own.

Open Banquet

Everyone is invited to the banquet and tickets priced at 50 cents, have been placed on sale. They may be purchased from Betty Teter, Barbara Smith, Marie Richardson, Jane Visalli, Eleanore Leitner, Virginia Coker, Jane McKinnon, Versa Cullen, Anita Fridley, Eleanore Haliber, Elma Oddstead, Bernice Strube and Blanche Noyes, as well as others.

Views, Reviews By Ed. On Successful Season

A—MUSINGS: Those things that remain after a so-called successful season. Most outstanding run was in the USF game in which Al Nauman sprinted 90 yards to a touchdown, only to be called back. It was his final game of the season, and he ended it brilliantly . . . Funniest antic. Jackie Medrano's sensational catch for the third and final touchdown in the Pasadena slaughter held on Armistice Day, when he caught the ball on the 6 yard line from Honnert, went clear past the goal line and dived over the end zone thinking he had 16 yards to go to score when he only had 6. . . Sheer guts. of Jimmie Honnert's intestinal fortitude that drove him over the goal and kick the extra point in the L. A. game which defeated the Cubs, despite the fact that he was suffering from an injured leg and deeply cut hands. He was sore and could hardly move, and hadn't seen any action the whole first half, and then, argued with Lee Eisan all during half time. Lee hardly gave an answer, but Jim went in . . . and played a whale of a game . . . Thriller. the 19 to 13 State game, which we think is the best games the Rams played. The Rams made the first touchdown, then the Gaters followed up, then made another, and converted. feeling safe. Then Nauman goes on a rampage and scores . . . the tricky pass to Taylor that scored the point after touchdown, and then Nauman goes wacky with play 27 and scores standing up . . . And poor Chad Reade, who played with his heart, and made a tying touchdown that was called back because of an offside penalty against his team . . . Mudder. in which the Rams swam and slushed all over Seals Stadium to defeat San Mateo 6 to 0, and the poor Bulldawgs, who had white jerseys on, and got mud all over them. and Martin Hill, the announcer going gnatz because he couldn't tell who was who . . . Heartbreaker. the Sac'to game which we were so sure of winning, and almost woulda too, if it hadn't been for a lumbering tackle named George Jensen, who scooted 85 yards to a touchdown on an intercepted pass. the kids really had a reason to be soused that trip home . . . Sweetest win. in which we defeated the snotty Cal rooters who were so confident over the fact that their frosh hadn't lost a game to a junior college eleven, and when our red and white jerseyed eleven (their enemy colors) slapped the early comers who came to see the St. Mary's-Cal main event, with a 6 to nothing moider. . what a glorious sensation that was . . . kinda felt like being kissed by Hedy. Woo-woo! not that we've been kissed by her. (Ed.'s note—Not that you've been kissed period.) (Add Ed.'s note—this is not an advertisement). Aww, layoff, willya? . . . Signs of a "keen" coach . . . of Lee Eisan letting Dave Cunningham, who had been playing blocking back all season, play tailback during the final minutes of the Pasadena game. after we had the game 18 to nothing . . . Gripe. De noive of that college women's gym instructor who rooted for the other team in our game which we lost . .that against Placer . . . The thing that made a snap up in our belf'ry tower. when just after the noise subsided after Nauman's sensational 90 yard run (it always quiets down when something goes amiss after such a run) and two women next to us kept on talking about fashions—they musta been talking all through the time Nauman was running and a thousand sport fans were yelling . . .

Two men who fought in the golden gloves. Flyweight Takeshi Momii, Nipponese 112 pound resin-consumer smudged David Villamor of Stockton via decision, but lost out the same way with Albert Florita of the same town last Monday.

Bill Edwards, college negro sensation, dropped his first fight.

Always A First Time

This will be the first time the AMS fights will charge admission to their AMS fights to be held at the Coliseum Bowl December 11 from 7:45. From Slim Thorogood came word that the charge will be a quarter per head for outsiders. At this price, with eight fights and two wrestling matches plus exhibitions, we think the public is getting bank, bingo, screeno and dish nite put together.

Champs, Champs All Over College

By K. H.

Look around you, collegians, there may be a champion sitting in your class right now, and you may not know it.

Not a superfluous, psuedo, transcriptional parody of a champ, (like a champion "no" girl, or beer-guzzler), but a real honest-to-gosh champion.

Like John Kay.

He's a skier. Born in Germany. He spent most of his time in Switzerland, then traveled to northern Italy, a part of the Swiss Alps. Gets around, doesn't he?

At any rate, he revealed to this interviewer he holds the second place title of the Italian Junior Division championship in down-hill skiing, or better still, slaloming, which has no connection with minced meat.

Kay received further training in the Italian Ski Patrol, part of the troops of Il Duce that is stationed near the Swiss border. In the troops, which is part of the compulsory military training for young Italians, Kay's patrol held third place as the best all-around group in the entire battalion.

Kay looks not more than 5.7, but is built like a wrestler. When this interviewer shook hands with him, we said "helLOOOH, boy,"—as our hand crushed in his powerful grip.

Tennyrate, Bob Obg, ski club president, the Hotel and Restaurant Division, and the college is mighty proud of you, John Kay.

Plea Made For Chad Reade To Play In Shrine Game

From a source who signs himself Eugene Malin, news broke to the fact that The Guardsman was needed to help Chad Reade, San Francisco State's stellar halfback break a berth in the Shrine East-West game.

Malin says in part:

"How about having The Guardsman help win Chad Reade, stellar S. F. State halfback, a berth on the Western Shrine team for the annual East-West classic on News Years Day.

"Prescott Sullivan, Examiner; Bill Leiser, Chronicle; Pat Frayne, Call; and Tom Laird, News, have been plugging Reade for a chance to prove what he can do with big time football greats.

"He was an All-City halfback from Lowell High. Upon graduation, he entered Stanford University. A candidate for the freshman team of 1937, he was regarded as a potential All-American by Grantland, Rice, noted sports authority and selector of official All-American teams."

State was one of the college's opponents this year. The college stopped Reade and State for a 19 to 13 score. What do the Associated Students think?

Dr. Otto Loewi, co-winner of the 1936 Nobel prize in medicine, has joined the staff of the New York University College of Medicine.

Coliseum Bowl, December 11

Boxing Finals Wednesday, Likely Prospects Named

Next Wednesday, December 11, the fights sponsored by the Associated Men Students take place at the Coliseum Bowl on 11th Street near Market, Joe Lantagne, boxing coach announced. The first bout is scheduled for 7:45.

Lantagne also announced that Dewitt Portal, San Jose State boxing coach, had promised to referee. If Portal is unavailable at the last minute, Lantagne plans to try to get Clayton Frye, Stanford boxing coach to substitute for him.

The Way To Go

The Coliseum Bowl is located on 11th Street between Market and Mission Streets. It is in the middle of the block and has a prominent marquee. Municipal H car on Van Ness Avenue goes direct, as do all other cars running on Market or Mission Streets. Get off at 11th Street. The building is on the east side.

Medals have already been ordered. The first place medal is the standard gold. The second place medals will be silver, Ted Theodus, AMS president said.

In addition to the boxing bouts there will be two wrestling exhibitions. Lantagne named John Getas and Ed Epting as the principals in one and Angelo Getas and a masked Unknown as the principals in the other.

Mysterious Doings

Lantagne appeared secretive about the exhibition of Judo to be given. He announced George Takeda as one of the exhibitionists and says "it will be good." The only information divulged about it was that it is an ancient oriental sport.

The men named by Lantagne as most likely to survive the preliminaries are Tak Momii, 118 pounder who went to the third round of the golden gloves and appears to be in a class by himself.

In the 127 pound class, George Chin appears to be the class but Lantagne says anything can happen in a boxing match.

Joe Dalmasso appears to outclass the rest of the 135 pounders according to Lantagne.

One Of Best In 145's

In the 145 class, the most likely finalists will be Henry Low and Mario Giacosa. Lantagne says if they meet in the finals it will be one of the best matches of the evening.

Bill Edwards, returning champ from last year, heads the list of 155 pounders. Walt Seaborn and Bob Schneider will probable vie to see which meet Edwards in the AMS spectacle. "If Edwards is not too overtrained from the golden gloves, this will be tops," Lantagne said.

Lantagne names the 165 pounders as the toughest to predict. All the entrants seem to be about equally matched. Bud Callaway, Jack Tobiason, Dick Belmour, Dave Dorman and Jonathan Emerson all have a good chance with Callaway a slight favorite.

Unlimiteds Limited

Bill Lohsen and Tom Mahoney have the best chance of surviving the preliminaries in the 175 division, according to Lantagne. They are virtually unopposed, the entrants in this class being very limited.

Gerald Bradley, ex-goof tackle, heads the heavyweights with Bill Storey as his most likely opponent. To quote Lantagne directly, "Bradley looks real good."

Although the fights are sponsored by the AMS, Lantagne asked to have it clearly pointed out that the women students of the college will be welcome and that they will definitely not be out of place attending the fights.

Doctor, Scribes To Be Present

The boxers will be attended by Dr. Forcade who acted as team physician during the football season according to Lantagne.

Harry B. Smith, boxing expert of the San Francisco Chronicle, is to be approached for the position of time keeper. If possible, Lantagne will get Smith and Harry Borba, Examiner boxing expert, both to act as timekeepers.

In addition to the boxing, wrestling and Judo exhibition the medals for the intramural program will be distributed during the evening.

Intramural Champs To Receive Medals At AMS Fights Wednesday

With nearly all of the intramural program completed, the winners in the different sports will be presented to the Associated Students next Wednesday night at the Associated Men Students fights, Paul Postler, assistant intramural manager, said this week.

The semi-annual boxing matches are to be held December 11, at the Coliseum Bowl. Winners of the various events will be presented with intramural medals, Postler said. In the past the fights were one of the traditional AMS affairs and medals were given by that body.

In the tournament will be many of the winners of last semester's frays. Tak Momii, Bud Callaway, and Bill Edwards wll put in an appearance, the manager said. One of last semester's winners, Frank Matsumoto, will not be entered. He was slated to go to the University of Pennsylvana on a scholarship, but nothing has been heard of it.

Swimmers Finished, Volleyball Starts

Volleyball competition is now underway, Postler announced. The clubs who have entered a squad in this tourney are The Eds, Beta Phi Beta, Tri-Epsilon, Marshmallow Pushers, Shoulders Men, Newman Club, Police Training, J. C. Six, and All-Stars. These men are cautioned to watch the bulletin board for information as to their schedule.

The swimming competition was run off last Friday. Results were not available when The Guardsman went to press, but the winner's names will probably be posted on the intramural bulletin board in the meantime.

Winners of the swimming medals will also be presented next Wednesday evening at the fights, Postler said. Also to be given their awards are the softball, basketball, golf, cross-country, and tennis winners, according to the intramural leader.

Revision Recording

Lists of members of the winning softball teams are in the process of being revised by the team managers and captains, and so the names of the winners of the first, second, and third place medals in this sport cannot be printed in this issue.

Basketball winners, the U. S. All-Americans, are Jack Cuneo, Jack Weiss, Fred Ruether, Martin Foley, John Belton, Jim Fleming, Charles Smith, and Art Fairchild. The runners-up, the Chinese Students, are Joe Chinn, Warren Ho, Stanley Ng, Bill Hong, Johnny Leong, Bob Dare, and Louie Suey.

Winners of the golf matches that were run off toward the beginning of the semester, will also be given their medals. In this sport, only three medals are to be given, according to Postler. Winning medal will go to Paul Pabst, who negotiated the 18 holes in 71 strokes. Bob Epperly took a second with his 89, and Joe Riss had a 90 that earned him a third position.

Cross-Country Winners

Cross-[illegible] sweated around a two and a quarter mile course that was full of the hills and valleys that surround the campus, were Don Venton, Paul Zink, and Bob Howard. These men will receive the first, second, and third place awards, respectively.

Complete standings of the tennis matches, both singles and doubles, have not been released. At the last round, Greely and Friday were to play Johnstone and Schiller for the first place doubles medal. Loser of this match was to have been automatically given the second place award. The show position was being sought by Jack McMeekin and Don Mavor, who were slated to oppose Bauer and Blont.

The singles matches were scheduled to have been completed several days ago, but as yet, no word has been released as to the winners and runners-up in this branch of the intramural competition.

Attendance To Fights Urged

Postler urged all members of the student body to attend the fistic wars on December 11 to applaud the winners of the intramural trophies. "These men have done their best to make the program a success and deserve a lot of praise for their work," Postler said.

Also deserving of praise are the losers in all of the sports, he declared. Without those men and those teams entered, the program would have failed for a lack of active support, he commented.

As soon as is possible, Postler promised to have a list of all winners in every branch of the program released for publication. The winners' names will be also posted on the bulletin board, he said.

Better Half A Crown

As football fades away and basketball predominates the public eye, the Rams satisfy themselves with a tie for the crown with San Mateo, direct cause for the Ram wearing the crown.

Nadan Chiladoux, Guardsman staff artist has shown the happy battering animal with the crown, with a hunk of the headpiece which went to the Panthers and Placer, in his hands.

San Mateo defeated Sacramento which in turn defeated San Francisco which defeated San Mateo. But Sacramento tied a game which lowers its average, thus leaving San Mateo and San Francisco in the race.

But the college has defeated San Mateo, which leaves the Rams on top of the heap.

A beautiful mess, but the Rams are champions—second championship in five years. Once under Russ Sweet's tutelage in 1938, and this 1940 championship.

"But next year, I'll try for one that hasn't any pieces missing." He may do it too, since the Rams almost have a complete roster returning for competition. Although most of the first string is lost, they will probably be well filled with able prep stars and transfers from other colleges.

Sophomores Complete Plans For Traditional Week

Plans for a record sophomore week, to be topped by the traditional high sophomore formal at the California Country Club, were being completed by sophomore officers this week.

Practically certain, officers said, is the selection of Frank Wells' orchestra to play at the affair. A sample of Wells' style will be afforded students at the low sophomore class dance, Friday, December 13, it was noted.

Attendance to the dance, which will be held Saturday, January 11, will be limited to 150 couples, high sophomore president, Alden Thorogood said, inasmuch as present arrangements with the club will allow room for 300 persons only. "I would advise those intending to go to the dance to reserve a bid in advance of their sale," Thorogood said. "By doing so they can be guaranteed a bid. With only 150 bids to be sold, and 3000 students attending the college, reservations will be necessary in order to avoid possible disappointment. Bids may be reserved by simply signing with the secretary at the Associated Students office, Room 155," he added.

Soph Mixer On January 8

Further plans for the week of January 6 to 11 include, he said, a sophomore mixer dance, open to the entire college, which will probably be held on Wednesday, January 8.

A further series of events, which will be restricted to high sophomores has also been planned for sophomore week by the special Events committee, headed by Hugh Waite. Notices of these will be sent only to those high sophomores registered at the Associated Students office, he said.

Contestants in the Sophomore Sweetheart contest will receive their first formal introduction to the student body at the December 13 semi-formal, Elmer Hubacher, contest chairman, announced. Winner of the contest, will be awarded the sun-ray trophy cup, recently purchased by the committee, and a free bid to the formal, he said.

Eleven Would-Be Queens

Pictures of all contestants, who this semester will be elected by men only, are now on display in the halls, Hubacher said.

The 11 students participating in the contest are as follows: Helen Wilson, Loretta Egan, Lila Stafford, Joyce Norman, Ronnie Neal, Suzanne McFall, Lydia Laine, June Holmes, Betty Fox, Margaret Dougherty, and Pat Bourland.

Dr. Freeman Visits College

As an adjunct to attending a medical conference at nearby University of California Medical School, Dr. Frank Freeman, Dean of the School of Education on the Berkeley campus of the university, was conducted about the buildings and grounds of the college last Wednesday by his friend and co-educator, President Archibald J. Cloud.

Enthusiastic over the physical aspects of the college from the first, Dr. Freeman expressed his admiration for the practical and visual beauty of the Science Building and its location.

College Praised

Declaring that the final completion of the campus, with its intended buildings, will make the college one of the finest of its kind in the nation, he considers that the physical environment of students increases their scholastic aptitudes and broadens their accomplishments.

"Their mental and physical wholesomeness," he continue, "is apparent, and I base my statements on the impressions which the students here give to the visitor, for they bear out the healthiness of their surroundings with their expressions."

Supports Terminal Education

Greatly interested in the problems which confront junior college groups, Dr. Freeman is a firm supporter of terminal education. The Hotel and Restaurant Division of the college merited his praise, through the work which they have accomplished in the field of terminal instruction and the precedent which they have set for other colleges.

To the conference of junior college leaders and instructors, meeting next summer at Stanford University, Dr. Freeman directed his college interests. The conference, with its delegates from all parts of the state, will comprise university and state educational leaders, and will be the first meeting of junior college directors under their own counsel.

Terminal education will be one of the primary topics to be discussed by the conferees, and the success of their endeavors, he believes, will be borne out by the accomplishments which have already been realized.

More Bound Periodicals Added To Library

Another shipment of 1939-1940 bound periodicals was received by the library this week, according to Marcus Skarstedt, college librarian.

"These periodicals will be put in alphabetical order in the reading room as soon as possible. We will also have ready soon, the numerous new books received for students' use," Skarstedt added.

Periodical files are, as yet, not very large because of the newness of the college, but Skarstedt is ordering shipments as fast as he can, especially periodicals for reference work.

'Labor-Camp Work Should Be Part Of College Training'

NEW YORK—(ACP)—A semester of planned labor-camp activity somewhere in the country far from the student's normal environment would improve the curriculum of almost any college, Harry David Gideonse, president of Brooklyn College, declared.

Citing the educational significance of CCC the camp as "far greater than its immediate contribution to conservation and relief," Mr. Gideonse expresses belief it is a "pity" for this type of education to be isolated from the intellectual variety and "restricted to a less privileged group."

Can You Dress This Winter On $87?

LAWRENCE, KAN. — (ACP) — Co-eds at the University of Kansas may spend as little as $87 for their clothing this winter and still be well-dressed.

University officials and the NYA asked three seniors to submit their proposed clothing budgets. One said a girl could dress on $87; another suggested $139, the third said $157.61.

The $87 budget included a service coat, $12; dress coat, $25; "flats," $4; dress shoes, $5; day dress, $6; tailored wool dress, $4; "date" dress, $3; formal, $7; evening slippers, $2; three skirts, $6; two shirts, $1.50; silk blouse, $1.50; three sweaters, $6; anklets, $1, and slacks, $3.

The co-ed said the woolen and the "date" dresses, the shirts and blouses and two of the skirts should be home-made.

Debaters To Judge Junior High Contest

By furnishing a judge for each debate, college debaters are assisting the Junior High Debating League this week, Lloyd D. Luckmann, college debate coach, indicated.

Throughout this week a series of debates are being held in various junior high schools of the city. The question being debated is: Resolved, That compulsory helath insurance be adopted in California.

Judges at the various debates are as follows:

Aptos Junior High School, Jack McKay; James Lick Junior High School, Myron Du Bain; Marina Junior High School, Leland Martin; John Swett Junior High School, Robert Nossen; James Denman Junior High School, Robert Roach; Portola Junior High School, Ogden Wheeler; Presidio Junior High School, Robert Nossen, and Roosevelt Junior High School, Erwin Swett.

Alpha Delta Epsilon Sponsors Picnic Dance

To supplant the costume ball that was to be held December 6, in the women's gym, under the auspices of Alpha Delta Epsilon, college art club, and the Ski Club, a picnic dance will be held at Sigmund Stern Grove, January 4, at 7:30 p.m., according to Earl Thollander, president of the Alpha Delta Epsilon.

Entrance to the picnic dance is limited to art students only, and to those who bought bids, to the now defunct costume ball. Refund of the bids may be secured at the bank counter. Those wishing to attend the picnic, may communicate with either the officers of Alpha Delta Epsilon or the Ski Club.

Lawrence Harper Addresses Honor Society

Dr. Lawrence Harper, of the University of California, was guest speaker recently before a group of college honor students, according to Alice C. Cooper, faculty adviser to Alpha Gamma Sigma, college honor society.

Dr. Harper, who is in charge of scholastic awards at the university, spoke on Activities of Scholarship Societies at the University of California and at the Junior Colleges.

He advocated more publicity for the honor societies at the various colleges throughout the country.

That honor students should try to be more sociable and human with their fellow students was emphasized by Dr. Harper. In brief, according to Miss Cooper, Dr. Harper was strong for the "lighter touch" among honor societies.

He added that the honor society at the University of California gave helpful pointers to incoming freshmen and tried to help them with their problems.

Musical entertainment for the assembly featuring Dr. Harper was furnished by the men's double quartet of the college choir.

• Dust Bowl Tramps Are Satisfied
Editor, The Guardsman:

May we suggest to "one who likes his shoes to look nice," that in case the street car ("K") is not extended to Phelan Avenue and Ocean Avenues, he could walk on Ocean Avenue. Sidewalks to Phelan Avenue and then up the Phelan walk to S. F. J. C. If he is "too" rushed to spare a few seconds he could easily bring his shoe polish with him, restoring the mirror-like luster to his honorable shoes. (All two of them.) Or perhaps it would be even easier for him to walk bare-footed through the lot and put his spotless shoes on after the hectic crossing.

Or perhaps he could just take the bus.

Glenn Coates Describes Randolph Field Activities

On a leave of absence from his Randolph Field, Texas, army training courses, Glenn Coates, former student of the college, spoke last week before the members of the aeronautics classes.

Coates left the college last June to continue his flight training under government sponsorship at San Diego's Roosevelt Field. Concluding the 10 weeks of flying program, and successfully passing the requirements for entrance to Randolph, he spoke last September before his former classmates in the college flying courses.

He will return to Randolph, and thence to Kelly Field, in the near future, and continue his advanced army courses designed to fit him for a lieutenancy in the Army Air Corps.

Acquainting flight students with the rites of the army's greatest flight training center, Coates gave a vivid description of the technical methods and the instructions which form the army's program.

Considering that Randolph Field is one of the finest disciplinary and educational military centers of the world, he graphically portrayed the life which the fledgling airmen must conform with to gain their wings. With many of the college's flight students aspiring to Randolph appointments, the talk was enjoyed and appreciated because of its insight into one phase of aviation careers.

The pertinence of Coate's discussion was particularly felt, since all of the flight registrants have completed their solos and are themselves acquainted with many of the problems he described.

Steve Sacco

Music Will Pace AMS Program

Steve Sacco and his 12 piece orchestra has promised to play at the Associated Men Students sponsored fights to be held at the Coliseum Bowl, Wednesday, December 11, Ted Theodus, AMS president, announced this week.

"He had given his promise earlier in the semester, so we expect him to be there that night," Theodus added.

One student body card per person entitles one to admission. A charge of 25 cents will be made for all outsiders, according to Theodus.

"As judges for the contests, we are planning to have leading boxing-sport writers of the newspapers of the city," Theodus said.

Intramural medals will be awarded to the captains of winning teams. There is also a possibility of having the blocks awarded for football that night, according to Theodus.

"In all probability we will have Conlan announce, and I will act as M.C.," he disclosed.

Last semester's AMS fights were witnessed by some 2000 persons, and this semester even a greater crowd is expected, Theodus predicted.

Clubs Should Get Printed Charters From CAB

College organizations which operate under the Club Advisory Board but have not received their printed charter, should leave notice to that effect in the Associated Students office, Room 155, Bob Ogg, CAB president, announced this week.

Several new clubs have been under probation for a year or more, and therefore are eligible under the club board constitution for full charter, Ogg said. Other groups, he added, may become eligible by next semester.

Because of the few names submitted for the CAB election this coming Tuesday, nominations for next semester's officers were declared reopened yesterday, but results were not available for this issue. Standing nominations as made last week are president, Burton Wines; vice-president, Earl Thollander and Helen Hamilton, and secretary, Jeanne Spencer.

Unless further nominations are made, Ogg declared, only vote taken at the club board meeting this Tuesday will be for the office of vice-president, since Wines and Miss Spencer would assume office unopposed.

Two Business Students Placed In Full Time Jobs

Two students in the business courses of the college, Clayton Jolly and Violet Grassow, were placed this week, in full times jobs, according to F. Grant Marsh, college business instructor.

Jolly was secured a full time job at Kress', and Miss Grassow who is now employed at Livingston Brothers, made her own position. She is now gift adviser, a job additional to her regular sales work.

Since the beginning of the semester, there have been more than 75 students placed in full time jobs in department stores and in large insurance companies, it was revealed by

This Collegiate World

DARTMOUTH students in higher mathematics find their exams tough—but far from dull.

Two questions, propounded by Prof. Bancroft Brown, baffled and amused them. They were:

"In the game of shooting craps, the caster rolls two dice and wins if (a) the sum be 7, or 11, (b) if the sum be 4, 5, 6, 8, 9, 10 and if this same sum reappears before seven is ever seen. To obviate the odds against the caster, a dishonest caster employs two dice, one true and the other so loaded that a certain number always appears on the top. What should this number be in order to give him the maximum advantage?"

The second question was given to test the future actuaries' knowledge of the calendar:

An ordinary monthly calendar for the leap year 1940 is hung in a western bar-room. On an unspecified day of the week January 7-13 a cowboy enters the bar-room, draws out his revolver, and shoots out the date, the bullet passing through all 12 sheets. What is the probability that the sum of the numbers punctured is odd?"

Send answers to Professor Brown, Dartmouth college, Hanover, N. H. You may be right at that!

While Thinking

COLLEGE

ONCE again the same fault that has prevailed in past years has cropped up again. Although the college is in its permanent buildings, the enrollment has increased and the students as a whole have become more unified, it is still almost impossible to get enough of the right kind of students to fill all student offices.

It seems strange in a college of 3000 that there are not even a small handful of people desirous of serving the college. There are students of executive ability here, but either they aren't aware of it, or no one has been able to find them.

This situation would be bad enough alone, but the lack of candidates for office gives rise to another and even more dangerous situation. It allows any small minority group that is well organized to place their candidates in office by bringing pressure to bear and using steam roller tactics. This is only natural when there are no students running for office. Natural though it may be, it is one of the greatest evils of democracy. To some who have not been long in the college and have come from high schools and colleges where everything was cut and dried, this view may seem preposterous. Unfortunately it is not a figment of the imagination. Once before, the college was run by a small minority group in a haphazard, careless manner with nothing being accomplished from one semester to the next.

This same possibility exists again. The only way the students of the college can be assured of putting the best equipped and most efficient persons in office is to think wisely and refuse to be influenced by high pressure salesmen. Look for the men who have had experience in government, who realize how best to meet the countless problems that arise. Judge candidates on their past record in student activities. If all students were to do this and then proceed to vote for the candidate who is best suited for office, there would be no need to fear that any small minority bloc would gain control.

NATIONAL

CURRENTLY being rumored about Washington, D.C. is the plan to use American ships to convoy supplies to Great Britain.

While we are staunch advocates of all possible aid to Britain short of war, this newest idea, if put into effect would be suicidal. It would result in loss of American life and shipping and would without doubt bring us into the war.

It is only logical to expect the Germans to attack convoys of supplies for England and sink them if they can. This is war and the winner takes all. In wartime neither side takes time out to decide whether to attack a neutral ship. All that matters is that supplies are being sent to the enemy which will enable him to hold out longer or perhaps win the war.

The German attitude is "destroy these supply ships at all costs," and it is only natural.

If the people of the United States are willing to understand this and content to let American ships and lives be lost, then and only then will this plan be feasible.

FOREIGN

IT is interesting to note that the Balkan states which were forced to support Germany, and in return received assurances that their borders would be respected, are being overrun with Nazi troops.

The American press while commenting upon this as a move against Greece and Turkey or possibly Russia, failed to mention that three more small countries, Hungary, Bulgaria and Rumania have become part of Greater Germany.

Ostensibly these countries are merely being used as highways to approach the enemy, but actually another bloodless invasion has occurred and several million more people have become Nazi slaves.

One may say that the Germans will evacuate these countries after they have achieved their purpose, but Adolf Hitler has shown no such soft heartedness with other nations and there is no reason to expect him to begin now. He will take all he can get and three more nations might just as well be added to his score.

Mayor Rossi Spends Day At College

Home Economics and Hotel Division students divided honors in gaining the interest of San Francisco's Mayor Angelo J. Rossi during his visit to the college in December. Pictured above is Betty Ullner of the home economics group demonstrating the art of mixing batter to the mayors particular taste.

Students Win Official Praise

Host to a gathering of college and city officials at a luncheon last December 11, the Hotel and Restaurant Management Division received the congraulations of Mayor Angelo J. Rossi, Superintendent Joseph P. Nourse and college officials upon the excellence of the cuisine and the skill of the student restauranteurs who directed it.

Combining an informal tour of the campus with the luncheon, the mayor and his party were pleased to note the harmonious operation of both organizational and scholastic phases of the college, and expressed their pleasure in the light of the few months since registration and dedication.

Mayor Pleased With Progress

Interviewed by Guardsman reporters, Mayor Rossi was strong in his affirmations of the college's progress and the increased plans for the future, comparing the present buildings and campus with the former site and complicated system of classes which stemmed from Powell Street.

He explained that the true worth of educational institutions can only be apprehended when contrasted with those facilities which have preceded them, and declared that proper focus on the present college can only be had when it is observed with an eye to the past.

"Students here compare the new site with the arrangements which many know preceded them," he commented, "but I've been aware and acquainted with the need of a junior college for the city for more than 20 years, and my satisfaction today is sincere and very well-founded."

Cafeteria Praised

The entire group was unanimous in its praise of the efficiency of the cafeteria system and the terminal system of education which allows students to secure practical training first hand.

The visitors, optimistic in their outlook for the future development of the college, saw the greatest obstacle to the college's growth as already having been removed by the opening of classes on the present site. Expansion is but a matter of time, they agreed, and the realization of the completed college will be of much less duration than the original inauguration of classes in 1935.

A Cappella Choir To Give Program Thursday Evening

In its first choral offering of the new year, the college A Cappella Choir will present a program of seasonal music at the First Methodist Church, 1600 Clay Street, on Thursday evening, January 9, Flossita Badger, college music instructor said this week.

Originally scheduled to present a program of Christmas music before the holidays, the choir was forced to postpone its appearance because of the influenza outbreak last month.

The performance will be augmented by selections played by David Leonard, a student pianist, whose talent is of professional caliber and whose versatility is highly lauded by college music instructors.

Vocal solos will be offered by Betty McKillop, soprano, and the Men's Double Quartet will present several Schubert songs and seasonal carols, accompanied by Ruth Berryesa at the piano.

Students and parents are invited to attend this musical presentation next Thursday evening, Miss Badger said.

Band Instruction May Be Added To Curriculum

Possibility that a band course may be included in the college curricula next semester has been voiced by President Archibald J. Cloud. Final decision on the matter had been deferred preceding vacation but is expected to be revealed later this or next week.

President Cloud was scheduled to confer with Registrar J. Paul Mohr on this and other administrative matters during the Christmas vacation.

"We are interested in introducing into our facilities a plan for instrumental music," President Cloud commented, "and at the first opportunity such a course can be accomplished, a recommendation to that effect will be made."

Should it be found inadvisable to add the band course this spring, it will probably be included in the curriculum the semester following, he said. "I believe we need look for it no farther than next fall; I would like very much to see this done."

Whether or not Madison Devlin, present leader of the band, will be retained as instructor if the course is accepted into the college program, President Gloud said he could not state.

Yearbook

Rampages Faces Abandonment; No Staff, No Sales

Possibility of abandonment of plans for the college annual, Rampages was disclosed today by unofficial sources.

Reason for the proposed abandonment of the yearbook was given as failure to organize the staff early enough in the semester, and lack of provisions for advance sales during this semester.

According to the same sources, there may still be a chance that the yearbook be published if student opinion in favor of it is sufficiently strong. However, such action would necessitate the appointment of a new editor to succeed Mary Frances Malone who resigned last month. A complete staff reorganization is also rumored.

Although plans for Rampages were discussed early this semester, no final appointments or actual organizations were accomplished until the latter part of November, a fact which made production of an annual and compilation of material difficult, it was declared.

Official comment on the rumor was not forthcoming, but it will be made in a future edition of The Guardsman.

Wines, Hamilton, Spencer Lead Next Semester's CAB

Club Advisory Board officers elected for next semester are Burton Wines, president; Helen Hamilton, vice-president, and Jeanne Spencer, secretary.

The new club board leaders were chosen at an election held at the last meeting of the group last year. Wines, as incoming CAB president, automatically becomes member of the Executive Council next semester.

At the last CAB meeting, applications for charter renewal of two previously suspended organizations, the Ice Skating Club and the Block Society, were approved. This completes the list of recognized and approved clubs in the college, according to Bob Ogg, CAB president.

To replace James Hughes, who has left the college to enter military service, Cecil Aggeler has been appointed faculty adviser to the club board, Edwin C. Browne, dean of men, announced.

Elections

Few Seek Student Offices; Applications Taken Until 12 Today; Candidate Rally At 1

Candidates

It is the custom of The Guardsman to furnish the student body with information concerning the past experience and activities of candidates for various offices in the Associated Students, Associated Women Students, and Associated Men Students as released by the election committee. This article may be incomplete because applications for candidacy are still being accepted in Room 155.

Meyers Unopposed

Running unopposed as yet for president of the Associated Students is George Meyers, sophomore student. Meyers, a graduate of Berkeley High School, is a member of the Block SF Society and was one of the stars of this semester's football team until he was declared ineligible. He served on the class elections committee at the beginning of this semester.

Two candidates have presented themselves for the office of vice-president of the Associated Students. Bill Lohsen, sophomore student, is a graduate of University High School in Oakland, and is a member of Omicron Phi Pi; he is the first man ever to run for the vice-presidency. Mary Frances Malone, sophomore student, is a graduate of Galileo High School and lists among her activities the social committee, vice-presidency of the Associated Women Students, feature editor of The Guardsman, Phi Beta Rho, Women's Service Society, chairman of the class elections committee, chairman of the scholastic council, and editor of the annual which she resigned in lieu of her candidacy.

Three Run For Secretary

Running for the office of secretary are three women: Loretta Egan, Virginia Hubbert and Edith Callaghan. Miss Egan came to the college from Presentation Academy and includes among her activities the past chairmanship of the welfare council, the social committee, and Alpha Phi Omega. Miss Hubbert is this semester's AWS president and is active also in the A Cappella Choir, Phi Beta Rho, the class elections committee, and the Executive Council; she is a George Washington High School graduate.

Miss Callaghan is the present secretary of the Associated Women Students and has been active on the social committee, the class elections committee, Phi Beta Rho, and as secretary of the Executive Council.

Allen Yerrick is the only candidate for the office of rally commissioner which was constitutionally provided for in last month's constitutional amendments. Yerrick is a member of Beta Tau, the Spanish Club, and was prominent in intramural athletics this semester.

No Yell Leader

At the time this article was written, there was no candidate for the office of head yell-leader of the Associated Students.

Running for the presidency of the Associated Men Students are Gene Powell and Ogden Wheeler, sopho-

Assembly

Applications for candidacy for officers to be elected next Thursday will be accepted in the Associated Students office, Room 155, until 12 o'clock today, Hugh Waite, chairman of the election committee, announced yesterday.

Candidates will be presented to the student body at a general assembly at 1 o'clock this afternoon on the steps of the science building where previous assemblies have been held, Waite declared. He added that classes will be excused for the assembly.

Only One Presidential Candidate

Reason for prolonging the period in which applications can be made was given as the fact that there is only one candidate for president and rally commissioner, while there is no candidate for the office of yell-leader.

"It only seemed fair to allow organizations or students time in which to propose other candidate as substitutes for those who were declared ineligible on December 13, the date on which applications were supposed to have been in," Waite remarked.

General Election Thursday

A general election will take place next Thursday, January 9, between 9 o'clock and 4 o'clock at the college with two machines in operation. One will be for men students, the other for women, Waite revealed.

Each voter will be required to show his student body card which will then be punched. Waite also disclosed the fact that all voters will be duly registered by members of the election board who will be at the polls at all times.

"Because of the limited number of candidates, it is doubtful if a second election will be needed," Waite said. "However, in the case that such an election is called for, it will be held on January 9. The same system of voting will be used."

Upon the insistence of the Executive Council campaign regulations have been adopted by the election committee in regard to campaigning for any office of the Associated Students, the Associated Men Students, or the Associated Women Students. They include the forbidding of campaigning other than by word of mouth, and prohibit any expense on behalf of a candidate either by him or her or by his or her friends.

"Last semester candidates joined in a written agreement to dispense with elaborate or expensive campaigning, and it is right that the same system prevail this semester," Waite commented.

Voters Cooperation Asked

Waite also requested the complete cooperation of voters on election day in facilitating election procedure by not loitering near the polls.

"There can be no point in lingering near the polls since announcements of the election will be posted as soon as the votes are counted," Waite said. "However, official presentation of the newly elected officers will not be made until the formal installations assembly on January 10."

Other members of the elections board include Dean Edwin C. Browne, Robert Dolman and Robert Ogg.

Sophomores Ready For Opening Event In Gala Week

Formal Saturday To Be Soph Finale

Dancing to the music of Frank Wells orchestra, high sophomores will end their college careers at the semi-annual Soph Formal, Saturday, January 11 at the California Country Club.

Wells orchestra is well known in the bay area and has played at many college functions. His orchestra is composed of 12 pieces and a vocalist and features an electric organ.

Bids for the formal will be limited to 150 and will go on sale next week. "There is a possibility that if the dance receives enough support from the students additional bids will be sold," Alden Thorogood, class president, revealed.

Students desiring bids which are priced at $1.25 per couple should secure them from the bank as soon as possible, Thorogood announced. "Because the attendance is limited by present arrangement to 300 persons, those students intending to go to the dance should reserve bids in advance of their sale."

Students may secure reservations by signing with the secretary at the Associated Students office, Room 155.

Students desiring to rent tuxedos for the dance may secure them from the Rochester Clothing Company at Third and Mission. There is a possibility that a representative from the company will pay a visit to the college to measure students for tuxedos. Probable price will be $2.25. This price is the same as that of last semester and is only given to students of the college.

Voting will take place today immediately following the nominations rally in the short corridor directly outside the Associated Students office, Room 155, chairman Elmer Hubacher said.

Women Banned

By Eve Burkey

College women, reeling from the blow dealt at woman's franchise by the sophomore sweetheart committee's recent decision to ban women from voting in the contest, recovered long enough this week to let fly a small bombshell of their own.

They don't care!

"We," declared the majority of those queried for an opinion, "think it's a good idea!"

While the college men's enthusiasm over the committee's unprecedented step was taken for granted, and the

Rally Wednesday To Be Soph Climax

Highlights of sophomore week as revealed by class president Alden Thorogood and Hugh Waite, special events chairman, are as follows:

Friday, January 3—Election of the sophomore sweetheart.

Wednesday, January 8—High Soph Day. All college rally at the El Rey Theater from 1 p.m. to 3 p.m. No classes will be excused. Surprise entertainment has been planned. Entertainers from radio stations KPO and KGO are expected to appear.

There will be several comedy skits and the first appearance of a negro swing band composed of college men. Frank Wells and his orchestra will be present and the college will hear for the first time a special fight song.

The presentation of the trophy to the soph sweetheart will conclude the rally.

Following the rally a parade on Ocean Avenue to the college will be held. The parade will be led by the sophomore sweetheart in an automobile with the sophomores following.

Following the parade, a dance open to all the students of the college will be held in the women's gymnasium.

Saturday, January 11—Soph Formal at the California Country Club. Bids $1.25 per couple. Dancing from 9 p.m. to 1 a.m.

Bids for the formal may be bought at the college bank, Waite said, and advised that they be purchased early.

• Administration Verifies Postponement Of College Yearbook

Official administration sources last night disclosed that the college yearbook will definitely be abandoned this semester. (See story above)

Plans are being made, however, to incorporate into the college curriculum, next semester, a course in the mechanics of yearbook publishing. It is probable that this course will be taught by Francis J. Colligan of the faculty.

The course will be open to all students interested and these students will form the staff of the yearbook.

• Alden Thorogood May Leave College

Alden Thorogood, president of the high sophomore class and coordinator of student activities, yesterday announced that he may leave college to accept a position with the Albany Police Department. Thorogood will know definitely within a few days, he said.

Plans for Sophomore Week remain unchanged and will be held under the supervision of Hugh Waite, chairman of special events.

• Cancelled Low Soph Dance Indefinitely Postponed

The low sophomore class dance scheduled for December 13, but cancelled because of the flu epidemic will probably not be held this semester, unofficial sources disclosed.

It had previously been planned to hold the dance during Soph Week, but there are no open dates available and it was felt that the dance might conflict with the formal.

There is a possibility that the dance may be held after final examinations are over.

Cafeteria Value Lowered By Unthinking Students

HERE at the college students are fortunate enough to have at their disposal a completely modern cafeteria, fully equipped and operated by a class in restaurant service.

But students in the Hotel and Restaurant Management division are surely not receiving the training which simulates the general public, insofar as the actions of the Associated Students are concerned.

Without any doubt the one sore spot, the one great incongruity of the college setup is the cafeteria, not for itself, but because of the consistently inconsiderate men and women who make use of it; and make use of it for everything from a lunchroom to a rumpus room.

There are, it must be admitted, many students who show at least a semblance of ordinary politeness and consideration, but to be truthful, they are decidedly in the minority.

Bridge games are quite popular this semester, and it is rare indeed when one cannot find several being played in the cafeteria during the noon rush hour. The fact that there are students wandering around carrying trays and looking for a vacant space at some table doesn't even seem to phase these card fanatics.

Then there are also to be found, usually from about 11:30 to 1 p.m., in the cafeteria, a generous sprinkling of brilliant conversationalists, who chat gaily on while those who have a perfect right to ask for their chairs turn to look elsewhere.

Lastly, but of equal importance to the reputation of the college, there are those who seemingly do not know that we have a library which could be used during rush hours for doing class work. They are individuals with terrific powers on concentration who are oblivious to all the disturbances going on about them, and they are even oblivious to common forms of politeness, the observance of which would greatly enhance this institution.

Perhaps there are times when it is perfectly all right to study in the cafeteria; but those times are not at the moments when other are trying to carry on the regular functions of a cafeteria.

With our new buildings and our new location we are now, more than ever, in the public eye, and with such petty and completely uncalled for actions on the part of a great majority of the students we can not help but present a definitely unfavorable picture.

Such a problem is easily solved and corrected. The solution only calls for a little decency on the part of the obvious offenders. —F.C.

The College Hymn . . .

EDITOR'S NOTE: At several recent student assemblies, the general ignorance of the students regarding the college hymn has been rather flagrantly displayed. It is just as important that students learn the hymn as the fight song.

To save future and personal embarrassment for the college, the words to the hymn are printed in the hope that they will be memorized.

San Francisco Junior College Hymn

Alma Mater of our hearts
Blessings be thine ever.
Though we travel distant parts,
Lose thee we will never.
For on mem'ry's sea of years
Thou wilt ever sail.
Here's a toast through shining tears
To thee Hail! Hail!

Alma Mater dear to us
On Balboa's strand
Bind our souls in sacred trust,
Guide us mighty hand.
All through life we'll see thy light,
Thee we'll never fail.
Here's a pledge old Red and White
To thee Hail! Hail!

Impersonally Speaking

(This column is by John Metcalfe)

WE would like to get our hands on the guy that said that this is the beginning of a century of progress. Well even if we don't get our hands on him, it's all right too, because we are small in stature, and probably couldn't reach his chin anyway.

To get back to the point, in our opinion civilization is on the wane, progress is going backward, and we are going to the dogs.

After much effort and endless persuasion, we were enticed out of a nice warm bed the other morning, at the ungodly hour of 10 a.m., to go to what somone calls college. It's the first time we have seen the sun in nearly two months, and as we walked down the street with our dark glasses on, we were taken for Clark Gable and Robert Taylor, by a swarm of beautiful women. Well, maybe they weren't women. On second thought, they were really grammar school kiddies going out on a picnic, but they were beautiful anyway, in a funny sort of way.

After dodging a swarm of autograph hounds, we hopped on the Tenth Avenue bus. We thought our troubles were quite over. But Lo, the poor Indian; our troubles were just starting.

Our parents used to tell us about them when we were children (no remarks), it was known in them days as "Quarente hommes ou huit chevaux" in other words forty men or eight horses.

We saw a seat way in the back, and suddenly there was a terrific lunge, but we were beat out by a beautiful blonde. All the way out to the college we stood up. We put our hands in our pockets, and one obtrusive fellow accused us of picking his pockets. Result: An intensified search for a beefsteak upon arriving at the college, as he was getting off the bus, we sure gave him both barrels. He threatened to come back but he was saved by the door closing, pretty lucky for him.

We are now approaching Forest Hills, we are dying for air, we are suffocating, will we escape unharmed? Will we get there in time for Poli. Sci.? Will we live until the next column?

We are now approaching our desired destination. Only five more miles to the college. The place is packed like bank night in Dublin. We had a lunch. It was once five sandwiches, but it now looks like a Dagwood Special.

As last we are there, we struggle for the door, like rats off a sinking ship, we struggle for the door, with two elderly ladies. Ah, but our athletic training has gotten the better of them. The door opens and like a couple of democrats in '44 we come flying out.

The whole thing adds up to one solution, in the future, we insist that all students be given their private taxi.

DOWN around Atlanta they tell many an anecdote about Warren Aiken Candler, retired Methodist bishop who is credited with "fathering" Enory University. Now in his 80's the venerable bishop once (and only once) tried to drive an automobile. There was an accident and he was injured slightly. Climbing out, he plumped down heavily on a lawn and clarioned to the gathering crowd: "Get me a doctor—and get a veterinarian too. I was a jackass for trying to drive the thing."

The Spectator

THE advent of the new Charlie Chaplin picture, The Great Dictator has aroused more heated debate by the public as to its merits and defects than any picture we can recall during the last few years. There have been two schools of thought on the matter. One contends The Great Dictator to be pure, unadulturated propaganda with the entertainment value of the film practically nil. The other side contends that Mr. Chaplin here has produced a screen masterpiece of satirical splendor that must stand at the top in the annals of motion picture comedies. In our opinion, the picture veers toward neither extreme, but maintains an even course between both.

Naturally, The Great Dictator possesses the elements of propaganda fare for the film advowedly is a satire on a certain pair of European dictators much in the headlines of late. This method of ridiculing with broad, caustic, bitter strokes is definitely propaganda. But Mr. Chaplin disguises his protest against the ruthlessness of warmad tyrants under a soothing succession of comedy scenes of such delightful, inspired humor that until the last few moments when Mr. Chaplin publicly bares his heart in a speech directed straight at the audience, the film presents ironical comedy in its most magnificent form.

Yes, there are faults with The Great Dictator. Far too long, it presents interludes of boring distractions that impede the progress of the plot. And the advanced prices under which the picture is being presented are unnecessary. The Great Dictator is a must-see at popular prices but certainly not a masterpiece deserving the exorbitant prices now being charged.

As usual, Mr. Chaplin has written and directed the story, and his genius is never more evident than in the scene when as Hynkel, dictator of Tomania, he performs a bubble dance with the globe of the world as his bubble. Just as he concludes, the globe bursts into a shattered thing and Hynkel bursts into childish tears. No need here to draw the evident implications.

There are many similar highlights, too many to enumerate. The speech of Hynkel to the vast crowd in which Chaplin utilizes a garbled form of the Germanic tongue is a highlight. And we guarantee you will never see a funnier scene than the one in which Jack Oakie, dictator of Bacteria first meets Hynkel. The screen hits a new high in comedy with this encounter.

Chaplin with a dual role, naturally walks off with most of the honors. He portrays the raging Hynkel as well as the familiar little fellow with the baggy pants and big pants, being here a meek Jewish barber in the Ghetto, eventually to be mistaken for the dictator. However, he is closely pressed for honors by none other than the long missing Jack Oakie who as the pompous, big-chested Bacteria ruler, presents a grand characterization.

The supporting cast is large and excellent. Paulette Goddard, Maurice Moscovich and Reginald Gardiner rate special mention. Production values deserve mention also. The photography, settings, and backgrounds all show why Chaplin took two years to make this picture and spent $2,000,000 to do so. All are tremendously exact in detail.

Yes, we're going to see The Great Dictator again. We liked it.

On The Feminine Side

AS far as we can see, Christmas vacation is a hollow farce, living proof of the adage that "You can't have your cake and eat it too."

We don't know all the students at this college, but most of those whom we know were marked by a forced, strained gaiety toward the end of the late holidays. Sad cases of the We Who Are About To Die spirit translated into its collegiate equivalent of We Who Are About To Take Finals, not that there's much difference. To add to the general undertone of misery there were and are always those carefree individuals who have taken leaves of absence for one reason or another and who seem to spend all their waking hours gloating over their friends still enmeshed in the horror of term papers and anticipated finals. To say nothing of students from other colleges whose dark days are over, too.

With Christmas and New Year's hardly over and flu and floods still all too fresh in our memories, it's hard to turn our mind to the new spring fashions; however, the old Guardsman spirit plus ye editor's none too gentle temper are sufficient inducements to fill at least four copy pages with writing, and the spring campus clothes promise to be plenty to write about.

Prints And Pastels Already

Despite the fact that there is definite irony in the way the stores rush in spring prints and pastels before you break yourself of greeting everyone with "Happy New Year", there is a wide selection of said prints and pastels in the various stores in this city. And by the way, one of the smartest women we saw at church on New Year's Day was wearing a vivid floral print dress under a black fur chubby, which may or may not prove that the local shops have something there.

Nevertheless, we had an almost overwhelming impulse to heave a brick at one of those super-summery windows of one of the downtown stores at the end of last month, as we stood outside in a virtual downpour complete with galoshes, raincoat, umbrella, and an Arizona cough. The little caption about California sunshine just added insult to an over-supply of injury.

However, to return to the point, next spring should show us something new and different in the line of pastel plaids in suits and skirts. Big checks in muted shades are another "must" for campus wear, according to advance notices. We remember being especially struck by one skirt in a soft, soft wool in a plaid of lush green and brown shades beautifically blended. A pair of delicate cashmere twin sweaters in a matching green seemed to have been made for the skirt to produce a wonderful effect.

Looking Into The Crystal Ball

Among the stand-outs that have been featured so far are the pale tweed suits which another of the stores is predicting great things for. They're made of an incredibly soft material in good-sized checks in the classic brown and navy plus whites and in softer shades. One that practically made our mouth water was a skirt plus coat combination in a brown and beige check; the coat sported a trim brown velveteen collar to give it that extra something.

Plain pastels in exciting pinks, blues, golds, and beiges should be unusually popular, if what we have been told is authentic. Green and aqua should come into their own this season, also. A monotone pastel suit is one of those stand-bys that are ideal for street, campus, or sport wear. Start looking around for them now.

Shots At RAMdom . . .

WILLIAM PERSIFLAGE strode into the office the other day with a positively delicious smile wreathed in various places about his face. Of course, in politeness, we asked him to make himself at home and tell us all. Depositing his gum on our desk for future reference he gave forth.

"Yep," he said, "two more breakfasts after tomorrow and I'm off mush for life. With the 84 mush box-tops I'll have, plus 10 cents, I can send for that mush bowl with the picture of Hedy Lamarr on the inside of the dish. Gee, I can't wait!"

The vehemence in that last exclamation was touching.

"But," we queried quietly, "why the mush bowl if you're off mush?"

His sneer of infinite scorn made us cringe.

"Have you ever heard," he sneered again, "of Krinkled Krunkles—The Krunch You Love To Munch?

THE VIGOR OF HIS WORDS had reduced us to a beaten pulp, but we nodded yes.

"Are you blind to the possibilities?" he thundered. "Just imagine, man, a bowl heaped with Krinkled Krunkles, and Hedy Lamarr waiting for you at the bottom! Wow, what a combination, what a breakfast!"

So transported was he that his mind soared skyward to etheral heights. (Just west of Mira Loma Heights).

As soon as he contacted the beam, he came down to give us the name of the mush, we know a harried father who is having trouble shoving Krinkled Krunkles down his son's seven year-old gullet.

"AND THAT ISN'T ALL," Persiflage said. "Two more months and I can tell that Angelic Condensed Milk to go back to the farm where it came from. That slogan of theirs—If It's Good Enough for Our Cows, It's Good Enough for You—bah! But," he said, picking up his neglected gum, "I guess two genuine cow-bells to hang on the rear bumper of my car are worth it."

As he spoke, we admired the key chain Persiflage was wrapping about his forefinger with reckless abandon.

"Not bad, is it?" he said, with a trace of pride in his voice. "And all for one year's subscription to Ruggedity—The Magazine for Real Men."

Just then, Persiflage's fiancee breezed in. Somehow, we didn't think it politic to ask how he met the young lady.

Thus it is that we bid adieu to William Persiflage — the coupon slave.

Oh, incidentally, if any of you use Rolled Rye Mush and really don't want the box-tops, well, we don't want to wait too long for that mush bowl.
